Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of Vinegar Bitters?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of Vinegar Bitters in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim Vinegar Bitters the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. Walker's Vinegar Bitters, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with Vinegar Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, Walker's Vinegar Bitters have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of Walker's Vinegar Bitters occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

FROM THE SOUTH.

Letter Number 2.

TALLEHASSE, FLORIDA,
March 26, 1875.

Dear Courier:—I am stripped to the shirt this morning, in this delightfully warm climate, where flowers bloom all the year round. We had a regular floral reception here last night, and a large hall was beautifully decorated with a thousand variaties of beautiful flowers, besides orange branches full of luscious fruit; banauna stalks with blossoms and partly ripe fruit, plums, and other choice fruits of the tropics. Yesterday it was quite warm; last evening we slept under a blanket. If ever I leave Auburn it will be for Florida or some other point south.

I promised to give a brief account of the political situation south as far as I found it, and I find it can be expressed in a few words. A northern man is just as safe in the south as in any other part of the country, the cry of banditti to the contrary notwithstanding. There may be localities where a loud mouthed northern man, or southern man, for that matter, would get knocked over; but anybody can come into this part of the country, and with due observance of law realize no more trouble than in Indiana. Mr. Rippen, formerly of Warsaw, Ind., stated last night at the reception, that he was never insulted by word or deed, and his intercourse with the people here was most pleasant and agreeable. But when men come down here for office, to speculate upon the necessities of the people, then there is a disgust for them, and as Tom Philips, of Kokomo, said last night, no southerner could possibly have more contempt for such characters than he.

In Louisiana, things are in bad shape. The people are crushed and oppressed, and relief does not seem to be in the near future. No wonder they try to resist this oppression. What would the farmers of De Kalb county do if a lot of carpet-baggers should get possession of the offices there and by extraveganee and fraud plunge the country into debt, and then be compelled to contribute to its payment by an enormous tax, say of five per cent. yearly. This is the condition of things in Louisiana and several other States. A farmer at Vicksburg will rent for ten dollars an acre, but you can buy the same for six dollars, simply because the taxes are so high that it does not pay to own this land. A renter pays no taxes—an owner does. This State is an exception. By the issue of receipt, which pays taxes dollar for dollar, the people are relieved of one-half the burthen of taxation. This script, both State County and School, can be bought for one-half its face, and pays taxes at its full value, thus cutting them right in two.

The first wheat and oats we have seen since we left Tenessee, is growing here in splendid condition. The soil is good, and the face of the country does not seem so low as in other States west. Pine timber seems to predominate. Early vegitables are in market here. I saw a cabbage raised this spring that weighed 25 pounds. I believe hundreds of northern men could make a fortune here. It is a very healthy climate, no epidemics of any kind ever visiting this part of the State. Hundreds come here for their health, and are benefitted.

To-morrow we go to Jacksonville, where we remain until Monday, and thence to Savannah and Charleston.

TOM.

LIKE A CHILD.

BY LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON.

Playing there in the sun,
Chasing the butterflies,
Catching his golden toy,
Holding it fast till it dies;
Singing to match the birds,
Calling the robins at will,
Dancing here and there,
Never a moment still—
Like a child.

Going to school, at last,
Learning to read and write,
Puzzled over his slate,
Busy from morn till night,
Striving to win a prize,
Careless when it is won,
Finding his joy in the strife,
Not in the thing that's done.

Busy in eager trade,
Buying and selling again,
[illegible]
Glad of a transient gain.
Always beginning anew,
Never the long task o'er,
Just as it used to be—
The butterfly before.

Seeking a woman's heart,
Winning it for his own,
Then, too busy for love,
Letting it turn to stone.
Sure of his plighted troth,
What more had a wife to ask
Is he not doing for her
Each day his daily task?

child, to pine and complain!
A child, to grow so pale!
For want of some foolish words
Shall a woman's faith fail?
Words! he said them once—
What need of any thing more?
Does one who has entered a room
Go back and wait at the door?

Baby Mary and Kate
Never can climb his knee—
Motherly arms are open—
"Father is busy, you see.'
Too busy to stop to hear
A babble of broken talk,
To mend the jumping-jack,
Or make the new doll walk.

So busy that when Death comes
He pleads for a little delay,
If not to finish his work,
At least a word to say—
A word to wife and child,
A sentence to tell the truth,
That he loves them now, at the last,
With the passionate heart of youth.

The kisses of Death are cold,
And they turn his lips to stone;
Out of the warm, bright world
The man goes all alone.
Do angels wait for him there
Over the foundless sea?
He goes, as he came, a helpless wight,
To a new world's mystery—
Like a child.

A GIRL'S GOOD SENSE.

"Minnie! Minnie! is my chocolate near ready?"

It was scrupulously neat and dainty in all its appointments, the little parlor where Mrs. Breighton sat, although the carpet was a tissue of darns, the furniture faded, and the hearth rug skillfully eked out by a piece of quite another fabric inserted in the spot most worn. A few flowers, in a slender-throated vase, stood on the antique, claw-legged table, the fender-irons glittered like gold, and the thin muslin curtains, mended here and there, were white as snow; and Mrs. Breighton herself looked like Cinderella's god-mother, in her dress of ancient brocade, best yellow lace, and the rings glittering on her small, shriveled hands.

Eighty years old, and a lady to the last! That was something to be proud of. What though paralysis had robbed her of all use of those daintily-slippered feet—what though the grand house she had entered a bride was now narrowed down to this one room in a second-rate building, where two other families also set up their household altars—she was a lady still, and she could boast that she never had degraded herself to commonplace toil.

"Our means are limited," said old Mrs. Breighton, with the lofty air of a duchess, "but the pension of my son, the Colonel—who, as you may probably remember, was killed on the Florida frontier—is sufficient to maintain myself and my two granddaughters—and we are ladies."

Minnie Breighton presently came in with her little chocolataire on a napkin-covered tray, and slices of toast, exquisitely browned and cut as thin as a wafer.

"I hope you haven't been kept waiting, grandma!" she said.

"My dear"—with an air of mild resignation—"I am accustomed to wait."

"Oh, I'm so sorry! But our fire is out, and I had to run in and borrow the use of Mrs. Tucker's stove to boil the chocolate, and—"

Mrs. Breighton contracted her silvery brow.

"The Breighton's are not a borrowing race, Minnie."

"Shall I get you an egg, grandmamma?"

"No, if the fire is out, my dear."

And Grandmamma Breighton went on with her breakfast, wearing an injured air, while Minnie went back to the other room, where she sat with her twin sister, cogitating.

Anna Breighton was as pretty as Minnie, but in a different style. She was dark, with melting, almond-shaped eyes, and olive skin, and lips like a pomegranate flower, so perfectly shaped, so richly red; while Minnie was tall and slender, and fair as a daisy.

Anna laid down a slip of greasy paper as Minnie entered.

"It's the grocer's bill again, sister. What shall we do?"

Minnie sank into a chair.

"And the gas yesterday, and the landlord not paid, and the purse is empty as Mother Hubbard's cupboard. What shall we do?"

"That's the question," said Anna, reflectively arching her jetty brows. "If we can only keep it from grandmamma."

"We must," retorted Minnie, with a decisive nod. "It would kill her. If we were men, now, Nanny, we could go out and get a job of wood-sawing, or house-painting, or—"

"And why can't we now?"

"Why? Because Pat O'Neil has got all Mrs. Barker's wood to saw, and because we can't climb ladders with paint pots over our shoulders."

"But we can do something else, I suppose. Listen, Minnie—money we must have."

"If we go out on the highways and ask it at the point of the bayonet," interjected Minnie, gravely.

"There's no poverty like genteel poverty," her sister sighed. "But you haven't heard my plan. Mrs. Barker, the laundress in our top story, is sick."

"What then? We have neither wine nor jelly, nor yet crisp bank notes to bestow upon her."

"And she can't keep up to her engagements. There are two Swiss muslin ball dresses, fluted and puffed beautifully, lying in her basket waiting to be done up, at this present moment. Five dollars apiece she has for them."

"Well?"

"I shall do them up."

"Nanny! You?"

"Well, why not? Think what a golden stream of pactolous ten dollars would be in our empty coffers! Ask yourself how on earth you or I could earn ten dollars any other way. And, after all, a Swiss muslin dress is a pretty poetical sort of fabric to wash and iron; and into the bargain, poor Mrs. Barker keeps her customers."

"Oh, Nanny! have you come to that?"

"Now, you look and talk exactly like dear old grandmamma! Don't be a goose, Minnie! Just you invent some story about my promenading in the park, or taking lessons in wax flowers making, to delude her credulous soul, while I go up stairs and coin money."

"But I may help you?"

"By-and-by, perhaps, if my wrists get tired. But now, some one must stay with grandmamma.

* * * * *

"It is very strange," said Miss Georgiette Appleton, "that my dresses haven't come home! Positively, I shall have nothing to wear to-night."

She was lounging before the sea-coal fire, in a blue silk neglige, trimmed with swan down, and a little French tangle of blue ribbons and lace pinned among her yellow tresses, with a pearl-headed javelin, while a novel lay in her lap.

"What an awful case!" observed the brother carelessly. "Where's the amethyst silk?"

"Oh, I wore that to their last reception."

"And the pink crape?"

"I look like an owl in pink. I was a goose ever to buy that silk."

"The Nile green silk with white flounces?"

"Sarah Howard has one just a shade lighter that she'll be sure to wear, and I believe the spiteful thing got it on purpose to kill mine. No, I must have the Swiss muslin with knots of blue corn flowers, and a Roman sash figured with gold. And you'll go around to the laundress, and hurry her up a little, won't you, George? that's a duck of a brother! —and you know perfectly well you've been yawning your jaws off the last three-quarters of an hour."

"Where is it?"

"Only in Mendenhall street—just a pleasant walk. And to give Mrs. Barker a scolding, and ask her if she don't know better than to keep her customers waiting—although, of course, I know you'll do nothing of the sort. Men have no moral courage. There's the address on a card. It'll be such a relief to my mind!"

Maj. George Appleton was an army officer, home on a furlough, and rather at a loss to know what to do with so much extra time. Rich, which was another source of perplexity!—handsome, which wasn't so puzzling!

And so he sauntered along, his hands in his pockets and a cigar balanced between his lips, unconsciously advancing to meet his fate.

Rap! rap! rap! The Major played a tattoo with his knuckles on the door.

"Dear me, what a noise!" said a voice inside. "Come in!"—a little louder.

The Major walked in to confront, not a wrinkled old hag of a washerwoman, in a halo of soap and steam, but a beautiful young lady, dark and brilliant as an Arabian dream, with jetty curls pinned back in a silken cascade at the back of her head, and a pair of fluting scissors in her hand.

Maj. Appleton started back, all his wits momentarily deserting him. It is a curious fact that the more embarrassed one party in a tete-a-tete becomes, the greater is the composure of the other. Annie Breighton should have colored and stuttered at being caught thus, but she didn't.

"What's your business, sir?" she asked, with greatest calmness.

"It's—it's about my sister's gown—Miss Appleton's, you know!"

"Ah!" said Annie. "I hope to have it ready very soon. If you'll wait ten minutes you may carry it home."

And she took a second pair of fluting scissors from the stove, testing its heat by holding it dangerously near her velvet cheek.

Maj. Appleton, not being posted in etiquette and general decorum, saw no harm in carrying home a basket of newly-laundried clothes. So he sat down and waited, while honest Mrs. Baker started from the other room, where she lay upon her bed—a captive to rheumatic pains.

"She's in a hurry, you know," said the Major, twirling his thumbs, and thinking how very pretty the girl was.

"So am I," said Anna, making the fluting scissors glide in and out in a most marvelous manner among the clouds of sunny muslin.

"She wants to wear it," added the Major.

"But I say you—know—you're not a regular washerwoman?"

Anna slightly straightened herself up.

"My father was a Colonel in the regular army. My grandfather was Hyde Breighton, of Breighton Manor, on the Hudson. But we are reduced now, and we need money; and I am not ashamed to work."

"By Jove, you're a trump!" said Maj. Appleton, starting up.

"Much obliged to you," retorted Anna, with sparkling eyes. "Would you mind holding the sash for me—just a second, while I finish this loop?"

And when Minnie came up to see how her sister was getting on, she found her aided and abetted by the Major of cavalry, who was heating the alternate pairs of fluting scissors after a most scientific fashion.

"Dear me," said Miss Appleton, when at last her brother made his appearance, "how long you have been."

"Yes," said the Major, rubbing his hands with an appearance of great satisfaction, "it took us quite a while to finish those last thirteen flounces."

"Us! you don't mean to say that you helped the washerwoman?"

"Yes, I did," said the Major; "and the frocks are down-stairs, and I'm going up for a game of billiards." And as he went he murmured to himself, "I thought all girls were alike, but I believe I've discovered one independent—one at last!"

* * * * *

"Grandmama, I'm going to be married."

"You, Nanny? Why, you are but a child!"

Annie Breighton was kneeling beside her grandmother's chair, and the fairy godmother was stroking her curls with one tremulous white hand, where the antique jewels shone like drops of blood and scintillating sparkles of green fire.

"I'm 18, grandmamma."

"So you are! How time flies! Eighteen years old! But who's the happy man? We see no society worthy of ourselves, Nanny, and—

"I'm sure you will like him, grandmamma. He is coming to pay his respects to you to-night. His name is Major George Appleton. He is in the—the cavalry, and he owns a house on Madison avenue, and—and he loves me, grandmamma."

Nanny held her black-tressed head on the old lady's shoulder as she spoke the last words.

"All natural enough, my dear; but do you love him?"

"Yes, grandmamma."

"And where did you meet him? When were you introduced?"

"I wasn't introduced at all," returned Nanny, with mischievous elves of flame coming and going in her eyes. "I was fluting muslin up in Mrs. Baker's room, when he came in on an errand; and oh! grandmamma, you have always thought it so dreadful to work. But if I hadn't been working I never should have met him. And I love him so much, grandmamma!"

"Well, well," said the old lady rather reluctantly, "things seem to be altered from what they were when I was a girl."

"But you shall live with us always, granny dear, and Minnie, too and we shall be so happy."

And Anna Breighton's tears were tears of perfect joy.

Mrs. Fitch's Diamonds.

One of the most curious pieces of legislation in Congress during the last session was a resolution intended to be doubly favorable in its effect regarding the wedding present of a diamond necklace and earrings from the Khedive of Egypt to General Sherman's daughter. The resolution as it became a law is as follows:

PRIVATE RESOLUTION, No. 1.—JOINT RESOLUTION authorizing Thomas W. Fitch, Engineer of the United States Navy, to accept of a wedding present sent to his wife, Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch, Resolved, &c.: That Thomas W. Fitch, Engineer of the United States Navy, be and is hereby authorized to accept of a wedding present of jewelry sent to his wife, Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch, by the Khedive of Egypt, as a token of his respect.

Approved, February 18, 1875.

The above resolution does not exempt the present from duty, but merely authorizes her husband, who is an officer in the United States service, to accept it. The question arises, What has he to do with it? It was sent to his wife. After this became law it was found that the government was still entitled to the duty, and that was exactly what the resolution was intended to avoid, but the terms were insufficient. The words "free of duty" were suggested after the word "accept," but several Senators said it was unnecessary.

When the defect was known another resolution was offered, and it would have passed, but General Sherman went to the Capitol and protested against it as a rigmarole of foolishness. He said he did not want any resolution passed making the diamonds free of duty. The matter assumes a rather funny shape, because from first to last bungling seems to have followed the present. In the first place it should have been sent direct to the Turkish Minister through our State Department. Then it would have been free of duty. It was sent in care of the Turkish Minister, but some officious Custom-House officer opened the package for exhibition without notifying him.

These diamonds have been subject to so much talk and inspection that almost their exact value is ascertained. Their value is not $400,000, as has been asserted, or anything like it. They are worth $65,000 to $70,000 gold, and the duty on them is about $17,500 (as manufactured jewelry at twenty-five per cent. ad valorem), or more than a year's salary for General Sherman, and a life-long salary for Mr. Fitch.—Washington Letter.

A Valuable Invention.

Any one who has ever been connected with the newspaper business knows how atrociously are written the dispatches for the telegraphic columns of a paper. Nobody but an experienced printer can make them out with any degree of ease, and before being sent to the printer they must first be "fixed up" with great care by the news editor. All this is to be obviated by a simple apparatus called the "Type Writer," to be attached to the ordinary telegraphic mechanism, by means of which the operator not only receives his report, but prints it on large bold type at the same time. A keyboard is played upon, something after the piano fashion, and sheet after sheet is printed off with greater rapidity than it can be written by hand. The invention can be detached, and can be used in printing off business letters, or even in printing editorials. Its uses can be made multitudinous.

While time will certainly render it more perfect, as every invention has from time to time been improved on, even as it now is it works most wonderfully and successfully. Its general introduction will be hailed as a high favor by the press.—Chicago Journal.

THE following incident is related by a writer in the Penn Monthly: A gentleman who fell in with one of our schoolboys offered him "a quarter" if he would tell him the names of all the capitals of Europe. It was quickly done. "Now," said the gentleman, "I will give you another quarter if you will tell me whether they are animals or vegetables." "Animals," was the ready and confident answer. Whereupon, the writer inveighs against the parrot-like drill of many schools both private and public.

IN Columbus, Ohio, a novel method of heating the street cars has been adopted by one company, by means of a fireless stove, as it is called. A small iron box filled with water, and having certain pipes and valves, is placed under the car seat. By means of rubber hose, steam is introduced into this box or stove, and the condensed steam soon heats both water and car. In a trip occupying forty minutes the car retains an agreeable warmth to the end. Then it is reheated for another trip.

The Civil Rights Law.

The charge of Judge Emmons, of the United States Circuit Court, to the grand jury at Memphis, in relation to the Civil Rights bill, will not fail to attract the attention of the country. Judge Emmons is not a Southern man. He has lived all his life in Michigan; and, in the selection of eminent lawyers to be Circuit Judges under the act of 1871, he was appointed because of his high standing and learning as a lawyer. He has never been a Democrat; was originally a Whig; and has been a Republican since the party was established—more than twenty years ago. His circuit includes the States of Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee.

The Civil Rights bill makes it a penal and indictable offense for any District Attorney to fail to prosecute criminally any violation of the law, and the grand jury asked the direction of the court upon this point. Judge Emmons thereupon delivered his charge, in which he declares that a denial to the negro of the full and equal enjoyment of accommodations, advantages, facilities, and privileges, at theaters and inns in Tennessee, is not an offense over which Congress can give the United States courts jurisdiction—that it is a matter within the exclusive control of the State. He said that, until the three recent amendments to the Constitution, the punishment of murder, arson, assault and battery, frauds, injuries to reputation, obstruction to right of attending church, schools, theaters, and forcing the right of being accommodated in inns and by common carriers within the State, were matters not only granted to the general government, but in the Constitution itself expressly reserved to the States. The vast mass of civil and political rights rested entirely under State protection. To this truism there was universal assent then and is now. Have the three amendments so revolutionized the character of the government as to give to Congress the power of regulating the theatres and other places of amusement in Memphis and other cities of the Union? The Judge, after a careful examination of the three amendments, reaches the conclusion that they have in no wise changed the previous exclusive authority of the State over all such matters.

It will be noticed that in his argument Judge Emmons takes substantially the same legal objections to the law that were urged in the Senate by Senator Carpenter, of Wisconsin. This opinion of the court as to the unconstitutionality of the Civil Rights law is conclusive as to any criminal prosecutions under that law in Tennessee. The Judge, however, invited all persons feeling themselves aggrieved under the law to bring their civil actions in the court, so that the question might be carried to the Supreme Court of the United States for review and for final adjudication.—Chicago Tribune.

Risen from the Dead.

The Augusta (Me.) Journal tells this marvelous tale: "We have an event to chronicle that would scarcely be believed were it not authoritatively vouched for by competent witnesses, parties whose testimony cannot well be disputed or set aside. A young man in the town of Vassalboro, in this county, was suffering in the last stages of consumption, the disease which had insidiously and stealthily brought him to the verge of the grave. For several weeks he had been entirely prostrate and unable to speak, even to articulate a syllable. He became so oppressed for breath that he compelled his attendants to raise the windows in his room, put out the fires, and resort to every means to obtain fresh air. One day last week (Thursday, we understand) the young man died. Friendly hands prepared the poor emaciated body for the burial; but just as the attending friends were arranging the remains for the casket, there appeared unmistakable evidences of returning life, in what had seemed to them an inanimate mass of clay. The ear of an attendant was bent down to the side of the dead man, and it was discovered that the heart had begun again its slow and measured palpitations, the pulse throbbed, and the young man arose from the death shrouds, opened his mouth, and spoke in clear and distinct words to those who stood appalled in the death chamber. There was no huskiness in his voice; he appeared lively and active, said he felt not the slightest pain, but, to use his own language, 'I feel just as well as I ever did.' At his request the neighbors were all called in, who crowded the house for hours, declaring that the recovery of the man was equal to any miracle recorded in the Scriptures. He told this startled assemblage of his friends and neighbors that, as he died, all things seemed dark, but only for an instant; his eyes suddenly opened to a new world, the real Heaven which had been so many times in his thoughts and had given him so much comfort in his last weeks of pain and sorrow. He stood upon an eminence which overlooked a vast and beautiful plain; the magnificent plain stretched further than his enlarged vision could penetrate, and he described it in language which, to his mortal auditors, seemed extravagant in the extreme. But the revivified life of the young man was not to continue long. Before night he again resigned himself to death. The body was kept a reasonable length of time, and buried on Sunday last, the funeral being largely attended. We have written out the particulars of this remarkable event substantially as we have heard them, allowing our intelligent readers the privilege of drawing their own inferences."

The Gold Clique.

The operations of the gold speculators in Wall street have lately been investigated by the New York Times, and some light is being thrown on the aims which they seek to accomplish through the medium of the Gold Room, now the scene of their machinations. Up to the present time the clique is said to have purchased about $11,000,000 gold, and withdrawn most of it from the banks, the last statement of the Clearing House showing a decrease of nearly $7,000,000 in the gold averages. Of the gold held by this combination, $5,000,000 is held off the markets, and the balance loaned from day to day at rates varying from 1-64 to ¼ per diem, according to the whims of the leaders of the movement. The combination is said to be receiving the aid of several banks in high standing and of individuals occupying prominent positions in the business community. In importing circles the feeling against the gold speculators is represented as very strong. The leading houses unite in denouncing the action of the gold clique as ruinous to trade in general, not only in dry goods, but in other branches of merchandise. Houses which had arranged their spring importation on a basis of gold at 112 to 113 are now either forced to mark up their goods to the amount of the recent rise, or continue to sell at a loss. Mr. August Belmont expressed the opinion that the gold scarcity could not last long, because if it continued gold could be brought from Europe in sufficient quantities to reduce the demand.

The Revival of Trade.

[From the New York Times.]

There has been rather a long period of depression, though not longer, and certainly not more severe, than we had cause to anticipate as the result of the panic of 1873. For a long period preceding that occurrence, there had been a great outward show of prosperity, but it was hollow and unsubstantial. Since then everything in commercial affairs has been gradually placed on a firmer basis. In private life, people have been economizing, and have brought expenditures to a proper level with their incomes. The country has been steadily increasing in wealth during the past year, and one sign of that is to be seen in the very large amount of government bonds which we have brought back from abroad for domestic investment. The capital invested in our various railroad bonds has also been greatly increased, and the demand for them grows larger every day. Matters, then, are in excellent trim for a good year's business, and when the spring trade fairly opens, we may safely consider that we are entering upon a period of sound and solid prosperity which can only be interrupted by some wholly unlooked-for disaster.

The attempt on the part of certain speculators to force up the price of gold has exercised an unfortunate influence. It was reported on apparently good authority that the Adams Express Company was helping to lock up gold. Our reporters brought us that information and we believe that there can be no doubt as to the fact. This company has lately been playing rather a prominent part before the public, but we venture to say it will not be found a judicious one in the long run. It would be difficult to decide whether it has been more injured by its own acts than by the singular line of defense pursued by its advocates and retainers. When a company of this kind departs from its legitimate sphere of operations it is pretty sure to inflict a serious blow upon itself. The public will not forget that the new postal tax was practically inflicted by and for the benefit of the Adams Express Company; and the public usually manage to resent an injury of this kind. If it now entered—as it did last week—into so unpatriotic and mischievous a plot as that for the creation of a "corner in gold," with the immense risks to trade which that trick necessarily occasions, it would only have itself to thank if it smarted severely for it.

The general feeling is one of confidence and security. The general public are in the humor to spend money more freely than they have done for months past, and that very feeling in itself will bring about an active business. Wholesale dealers know that stocks in the hands of their customers have fallen low, and must soon be replenished. With a little sunshine and warm weather, the dry goods trade, and all departments of business connected with the furnishing of houses, must necessarily receive an active impetus. The "marriage season" is near at hand, and we wish we could prevail on our people to buy "trousseaux" and all such necessities at home rather than abroad. Between "absenteeism" and the custom of importing articles of every-day use from across the Atlantic, our own trade is seriously injured. The business world is now on a good footing, and there is every reason to anticipate a thoroughly prosperous year.

Moody and Sankey.

Scarcely for a hundred years, certainly not during the present century, has England experienced such a popular religious excitement as now prevails there under the labors of the two American revivalists, Moody and Sankey. That country has not been wanting in great preachers, some of whom have developed rare powers as pulpit orators and popular teachers; but none of them since the days of Wesley and Whitefield have produced effects at all comparable to those produced by the two Americans above named. Moody is a native of Massachusetts, but for some time a resident of Chicago, where he was pretty well known as a working member of the Young Men's Christian Association. He is not an ordained preacher, and was never supposed to have any special gifts of oratory, being noted only for his earnest devotion to the work of evangelization and his boldness in proclaiming gospel truth. Mr. Sankey is from Pennsylvania, and does not preach at all, but sings. He fills the intervals of Mr. Moody's talking by singing revival hymns with great earnestness and pathos, accompanying himself on a cabinet organ. Almost from the very beginning their labors abroad have been attended by wonderful results. The great cities of Scotland, like Edinburg and Glasgow, then of Ireland, and now of England, have witnessed a religious excitement far surpassing anything in the memory of those now living. Their fame soon spread throughout the kingdom, and wherever they went great crowds have flocked to hear them. Their congregations, generally numbering many thousands, have embraced all classes of society, and vast numbers of persons have made their first public professions of religion under their ministration. Something less than a fortnight ago they arrived in London, where they are now addressing immense audiences with the usual results. The stolid English people are stirred as they have rarely been stirred before, and the movement has already become one of the most remarkable of modern times.—Indianapolis Journal.

WITH the ancient Egyptians the female sex were held in high esteem. On the tombstones the wife is always mentioned as the supreme mistress of the house, and the sons often bore the names of their mothers instead of their fathers. There was, in fact, no important right which the women did not share with the man.

THE ORIGIN OF IRELAND.

"With due condescension, I'll call your attention to what I shall mention of Erin so green,
And, without hesitation, I'll show how that nation became of creation the gem and the queen.

"'Twas early one morning, without any warning, that Venus was born in the beautiful bay,
And by the same token, and sure 'twas provoking, her pinions were soaking, and wouldn't give play.

"Old Neptune, who knew her, began to pursue her, in order to woo her—the wicked old Jew—
And almost had caught her atop of the water—great Jupiter's daughter!—which never would do.

"But Jove, the great janius, looked down and saw Vanus and Neptune so heinous pursuing her wild,
And he spoke out in thunder, he'd rend him asunder—and sure 'twas no wonder—for tazing his child.

"A star that was [illegible] caught up [illegible] laying and down let it snap;
It fell quick as winking on Neptune a-sinking, and gave him, I'm thinking, a bit of a rap.

"That star it was dryland, both lowland and highland, and formed a sweet island, the land of my birth;
Thus plain is the story that, sent down from glory, old Erin asthore is the gem of the earth!

"Upon Erin nately, jumped Vanus so stately, but fainted [illegible] lately so hard she was pressed;
Which much did bewilder, but, ere it had killed her, her father distilled her a drop of the best.

"That sup was victorious; it made her feel glorious—little uproarious—I fear it might prove;
So how can ye blame us that Ireland's so famous for drinking and beauty, for fighting and love?"

Pith and Point.

THE cup that does not cheer—Hiccup.

TO RAISE corn—Destroy the crowcuses.

A COLOR never seen—"Blind man's buff."

WAISTING sweetness—Putting your arm about a pretty woman.

NO TRUE woman will ever marry a man so tall that she cannot reach his hair.

A STATISTICIAN estimates that courtships average three tons of coal each.

THE "Centennial State" has been suggested as a name for Colorado, which will enter the Union in 1876.

"She is a perfect Amazon," remarked a pupil of his teacher to a companion. "Yes," said the other, who was better versed in geography than history, "I noticed she had an awful big mouth."

THE title "reverend," it is pointed out in a London paper, in no way declares a man to be a clergyman. Two hundred and fifty years ago the English Masters in Chancery were styled reverend.

A WESTERN paper says: "It is time to stop talking about the 'softening and elevating influence of woman.' A man in this county, with four wives, has just been sent to the penitentiary for horse-stealing."

"NEURALGIA" is the charming name of a charming young lady in Florida. Her mother found it on a medicine bottle and was captivated with its sweetness. So some young man is doomed to suffer neuralgia in the heart.

SOLDIERS of the garrison at Marseilles are having a mania for suicides. The commander has issued a general order for all soldiers who take their own lives to be buried with disgrace in the night time, as guilty of an act of cowardice.

BY a singular oversight in revising the laws of Illinois the man who steals $15 cannot be punished. If he steals less he goes to the county jail; if more, to the penitentiary; but for stealing the precise sum named no penalty is provided. This compels the Illinois thieves to be very exact.

THIS is how an old saw was rendered by a clergyman: "You may kindly guide the prancing steed to the crystal brook which babbles down the hillside in the summer sun, but you cannot coerce him to stoop and slake his thirst in the silvery stream if he be not willing to accept your proffered kindness."

AS THE names of at least two new Senators, Christiancy and Kernan, are frequently mispronounced, it may be well to say that the name of the former is pronounced with the accent on the first syllable, and that it is a word of three and not of four syllables. Mr. Kernan's name is pronounced with the accent on the first syllable and not on the second.

A PHILADELPHIA woman inquires, through the medium of the Press: "Where are the poor who seek employment? Vainly I have searched for a fortnight for a woman willing to go eighteen miles into the country, at high wages, to live in a comfortable, warm kitchen, with plenty of food and kind treatment, and cook for a small family, doing her duty as a faithful servant."

THE following letter was received at the Executive mansion the other day:

Ulysses S. Grant—Hon. Sir:
As I'm only a farmer's daughter,
And you are a President grand,
It's more than likely we never shall meet
This side of "The Happy Land."
So I wish to make a little request,
'Tis sent with a girlish laugh;
Will you please to favor me, kind sir,
With the President's autograph?

Pork-Packing.

Col. Maxwell, Superintendent of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, has prepared an annual report of the pork-packing in the West, of which the following are some of the most important figures:

	1874-5.	1873-4.
Hogs packed	5,537,124	5,383,810
Average gross weight, lbs.	262.47	268.27

Mess pork, brls.	504,843	423,587
Prime mess, brls.	46,852	47,221
Clear, brls.	15,640	7,596
Rump, brls.	14,656	17,839

The number of hogs packed by States was as follows:

	1874-5.	1873-4.

Ohio	871,736	897,607

Wisconsin	280,734	320,891

The above are all the States that packed more than 60,000 hogs. The aggregate cost of the hogs packed this year was $96,749,250, against $63,370,339 last year. The average cost per cwt. was $6.65, against $4.38 last year.

The summer packing between March 1 and Nov. 1, 1874, shows a total of 1,117,659 hogs. The average gross weight was 207 pounds.

Greeley, Bennett, and Raymond.

Near the crest of a heavily-wooded declivity in Greenwood Cemetery is a plain marble shaft bearing the name of Henry J. Raymond. The tomb, although perfectly isolated, is yet within six rods of the most frequented part of the grounds. The lot was chosen by Mr. Raymond, and the selection is characteristic of the man. In public life he sought a place near the front, but not at the actual front, as was best illustrated by the great work of his life, the founding of the Times. In that he aimed at a middle line between the mental eccentricity of the Tribune and the moral eccentricity of the Herald, at the time of those great newspapers' greatest greatness, marking out for the Times a mean between the two extremes.

The costly tomb of James Gordon Bennett, conspicuously fronting one of the busiest avenues in the cemetery, is such a sepulcher in such a spot as Mr. Bennett might have been expected to choose, although the lot is believed to have been selected and the marbles chiseled under the direction of Mrs. Bennett. It was the day-dream of his life that by keeping the Herald in the vortex of New York business life, and by enlivening it with a wit that his successors have not understood, much less emulated, he might make it the journal of the future; and he did not hesitate to say as much. In a pecuniary sense he was prodigiously successful.

Horace Greeley's tomb appropriately looks out from under the abundant boughs of Locust Hill upon the setting sun. The mound is temporarily marked by a modest slab that will tell who sleeps beneath it until his fellow-craftsmen erect their contemplated bronze memorial. The Greeley tomb, too, is typical of its occupant's former aspirations. It is seemingly sequestered and actually remote from the ornate mausoleums that New York fashion has reared in the City of the Dead; but it is visible at a great distance beyond the cemetery's boundaries, and the monument which the farmer-editor must have expected at the hands of his numerous admirers, will be a noteworthy feature of the landscape to be admired by men of all nations as they sail in and out of our picturesque harbor.—New York Sun.

Men of Letters.

Tasso's conversation was neither gay nor brilliant. Dante was either taciturn or satirical. Butler was sullen or biting. Gray seldom talked or smiled. Hogarth and Smith were very absent-minded in company. Milton was very unsociable and even irritable when pressed into conversation. Kirwan, though copious and eloquent in public addresses, was meager and dull in colloquial discourse. Virgil was heavy in conversation. LaFontaine appeared heavy, coarse and stupid; he could not speak and describe what he had just seen; but then he was the model of poetry. Chaucer's silence was more agreeable than his conversation. Dryden's conversation was dry and dull, his humor saturnine and reserved. Corneille, in conversation, was so insipid that he never failed in wearying; he did not even speak correctly that language of which he was such a master. Ben Johnson used to sit silent in company and suck his wines and their humors. Southey was stiff, sedate, and wrapped up in asceticism. Addison was good company with his intimate friends, but in mixed company he preserved his dignity by a stiff and reserved silence. Fox, in conversation, never flagged; his animation and variety were inexhaustible. Dr. Bentley was loquacious, as was also Grotius. Goldsmith "wrote like an angel, and talked like poor Poll." Burke was entertaining, enthusiastic, and interesting in conversation. Curran was a convivial deity. Leigh Hunt was "like a pleasant stream" in conversation. Carlyle doubts, objects, and constantly demurs.

Horrible Parricide.

The Shreveport (La.) Times gives the particulars of a most shocking parricide which was recently enacted in De Soto Parish, in that State: "Samuel Sanford, 77 years old, his son John Sanford, aged 30 years, and a son-in-law of the old man, named Ben Pittman, while on their way from Shelby county, Texas, to Shreveport, stopped on the side of the road to eat dinner. As the old man was sitting against a tree his son stepped up to him, drew his six-shooter, and remarking, "I have got you where I have wanted you for four years," fired two shots into his father's side or breast. The latter sprang up, mounted his horse and galloped off, when the son pursued him, and, overtaking him, presented his pistol at his head. The old man begged him not to shoot again, saying: "You have killed me, and I wish to say something before I die," or something to that effect. The son then rode off and made his escape into Texas. At last accounts Mr. Sanford was alive, but not expected to recover. The act was prompted by a desire on the part of the son to get the property of the father."

Preparing for Specie Payment.

The Secretary of the Treasury, says the N. Y. Herald special, in accordance with the law to prepare for the resumption of specie payments, is making large purchases of silver, over 2,000,000 ounces having been bought at San Francisco and Carson City, and a part of the purchase will be transferred to New York and Philadelphia for refining. Silver is lower to-day than it has been for forty years, a cable telegram to the Treasury Department from London quoting it at 57½ per English ounce. By the 15th of August all the mints will be running at full capacity in coining silver for the redemption of fractional currency. The dies for the new twenty-cent pieces will be ready for use by the middle of August. The Treasury Department anticipates large shipments of gold from Europe.

CREMATION.—The council of the Cremation Society have, we learn, made a tangible progress toward accomplishing their object. A piece of ground has been secured for the erection of a building in which the religious rites can be performed prior to the incinerating process. The estimated cost of the proposed building is £3,500 towards which £1,000 has been promised. Further subscriptions are requested.—British Medical Journal.

English Taught in One Lesson.

At many of the New York restaurants a very heavy "French style" is put on; the waiters are mostly Frenchmen, and the bill of fare is often prin'ed in French. A correspondent writes that, venturing out early one morning in New York, he dropped into the first restaurant he came to, which happened to be one of the kind spoken of.

Carelessly giving an order, the waiter, bringing his shoulders up under his ears, responded:

"Je ne parlè pas anglais, M'sieur," and the hungry man had to point out his wants on the bill of fare, with which, after considerable delay, he was served.

Just here entered another customer, a tall, powerful fellow, evidently fresh from the Western prairies, who, settling himself into a chair, ordered "beef-steak, fried potatoes, hot bread, a cup of coffee."

To him the grinning Frenchman repeated the same formula:

"Je ne parle pas anglais, M'sieur."

The Western man looked at him for a moment, and then rising from his seat, like the opening of a big jackknife with a stiff spring, he slowly ejaculated, as he clenched a wicked-looking fist:

"Beefsteak—fried potatoes—hot bread—cup of coffee, quick."

The effect on the waiter was magical. There never was a man served more promptly with just what he ordered for breakfast than the hungry Westerner.

A Phase of the Nineteenth Century.

The Presbyterian Review prints the following figures, and presents them as representing a phase of the nineteenth century. It is one not very satisfactory or encouraging to look upon:

"The government statistics for 1871, may well cause every honorable man to hang his head with shame, and may well fill every patriot's heart with alarm. They are as follows. Let them be pondered by every lover of his country:

Salary of all ministers of the gospel.....$	6,000,000
Cost of dogs..........................	10,000,000
Support of criminals..................	12,000,000
Fees of litigation....................	35,000,000
Cost of tobacco and cigars............	210,000,000
Importation of liquors................	50,000,000
Support of grog shops.................	1,000,000,000
Whole cost of liquor..................	2,000,000,000

"And these are the facts in this 'enlightened' nineteenth century and in this United States! One might infer from them that we are fast becoming, if not already, a nation of drunkards. And then consider this country's estimate of the gospel ministry, the ministers of all denominations costing a sum less by millions than the very dogs of the land!"

Biting the Dust.

The phrase "biting the dust" appears to be something more than a figure of speech. Mr. Kinglake, in his last volume of the "History of the Crimean War," says: "It would seem that this muscular action is apt to occur when a man has been arrested by death in the act of strenuous bodily exertion; and no doubt an artilleryman, while hotly engaged, and vehemently serving his gun, must in general be much harder at work than an ordinary infantry soldier busied with his firelock. In ancient times a large proportion of the slain were killed in the act of exerting their strength to the utmost, and then it was that "biting the dust" became almost an equivalent for being killed in battle. However hotly engaged, a modern infantry soldier does not commonly exert, while halted, any great amount of physical strength, and the instances in which he literally "bites the dust" are comparatively rare."

A Useful Inventor.

Mr. James Kirkham, of Milwaukee, has, according to the News of that city, invented a machine for ditching, digging sewers, dredging, etc,, which in theory is excellent. The machine rests on a large frame, under which are small wheels. A belt passing up and down a perpendicular shaft is fitted with claws or picks to loosen the dirt, which falls into a large scoop and is elevated to the top and carried away; the whole affair operating on precisely the same plan as that upon which grain is elevated. It is to be run by steam power. For ditching in ordinary soil or sand, or for deepening or widening channels, it promises to be admirable.

SIX MILLIONS.—About two years ago, DR. J. WALKER, an old and prominent physician of California, discovered, by actual experience upon his own system, a medicine which may honestly be termed "a boon to suffering humanity." Being a combination of herbalistic extracts, pungent and sour to the taste, and yet possessed of gentle stimulative characteristics—although entirely free from alcohol—he named it VINEGAR BITTERS, and despite the prejudice existing among his profession, against all patented medicines, he determined to brave the jeers of his brother practitioners, and give to suffering humanity the benefit of his accidental discovery. He did so, and the benefits from its use became known. The demand increased, and immense quantities were sold, at a merely nominal price. Its merit is told in the fact that "in two years over SIX MILLIONS of bottles have been sold;" and still the demand increases. Surely such a man should be ranked among the benefactors of the human race. 29

A RAT STORY.—At a farm near Bloomfield, Pa., two rats, an old gray matron of the corn-crib and her offspring, had been caught together in a common box-trap. Through a crack the pair could be seen together within, loving enough till the farm dog was brought to the mouth of the trap. As soon as the mother rat scented the dog she seemed immediately to divine the approaching fate, and, giving a terrible squeal, she caught the little rat by the neck and bit him sharply, causing almost instant death. The trap was opened an instant after, and the old rat, which had killed her offspring rather than have it murdered by the dog, quietly submitted to her fate.

THE conspicuous triumph of Messrs. George Steck & Co., of New York, at the Vienna World's Fair in 1873, at which their pianos obtained the highest award—the only gold medal—has begun to yield them substantial fruits. The increased popularity of the Steck instruments is noticeable not only in New York, where their excellence has long been acknowledged, but throughout the country, and more especially in those communities that lay special claim to a cultivated musical taste.—New York Independent.

Iron and Hardware.

S. D. KIMBARK, successor to Kimbark Bros. & Co., who is perhaps most widely and generally related to the iron and heavy hardware trade, and who is regarded as a general western authority in matters and statistics pertaining to that interest, when interviewed by a Chicago Tribune reporter recently, candidly referred to the depression in the outside manufacturing industry as the most conspicuous feature in the records of the year, but reasoned in a way to apply effects on a national rather than a local scale. The business of the great house on Michigan avenue of which Mr Kimbark is the head, dating back a quarter of a century, entering somewhat largely into the history of the commerce of the city, has attained a stability and uniformity by simple magnitude which would naturally prevent its being affected to any noticeable degree by the ordinary vicissitudes of the markets. It is claimed that to the operations of this house is due the acquisition of considerable of the original territory of trade now constituting the common ground of the commerce of Chicago including the Salt Lake district, and remoter fields to the West and South which were traversed by its agents, and made accessory to the business of the city, long before any buffalo or Indian, or other native of those fertile but unchristian lands had ever been scared by the whistle of a locomotive. And when it is remembered that for twenty years the house has constituted a sort of steady centre of distribution of iron and hardware supplies for manufacturers, wagon-makers, blacksmiths, and merchants throughout the entire dominion of Western commerce, with 3,000 permanent names on the books of the firm, and sales aggregating as high as $2,000,000 a year, it is reasonable to suppose that it would require something more than the temporary depression in the manufacturing industry to perceptibly affect the uniform volume and course of business. The establishment itself is one of the mercantile curiosities and solid attractions of the city, a centre of very great interest to intelligent visitors generally, as well as to a special community of mechanics, manufacturers and dealers,—and may be properly designated as a perpetual industrial exposition of iron, steel, nails, carriage and heavy hardware, blacksmiths' outfits, and wagon wood material, each classified department and every broad floor of the lofty building affording a display in enormous bulk more calculated to surprise and interest the imagination of a wagon-maker, iron mechanic or dealer than a world's fair.

THERE is no risk in buying a Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organ. These instruments are known to be the best of their class in the world. But if the opinion of a dealer be asked he will frequently recommend some other, for the simple reason that he can get larger commissions for selling inferior instruments.

Pimples, Eruptions, Rough Skin.

The system being put under the influence of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for a few weeks, the skin becomes smooth, clear, soft, and velvety, and being illuminated with the glow of perfect health from within, true beauty stands forth in all its glory. The effects of all medicines which operate upon the system through the medium of the blood are necessarily somewhat slow, no matter how good the remedy employed. While one to three bottles clear the skin of pimples, blotches, eruptions, yellow spots, comedones, or "grubs," a dozen may possibly be required to cure some cases where the system is rotten with scrofulous or virulent blood poisons. The cure of all these diseases, however, from the common pimple to the worst scrofula, is, with the use of this potent agent, only a matter of time. Sold by dealers in medicines.

COVERED WITH ERUPTIONS—CURED.

CLAVERACK, Columbia Co., N. Y.

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—I am sixty years of age, and have been afflicted with Salt Rheum in the worst form for a great many years, until, accidentally, I saw one of your books, which described my case exactly. I bought your Golden Medical Discovery and took two bottles and a half, and was entirely cured. From my shoulders to my hands I was entirely covered with eruptions, also on face and body. I was likewise afflicted with Rheumatism, so that I walked with great difficulty, and that is entirely cured. May God spare you a long life to remain a blessing to mankind. With untold gratitude.

MRS. A. W. WILLIAMS.

BRONCHITIS, OR CHRONIC SORE THROAT.—It is attended with irritation of the bronchial tubes, which convey the air we breathe into the lungs. This irritation produces sore throat, hoarseness, coughing, and sometimes spitting of matter streaked with blood. If it is neglected it will extend down to the lungs, and settle into confirmed Consumption. Allen's Lung Balsam will be found a most valuable remedy for curing this disease, and prevent its running into Consumption. For sale by all medicine dealers.

DR. A. JOHNSON, one of the most successful practitioners of his time, invented what is now called Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. The great success of this article in the cure of Bronchitis, and all diseases of throat and lungs, will make the name of Johnson not less favorably, if less widely, known than that of Louis Napoleon.

VINEGAR BITTERS PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

AUBURN, INDIANA, APRIL 8, 1875.

☞The Indianapolis Sentinel states that the officials of the Southern Prison peremptori'y refuse to send itemized accounts of their expenditures to the Auditor of State before drawing their money. The Auditor of State should peremptorily decline to draw their warrants until they send him itemized accounts of their expenditures The officials of the Southern Prison are not square men, and they show it by their actions.

☞The Oil City (Pa.) Derrick of Wednesday says: "Mrs. Gilmore, who resides near Camberry, gave birth to four children last week, two boys and two girls. The father of this numerous progeny is Charles Gilmore, who met with the unfortunate accident last 4th of July, which resulted in the loss of both arms. The mother is doing quite well, and is able to attend to the wants of her two pair of twins. All the children are plump and well developed."

☞If reports are true there is not so much encouragment to go to the Black Hills country now as there was six months ago. The golden stories that reaches us from that locality may not be entirely authentic, besides a band of second Captain Jacks are on the war path and promise to give the adventurers a warm reception, while on the other hand, the Government will take prompt steps to expell all intruders, and destory their "traps." Boys don't go just get, unless you are tired of wearing your scalp, and long to be on 'tother shore.

☞Of all the witnesses that have been examined in the Beecher Tilton case, the defendant is the most deliberate and calm, as well as the most animated, in relation to the facts testified to. He denies emphatically all statements introduced by the prosecution indicating his guilt, and swears that he believed Tilton was an adulterer, and an unbeliever; that he had no domestic happiness to ruin, and no business prospects to blast. It is predicted that the manner in giving his testimony will have a magnetic and winning effect upon the jury. His pulpit acting manifests itself on the witness stand; at one time his language is strong and emphatic, at another almost inaudable. Sometimes his countenance is radiant with smiles, then again he folds his arms across his breast and turns his eyes heavenward while gushing tears roll down his cheeks. Mr. Beecher's letters in his own hand writting which cannot be denied, in connection with the testimony of Mr. Moulton, Mr. Richards, a father of Mrs. Tilton, and Mrs. Tilton's nurse, will bear heavy on the Dear Father, but it is expected he will be equal to the emergency. He proclaims a positive denial of their testimony, and his letters are explained as the ebullitions of a sensitive mind, weighed down by sorrow and contrition for a great wrong done to a friend in advising his wife to leave him. When the witness smiles the delegation from Plymouth Church smiles; and when the witness sheds tears, the delegation shed tears; while the jurors look careworn and preplexed, knowing that these volumes of conflicting testimony must be passed upon by them, and then verdict criticised by the whole civilized world. But the most trying and perplexing situation in this great trial is that of the presiding Judge. Scarcely an hour passes but some question is presented and argued pro and con, by this array of legal acumen, for his decision; but the presiding judge seems to be the man for the occasion, his decisions are all prompt and impartial. Mr. Beecher, evidence in regard to the reason why Mrs. Tilton made the charge, will be the subject of severe comment by the lawyers. He swears that he called upon Mrs. Tilton for the purpose of getting a retraction of the accusation she made against him, and that she said she could not help it, but being pressed by this eminent divine for some written statement that would vindicate his conduct, she said, O Mr. Beecher, I was wearied and weakened by sickness, and under the assurance that it would remove all difficulties between me and my husband. I made statements that were not true, and would willingly take them back if I could do so without injury to my husband. Being assured by Mr. Beecher that she could, she gave him a writing denying any and all improper solicitations on the part of Mr. Beecher. We will leave the comments on such testimony to the lawyers.

We Crow for Connecticut as the Press Crowed for New Hampshire---only a Little More so.

Where is the Man that Fired the Guns in Honor of the Louisiana Usurpation.

The Democracy Triumphant in Connecticut, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus and Many other Places.

After the New Hampshire election the Press brought out its banta, notwithstanding the Democrats made a gain of one congressman in that State We bring out our thoroughbred to show the Press where the genuine crowing business comes in. From the latest returns Ingersoll, Democrat, is elected Governor of Connecticut by an increased majority and every congressional district Democratic except one. Cincinnati hoops up 4000 Democratic majority, Cleveland and Columbus followed in its ranks, and stand by the party of the people. Another Louisiana affair, and civil rights bill would have denounced the Radicals out at once, instead of this fearfully lingering death. Already the business prospects of the country are improving because of the fact that the Democracy is rapidly gaining power. The people wants a change.

Text of County Stationery Law.

The following is the full text of an act, with an emergency clause attached to authorize the county commissioners of the several counties of this State to purchase the books, stationery, and other articles for the several county officers, and for the conduct of public business, defining penalties and prescribing punishment for violation of the provisions of this act by said commissioners, and by other persons therein named:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Indiana, that the county commissioners of the respective counties in this State, shall be the agents of their counties for the purchase of all stationery for conducting the business of the county officers, circuit and inferior courts of the State of Indiana.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of each county officer using articles purchased at the expense of the county to make known, under oath, at the December term of the County Commissioner's Court, the probable amount and quality of books, stationery and other articles necessary for conducting the business of his office for one year.

SEC. 3 The county commissioners shall, after an examination of such statement, order the purchase of all or any part of the articles set forth in such statement, if they believe they are necessary for the use of the county and also, all articles that should be paid for by a general tax.

SEC. 4. The county commissioners after deciding upon the amount and kind of articles they should purchase, shall give notice in any manner they deem proper for at least ten days, that they will receive bids for furnishing the supplies demanded, and that they will give the contract for furnishing them to the lowest responsible bidder, reserving the right to reject all bids.

SEC. 5. If any necessity should exist in their judgment, for the purchase of any one or more articles before the time of the annual statements of the county officers, or if the supply should become exhausted at any time between such annual statements of the county officers the commissioners may purchase a sufficient amount of such articles as may be necessary to last until the next annual meeting as aforsaid, for making annual contract for official supplies at the lowest possible price.

SEC. 6. If at any time any county officer should purchase any article for the use of his office without the consent of the county commissioners, it shall be optional with the commissioners to pay or refuse payment of such bills as they may think right, and such decision shall be final.

SEC. 7 Should any county commissiorner engage in speculating off his county by charging his county more than the articles cost, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not exceeding five hundred dollars for each offense, and if any county officer including county commissioners shall be guilty of receiving any present or precentage on articles purchased from one firm engaged in the business of furnishing the counties with books and stationery, or from any agent of such firm, derectly or indirectly, or if any such firm or its agent should offer any present or precentage to any county officer in consideration of his influence of obtaining orders or contracts for boooks or stationery, such officer, or firm, or agent shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be liable to a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five hundred dollars.

NO MIDDLE MEN with us; this is the secret of our immense trade. We buy at first hands and sell direct to the consumer; hence, we save our customers the profits of the speculator, jobber and wholesale merchants. These profits amount to from 10 to 20 per cent. Our customers get the benefit of them. Take Teas, for instance, the profits on that article are so great that the price is often doubled before it reaches the consumer. Every time it changes hands there is 10 to 20c. per pound added to it. This, of course, the consumer has to pay. Of course the retailer will endeavor to persuade you that his Teas are werth the money, that they cost him so and so. Well, this is all true but the trouble is he has paid too much in the first place and can't help himself. He purchases from the wholesale grocer, and the wholesale grocer has to add his 20c All these extra profits our customers get the benefit of, and it is just the same as Coffees, Sugars Spices, Canned Goods, Oysters, &c., as on Teas. No Middle Men with us. They would starve to death if they had to live on the profits they make of us.

Wines and Liquors.

For my part I don't approve of any one purchasing them that can do without them, but it is an admitted fact that there is more money used in the United States for Liquors than for Flour, and for the benefit of those who wish to indulge in the luxury, we will guarantee them a saving of at least 50c on the dollar, and for the sick and invalid our wines and old '76 whiskey cannot be beat.

The foundation for a new house is commenced on South Main street, in the center of the main road. The street will be closed at this point and have a bee-line to the Eel River Depot.

The fool-killer on Thursday last drove some of our citizens out of town that we were perfectly willing to part with, who left undoubtedly with the impression that sweet Auburn was not so lovely after all.

Large quantities of wheat are still being held by the farmers of this county, in the hope of obtaining better prices. Buyers are of opinion that no material rise can reasonably be calculated upon.

While at New Orleans we had the pleasure of meeting Mr. and Mrs. John W. Dawsen, of Fort Wayne, Mr. D. is there for the benefit of his health. He is rapidly improving, and the climate there is doing him good.

One of the town boys attended a party in the country the other night, and was very much smitten with the charms of a young lady whom he met there. He says that her greatest charm is, she wore more than any lady of his acquaintance.

The Spink plow coulter is attracting a good deal of attention from our farmers. It enables one to plow through old stubble corn stocks, straw, etc., without choking the plow. It has been used in the county, and given excellent satisfaction. Manufactured and for sale in Auburn.

In several places throughout the State the merchants are forming protective "unions" by which they can act with mutual assistance. Heretofore merchants have been almost the only class of business men whose rule towards each other was that of a general warfare.

Several fellows from Hicksville were here on a bruise last Monday, and done some great blowing about the billiard game. The "boss" of the brigade would do first rate to play for a peanut, but he ought to be entirely sober to undertake such a game. Oh, where, oh where, h-ic, is s-he. S-ing.

The late rigorous winter has caused many good ladies to vow that they 'will never, no never, try to keep another house plant through the winter.' But next winter they will have twice as many to nurse as they had this winter. Just wait and see if they don't.

The house commonly known as the "Pike Hole" conducted by Ed Burnes, was bombarded last week in a tip-top style. The siding and windows were all broken and smashed, so that only new ones will fill their place. The "boarders" and Ed have gone "where the wood bine twineth."

Errata.—In our mention last week of the U. B. Church dedication at Corunna, one or two errors inadvertently crept into the notice. In giving the amount donated the types made us say $947 where we meant to say $1,947, the result of the donation. Also in the name of officiating clergyman, Bishop Weaver in place of Strong.

A joint discussion is now going on at Cedar Creek, between Rev. Blaney, of Kendallville, and Rev. Branch, of Michigan on the all important subject: "Is man unconscious after death, and before resurrection." Mr. Branch is an Adventist, and affirms; while Blaney, a Campbellite is on the other side.

Notice—Elder Cyrus Mendenhall, of Wilmington, Delaware, will hold religious service at Ensley's hall next Sabbath afternoon at 3 o'clock, also in the evening at 7:30. On all fools' day in an eastern city, some wag sent a note to all the clergymen, inviting them to be present at the U. S. Hotel, to unite a couple in marriage. Each one receiving a note went to the hotel at the appointed hour. Some fifteen met nearly at the same time, and by their united wisdom concluded they had been fooled.

Sometimes mechanics and working-men are unable to procure work because people who have work to do cannot afford to pay the price asked. During dull seasons it is often better to work for low wages than earn nothing at all. Several instances have come under our observation where men refused to work because they could not get summer's wages in winter time.

Welcome Spring, etherial mildness, welcome! Welcome even mud and slush; even the street-corner loafers, who squirt tobacco juice on the sidewalks and make insulting remarks in regard to lady pedestrians; welcome musquitoes and fleas, or even potato bugs and grasshoppers; anything, in fact, so that we are relieved from such fearfully frigid temperature as we have endured for the past three months.

Last Saturday a fellow pretty well "slued" commenced performing some wonderful feats with a huge cur, in front of Davenport's Drug store. Two gentlemen were together in a wagon and here is where the show began. They soon attracted the attention of everybody, and had quite a crowd around the wagon, when the Marshal thought they "better stop a leetle," and sent them home rejoicing.

Butler, April 8th, 1875.

After observing the people out on parade on a "sunshiny Sunday" we come to the conclusion that the cry of hard times is all a sham. It is simply impossible for people to be in straightened circumstances, or to use a common expression "hard up" who carry a small fortune on their backs. The truth is, wealth, affluence and elegance abounds on every hand. Only one thing is necessary now to make us happy, and that is a prompt discharge of liabilities, and a less going on "tick."

To the Ladies.—We have just received a full and complete stock of Spring and Summer goods to which your attention is called. We have the beautiful side lace Gaiter made in Detroit which we would like to have you call and see before purchasing elsewhere as we know it will please you. S. W. Sprott & Son

Temperance Lecture.

There will be a grand temperance lecture delivered at the M. E. Church of Auburn, on Friday and Saturday evenings, 9th and 10th inst., by the Hon. Josephus Cheaney, who has been lecturing in Great Britain and Ireland, for the past six or seven years. He has recently returned to America, and is now lecturing through this State. Mr. Cheaney is well known as an orator and able advocate of the temperance cause. We hope all will turn out, as he has only to be heard to be appreciated.

Hon. A. P. Edgerton of Fort Wayne, favored our sanctum with a visit last Tuesday, while in attendance at the railroad meeting here. Mr. E looks unusually healthy and happy for an old man, and we account for it only by attributing it to his sound democracy, which we believe was unusually sound a year ago.

At the meeting of the directors of the Baltimore Railroad, at the Swineford House yesterday, the following officers were elected for the present year:

Directors.—Wm. Keyser, Baltimore; W. C. Quincy, Columbus; George R. Dennis, Frederick City; John K. Cowen, Baltimore; A. P. Edgerton, Fort Wayne, Ind.; John Gardiner, Norwalk, Ohio; David Lee, Zanesville, Ohio.

Officers.—W. C. Quincy, President; William Wing, Secretary; Wm. H. Ijams, Treasurer; James L. Randolph, Chief Engineer.

To the Editor of The Courier.

Concerning Legal Texts.

For the compliment bestowed upon the writer in the last Waterloo Press, we thank the editor for nothing. The same to one of his henchmen, who probably sent forward the lying dispatch that appeared in a Fort Wayne two-penny daily. Presuming that Baxter, the white livered lantern-jawed galoot, who runs the one-horse newspaper concern at Waterloo, never indulges in the "rosy," (?) we remark, that inasmuch as there is no law upon record punishing idiots, we need not hang out the signal light of danger as a warning to the Waterloo radical newspaper clown for certain slips upon the well beaten path; which, for the sake of "auld lang syne," shall be nameless.

Joe Loveland.

"Way down upon the Swanee ribber," far, far away," is an old song familiar to all. Well, we were down on "dat ribber" and our experience does not accord with the inspired writer of poesy. We looked for the "old folks," but nary "nig" was to be seen. The old plantation seemed to be covered with a vast forest of pine. Within two miles of this celebrated stream a mis-placed switch threw our special train of three cars from the track, and gave us such a bumping as to forever stamp the location upon our memory. One car was badly smashed, however but one of our party was hurt, Mrs. Prunk, of Indianapolis, and she not dangerously. In the midnight gloom we kindled a fire of pine knots, and after everybody had thoroughly recovered from the fright, a wag struck up "way down upon the Swanee ribber," etc., which was very appropriate under the circumstances.

From Suffering Kansas.

Myers' Valley, Kansas,
March 28th, 1875.

Friend Davis and friends of Auburn:

I am glad to inform you that we received your check for $25.50, which I got cashed without any discount. I am very thankful to you for your kindness, and may God bless you in all of your undertakings. It relieved me very much indeed. I received the box of pork in good condition. It is the nicest and sweetest pork I have tasted since I left Auburn. I thank all of you for what you have done. You don't know how much good it has done me; it is a big gift, and one duly appreciated. I am thankful to the Auburn Courier for what it has done for me. I would like that paper very much if I was able to pay for it. I bought seven bushels of corn and oats for my horses. It is the first grain they have had since last November. Also six bushels of wheat for seed. Our fall wheat is killed by being so dry. We have had no rain since last October. I will not sow as many oats as I would like to as I can't get the seed. I am glad to hear that Auburn is growing. I am sorry that I left there.

That Jail Location.

We desire to offer our simple protest against the location of the new jail on the Court yard, and in doing so we have not the least word of disrespect to express against our County Commissioners. In the first place jails are not built now-a-days on public squares, and it is out of all taste to encumber a small square, like ours, with another large building with no other building but the Court House, the yard could be beautified and arranged so as to be an attractive feature in the county. In the next place there are better locations for this new edifice than the court yard offers. Two squares north is a site which for drainage would be far superior to the public square, and we regard this as the most important consideration in the erection of this building. The additional expense of this site would be more than made up in the beauty and general appearance of the grounds now owned by the county. We are in favor of the greatest economy. But the people of this county certainly ought to be credited with as much taste in her public improvements as our neighbors around us. To say that the citizens outside of Auburn do not care where it is located, is not a compliment to their tastes and intelligence. There is a certain pride evinced by all in the make up of these public features. We hope DeKalb county will not be behind the general tastes of her neighbors and that the Commissioners will reconsider the matter and locate it at a proper place.

The Sunny South.

Of all the States we visited during our southern trip, none pleased us so much as Florida. Its genial climate, its productive soil, its wealth of tropical and semi-tropical fruits, vast pine forests, certainly make it one of the most attractive portions of the south. And if we were to locate the center of attraction in that State, Tallahassee would be our choice. True, Jacksonville seems to be the great center of attraction for visitors, but that point is at present more accessible, and many people imagine that when they see Jacksonville they have seen Florida. Tallahassee is not seen by one-tenth of the people going south, being off the usual route and without ample communication to show off her advantages. The St. John's river at Jacksonville is the chief attraction, and is a most beautiful stream, excelling the famous Hudson, but land is pretty well advanced in price in this locality. The country is somewhat flat and the surface is covered with a white sand that is much more plentiful than useful. At Tallahassee the land is much more rolling and undulating, while the soil for the most part is of a rich blackish loam, and very productive, even with bad cultivation. The country here has at one time been well improved, but a want of labor during the last few years gives it the appearance of a semi-wild condition. Yet this long rest ought to be considered an advantage, though the rude style of cultivation has never severely taxed its resources. The principal timber is pine, live oak, magnolia, etc., the former predominating. We saw thousands of acres of pine from fifteen to thirty inches thro' and as high as sixty feet without a limb. Lake Jackson is five miles north of the city, is twelve miles long and three miles wide, and well supplied with fish. It could be made a fine resort, as it is a most beautiful sheet of water. The city of Tallahassee contains a population of over 4,000, has some handsome residences, but is not what it should be for the capitol of the State. The business community seem to lack enterprise, at least to a northerner, and the place does not put on that lively appearance that it should. But the farming community is not what it should be. It needs the willing hand of labor, the push and drive ahead that we northerners are conceited enough to think we possess, to bring it up to that standard of prosperity that it merits. This is why we think there is a good chance for live, wide-awake people here to do well in this garden spot of the south. The negro as a general thing is indolent, unreliable, and don't take to work with the alacrity that a fish does to water, and the white man does not fully appreciate it in all its bearings either. The planter is dispirited, without ambition, and has not the means to cultivate the land he possesses. They are anxious and willing to sell at a moderate price. Good lands can be bought near the city with improvements at from $6 to $10 per acre. Cotton, corn, potatoes, are the staple products, while fruits and vegitables are cultivated in endless variety, and with but little labor. The capitol has its schools, churches, and other institutions, and needs but a little business life to make it a most beautiful city. The profusion of flowers at this season of the year is wonderful. Even the forests are filled with many varieties, and fences overrun with trailing vines, that make the air fragrant with sweet perfume of the numerous flowers they bear. But we cannot tell about this wonderful country in a little space.—We won't have room and will give a more extended account of our observations in our next. To leave here when everything is ice-bound, and in a few days enjoy the verdure, the flowers, the beauty of summer sounds more like a story of enchantment, but sometimes truth is stranger than fiction.

That Editorial Excursion.

We are not much on the grumble, never was and don't want to be. But this shall not prevent us from expressing our opinion as to the late editorial excursion south. In the first place, the resolution passed by the State Association, that none but bona fide editors would be permitted to join the excursion was disregarded by the manager. Some papers we notice slur those who were not editors for accompanying the excursion. We do not; we compliment them on their good taste. Editors missed a good thing, these parties gained it. The manager permitted them to go and we have no word of abuse for them. Indeed, they were gentlemen and ladies as respectable as any editor and if there is to be any abuse let it go where it belongs.

In the next place, the excursion was badly managed. At many points on the line, there was no notice or knowledge of our coming, and consequently a party of ninety had to put up with the preparations usual for a few travelers. Sleeping car accommodations were sometimes lacking because of our carelessness to notify the agent in time. The management of an excursion does not all take place before said excursion starts. It requires an executive ability afterwards of no ordinary degree.

Socially, there was not that cordiality among all the members of the party that should be observed. There was a little coterie from Indianapolis, and one or two other places, which seemed to keep aloof from the rest of the party, perhaps for fear of contamination. They regarded themselves as the upper-crust of the party and they were not editors either. It was a bad failure all the way through and disgusted all well bred and intelligent members of the party. Otherwise the excursion was a success.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

The Delaware Legislature has enacted a law looking to an evasion of the Civil Rights law. It provides that hotelkeepers, railroad companies, steamboat owners and others may provide separate accommodations for any class of persons who may be obnoxious to other customers or passengers.

The entire business portion of the village of Ticonderoga, N. Y., was recently destroyed by fire. [illegible] Serious mining troubles are reported in the Lehigh region of Pennsylvania.

A bill has been introduced in the New York Legislature providing for the extra compensation of jurors where the trial of a cause is protracted beyond sixty days. It is intended to apply to the Tilton Beecher jury.

THE WEST.

Two small parties have already left Yankton for the Black Hills.

United States Commissioner Hoyne, of Chicago, in a case brought before him the other day, for violation of the Civil Rights law, decided that a restaurant was not an inn. The Commissioner acted on the advice of United States Judge Blodgett.... James Lick, the San Francisco millionaire, has filed a revocation of the trust-deed executed last July, conveying his property to trustees for various benevolent purposes. He states that he has now regained his health, and intends to give his personal attention to the execution of his designs.

A sad casualty is reported from Parker's Prairie, Minn., on the Northern Pacific railroad. The house of a farmer named Colson caught fire, and the flames spread so rapidly that in a moment the night-clothes of the father, mother and five children were on fire. Colson finally dashed out of a window and rescued his family, but in a sad condition. Then they all dragged themselves to the nearest neighbor's, a mile distant, barefooted and naked, leaving blood-tracks of their progress on the snow all the way. The father and two children have since died of their injuries, and it is thought the mother and remaining son cannot long survive.... Something of a sensation was created in Chicago, the other day, by the sentencing of W. F. Storey, editor of the Times, to the county jail for ten days, for contempt of court. He was released, however, after an incarceration of some ten hours, Judge McAllister, of the Illinois Supreme Court, having granted a supersedeas in the case, based upon the decision of that court to the effect that contempt of court is a bailable offense.

The grand jury of St. Louis county, in a recent report, declare that their county jail buildings, the Four Courts, completed three years ago, at a cost of $1,000,000, are in danger of tumbling down.... George Reynolds, a Mormon, has been tried and convicted of polygamy at Salt Lake City.

THE SOUTH.

There has been another raid across the Rio Grande into Texas.... Gen. Augur has taken command at New Orleans.

Startling information has been received at Washington to the effect that the yellow fever has made its appearance at the Gulf ports unusually early, and is rapidly spreading. The naval vessels at Key West are in quarantine, and the fort garrison will be at once withdrawn out of the reach of the dangerous epidemic.... Reports from New Orleans confirm the recent reports of Mexican outrages.... A dispatch from New Orleans states that the General Appropriation bill, approved by the Governor and published, has been tampered with. The changes made in the original appropriations show a decrease in several items of over $137,000, and an increase in other items of $11,400. Efforts are being made to discover and punish the parties guilty of making the alterations.

Pete McCartney, George Rankin, Mike Rogers, Joe Rittenhouse and John Hall, the notorious counterfeiters who some time ago escaped from the St. Louis jail, have been recaptured in Texas.

POLITICAL.

The Republican State Convention of Rhode Island has nominated Henry Lippett for Governor and Henry T. Sissons for Lieutenant-Governor.

At a mass meeting in London, said to number 100,000, the release of the Tichborne claimant was demanded..... A passport to Spain has been denied to Montpensier by the French government, on the ground that it would establish a precedent by which Isabella might return to Madrid, which is undesirable.

WASHINGTON.

The Attorney-General has decided that the President has no power to fill the place lately occupied by Judge Durell in Louisiana, therefore the office will be vacant until the next session of Congress.... The Secretary of the Interior has appointed Walter P. Jenney geologist for the exploration of the Black Hills country.... Attorney-General Williams decides that an Indian charged with murder cannot be tried by a military commission.... It was unanimously decided in Cabinet meeting, the other day, not to re-open the case of Fitz John Porter.

After the 1st of next May mutilated currency will be redeemed according to rules which were formerly in existence but afterward abolished. Money will be redeemed according to the proportion remaining of the bill.

The Court of Claims has decided against all claimants to the Arkansas Hot Springs, and in favor of the government.... The Supreme Court of the United States has passed upon the question of woman's right to the ballot, and decided that the State has the right and power to settle for itself whether the women within its border shall or shall not vote. .... Treasurer Spinner has sent in his resignation, to take effect in July. John C. New, of Indianapolis will be his successor.... Loren Blodgett, who had charge of the Customs Division of the Treasury Department, has resigned.

A. C. Barstow, of Rhode Island, has been appointed a member of the Indian Peace Commission.... The Secretary of the United States Treasury has directed the Treasurer to withdraw from the available currency balances of the Treasury $1,488,000 in legal-tenders, and that they be canceled and destroyed.

It turns out that fully two-thirds of the persons who were invited to join the excursion party to Mexico declined, alleging that it had the appearance of being gotten up in the interest of some unnamed scheme.... Secretary Belknap, in reply to a telegram from Gov. Coke, of Texas, asking for protection against the raids of Mexicans, says that immediate steps will be taken to protect the people of Texas on the Mexican frontier.

It is claimed by reports received from Texas that the late outrages on the border were committed by Texans in disguise..... Hon. N. B. Judd, of Chicago, it is stated, will be made an Associate-Judge of the Court of Claims, to succeed Judge Peck, of Chicago.

THE TILTON-BEECHER TRIAL.

Fifty-eighth Day.—Ex-District Attorney John Winslow, of Brooklyn, was examined in order to show Gen. Tracy's relation to the scandal, and his testimony was of no importance. A number of witnesses were then put upon the stand to prove an alibi in the matter of Mrs. Moulton's story that Beecher had made the declaration of a determination to commit suicide to her on June 2, 1873. Several witnesses swore positively that Beecher was not in Brooklyn on that day.

Fifty-ninth Day.—Horace B. Claflin's examination was continued, and he gave the history of the origin and construction of the tripartite covenant. His testimony went to prove that Tilton extorted a settlement and cash from Bowen by means of threats of publication, and that it was agreed that all papers in the case should be destroyed after the settlement. Charles Storrs, a Brooklyn merchant, who acted for Tilton, confirmed the narrative of Claflin. Storrs' testimony was to the effect that Tilton never directly charged adultery, but that when Elizabeth left him he swore he would crush both her and Beecher.

Sixtieth Day.—Mrs. Mary F. Perkins, sister of Mr. Beecher, testified that she lived in Beecher's house one winter, while Mrs. Beecher was in Florida, but did not see Mrs. Tilton there. James Redpath, of the lecture lyceum, related how he got the "True Story" from Tilton, copied most of it, and returned it. The copy was put in evidence. On cross-examination this witness said the charge in the "True Story" was improper proposals.

Sixty-first Day.—The great event of the trial occurred to-day, when the defendant took the stand to tell his own story of the scandal. Mr. Beecher refused to take the oath on the Bible, declaring that he had conscientious scruples against that form of oath, and a simple affirmation was accepted by Judge Neilson as sufficient. He then proceeded with his story, commencing at the very beginning, even at the date of his birth, and gave a minute history of his career from childhood up to the point where the scandal begins. He had scarcely touched upon the merits of the chief issue involved when the court adjourned.

GENERAL.

It is stated from Washington that the main object of the Senatorial Mexican excursion party is to see if the graves of American soldiers killed in the Mexican war are properly cared for.... A band of Mexican outlaws recently made a dash across the Rio Grande near Corpus Christi, Texas, robbed several stores and houses, and took a large number of American prisoners, among them Judge Gilpin, formerly member of the Legislature, and two women. They compelled the captives to walk in front of them till they were exhausted, and then mounted them on bare-back horses, and hurried them off. They robbed and burned the Postoffice at Nueces, and robbed and took prisoner one mail-rider. There is considerable indignation at Washington over the affair, and it is given out that immediate steps will be taken for dealing summarily with these Mexican raiders. Those best conversant with affairs apprehend that a general border war will ensue, in which event the invasion of Mexico by our armed citizens, in pursuit of robbers, is not among the improbabilities.

The three Eastern trunk lines, the Michigan Central, Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, and Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago, have reduced the fare to Eastern points. The following are the new rates compared with the old ones:

	New rate.	Old rate.
Chicago to Boston	$20	$27
Chicago to New York	15	22
Chicago to Philadelphia	12	20
Chicago to Baltimore	9	19
Chicago to Washington	9	19

The rate to Boston by way of Albany over the Michigan Central and the Lake Shore roads is $19, instead of $20.

A dispatch from Berlin says that it is anticipated that the old laws forbidding intercourse between the Pope and Catholic clergy in Prussia, except through the government, will be re-enacted, and that measures will be introduced wholly suspending Papal authority in Prussia until the Pope abandons his pretension to cancel the laws of the kingdom.... Paraguay has suspended the payment of interest on her national debt, and the foreign representatives have protested. The situation is described as serious.

The grain markets have attracted more than the usual amount of attention from speculators, and an active business was reported. The wheat and corn markets have been the chief centers of attraction, and trading was mainly in these grains. The tendency of values has been to a higher range, and a marked advance was established. The bull element seemed to have the control of the market, the "balance of power" being in their hands. They were ably assisted in their efforts to force prices to a higher range by the favorable advices from the East, and the general favorable surroundings of the markets. The receipts of all kinds of grain were light, while moderate shipments were reported. The grain now in store is mainly owned by large and financially strong operators, who are holding for purposes best known to themselves. Shorts are therefore alarmed at the outlook, and were eager in their efforts to provide for their outstanding contracts. Wheat advanced ¼@⅜c for futures, with an advance of about 2c on cash. Corn advanced 2c on cash, 3½c on May, and 1¾c on the April option. The oat market was quiet but higher, advancing about 1½c on the options and 2c on cash. The stock in store has been considerably reduced, and holders were indifferent about selling. Rye was quiet, but at the same time a firm feeling prevailed, and prices were a shade higher. For several days there was no reported inspection into store, and holders in consequence were firmer in their views. Barley was quiet and rather unsettled. The offerings of the various grades were not large. Although somewhat in excess of the demand, a weak feeling was developed.

PROVISIONS.

The past week was one of unusual activity in this market. The demand was principally of a speculative character and the business transacted consisted chiefly of transfers from one month to another. The advices received from other markets were generally of a favorable tenor and calculated to inspire considerable firmness among holders. Prices were firm and the fluctuations were quite severe. The market closed at $19.95@20.00 for cash mess pork; $19.95@19.97½ seller April, and $20.25@20.30 seller May. Sweet pickled hams closed at 11@12c for 15 lbs. avera e, Cash lard nominal at $13.90 per 100 lbs.

Freaks of Fashion.

A fashion writer says the latest style of ladies' glove comes up to the funny-bone.

The New York hats are said to remind the beholder of a Long Branch hotel—all piazza and bar.

Chamois gloves are quite fashionable for the ladies. They are of all colors and have from two to ten buttons. They are odd and stylish, and when soiled can be used to clean jewelry.

Thread lace will be used very much as a trimming, where it can be afforded, headed by fine, delicate passementerie, and there is still a decided leaning toward yak and guipure.

Jet trimmings, though by no means so elaborate and showy as those of last season, still continue in vogue for the ornaments of sacks, sleeveless jackets and wraps of various kinds.

Almost all the flounces on the underskirts of costumes that have been received the past week are from twelve to eighteen inches wide, shirred at the top, the shirrings forming a series of quite abrupt puffs.

Plited sashes are something new. The plaits are small and stitched down on either side, the sash hanging down in two long ends behind; without loop or bow, and thus doing away with the back overskirt to apron front.

For outside garments for spring wear little definite is known yet, though there is a tendency toward talmas, dolmans and other mantle-shaped wraps in place of the sacks and jackets that have so long held such a place in the feminine esteem.

The English waterproof cloth comes now not only in blues, purple and grays, but in nearly all the leading clean plaids from the shepherd's up. The style of making follows very closely on the Ulster overcoat that the gentlemen have seemed to find so comfortable this past winter; they are very long and have a belt in the back which fastens loosely in front, and have also a cape which is usually thrown back over one shoulder in a careless, jaunty fashion; usually the right one, leaving the arm free to hold the umbrella.

The obituary of the polonaise is not yet to be written. Certainly not while so many are being imported still. There is an intermediate time between winter garb and spring fineries that must be filled by something, and nothing has yet been found that so well answers the purpose as the black cashmere or drap d'ete polonaises. They are made more stylishly and prettily than ever, with the Marguerite or Gabrielle back, closed tablier fronts, trimmed as the regular aprons are, with silk bows or jabots, and close, smooth-fitting sides, drawn tightly over the hips. Silk and fringe are the most used for trimming these garments.

The Postage Outrage.

The doubling of the rate of postage on all third-class matter, including all transient newspapers, one of the last acts of the last Congress, is one of the most scandalous pieces of legislation, of which Congress is always capable in the delirium of dying. The Amendment by which this was effected substituted "ounce" for "two ounces," in section —— of the acts of ——, and of course nobody took occasion to see what the precise effect of it might be. The amendment was only intended to double the rate of postage on the parcels of merchandise with which the mails are now loaded, but the language of the amended law applied to the whole third class of mailable matter. It is charitable, at least, to suppose that it was a mistake, but we believe, intended or not, it is a great outrage on the public, and a great scandal for the Postoffice Department and the postal committees, without whose sanction the amendment would not have been adopted. The burden of the increase of postage does not fall on newspaper publishers, but on that large class of persons of small means to whom their friends send their own newspapers, after they are read, or exchange their own papers with other friends, in a similar way. These practices are quite common, and a postage of one cent enables many people in this way to have papers or to exchange papers who would otherwise have to go without, or be confined to those for which they themselves subscribed. The government has derived a great and paying revenue from this source, which will be greatly diminished, we should think, under the new and almost prohibitive rates. In many cases the postage will cost more than the papers themselves, and, in the case of the Republican, it is nearly as cheap to subscribe for the daily or weekly and to get them first hand, postage free, as to remail them, and, considering the bother, a good deal cheaper.—Springfield Republican.

Poisoned by Artificial Flowers.

One branch of industry in which children are employed is technically known as grass work. It consists in fastening small glass beads or "dew drops" to the artificial grass, and so simple is the work that mere infants can help at it. The master of a ragged school in a densely populated district of London found that when a particular kind of artificial flower was in fashion the young children neglected to attend school. He told James Greenwood, who wrote an article which appeared in the London Telegraph some time ago: "You may always know a grass hand if he has been at work any time, from the appearance of his hair. You will find the front part of it—that which is most exposed, as the head is bent over the work—to be of a different color from the rest. If the child's hair is light-colored, the path in front, just where the parting commences, will be changed to a dull yellow; if the hair is naturally dark the patch will be rusty, almost of the color called carroty. If they work long and hard at the grass the hair will fall out." The threading of the beads on blades and leaves of grass, and the subsequent shaking to see that all is right, dislodge particles of the arsenical green, which poisons the air and tells its tale upon the poor children. —Scribner for April.

The commission appointed to examine M. Lessep's scheme for a railway from Russia to Asia have pronounced it impracticable, and indeed hardly worthy of consideration.

Insulting Italians.

Charles Warren Stoddard writes from Venice: "How the Italians do enjoy insulting the servants of the public! Only the other night a ballet was put on at the Fenice wherein an admirable artist but a rather homely woman made her first appearance in Venice. There was much excitement in the house in consequence of a predisposition on the part of some present to prevent the reappearance of the lady in question. It seems that certain members of the press had demanded of her favors that lose their value as soon as granted, and upon being indignantly repulsed they resolved to ruin the engagement of the dancer. Her entrance was the signal for a most disgraceful uproar, that was continued to the very close of the long ballet. The lady probably never danced so well before as she danced that night. Stung with the insults of the baser members of the audience she surpassed herself. From our seats in the orchestra we saw the tears streaming down her face, and to her the hour must have been one of exquisite agony. Three times she fainted behind the scenes, but recovered in season to renew her efforts to please with a grace and spirit I have never seen surpassed. Inasmuch as the ballet was continued to the close, and she had not positively been hissed from the stage, the manager could not break his engagement with her. She appeared on the second night, and the miserable wretches who were so noisome on the evening previous having exhausted themselves, her success was unqualified, and she is now dancing before delighted and more appreciative audiences."

A Bad Lot.

[Proceedings of the Chicago City Council.]

Ald. White was surprised that a North-side man should oppose a West-side movement which would be of great advantage to the North side. He thought the Aldermen wanted to put up some job on the city.

Ald. Schaffner—You stop that or I'll box your ears, you dirty vagabond. If you dare to impugn my views again, I will box your ears.

Ald. White—You will have a good time doing it—a bigger time than you ever had before.

Ald. Schaffner—I believe an apology is due to the Council, not to the gentleman from the Eleventh, for the language I have made use of. I hope the President will not allow him to indulge in his personalities in this Council. He is the only man in the Council who has the impudence, audacity, and ill-breeding to attack and impugn the motives of other Aldermen.

President Dixon—I hope the Alderman himself will not indulge in personalities.

Ald. White—I am ready to come on to this floor with my breeding and education. I never was cashiered for anything, and if the coat fits the Alderman he can wear it. I would not apologize to this Council for anything I had said.

Ald. Schaffner—You are not gentleman enough.

Ald. White—I am gentleman enough for you, any time.

Ald. Hildreth suggested that they should all be in training by next Monday night.

Freddy's Prayer.

A bright-eyed boy of four years was saying his prayers the other night to his mother, and, with his hands folded and eyes closed, he sweetly said:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take.
God bless papa, mamma, and—"

He stopped all at once, opening his eyes, and exclaimed:

"Mother, mother, what shall I say if I have been a bad boy?"

"You should not stop to ask questions, my son, while you are saying your prayers," replied his mother.

"But, mother, I have been bad; what shall I say?"

"Ask God to forgive you; but you should say your prayers all through when you begin, without stopping."

His question was answered; he reverently folded his hands, and, closing his eyes, continued:

"And will God forgive me for killing a hoptoad with a big stick, and throwing it down a big hole? Amen."

Brain Exhaustion.

An eminent physician discourses, at much length and very acutely, the subject of brain exhaustion, so common at the present day. After describing the leading symptoms, such as loss of memory, depression of spirits, increased or lessened sleepiness, unusual irritability, epileptiform condition of the nerves, and sometimes transitory coma, he argues against urging the patient to eat heartily, believing that such a practice tends to develop the disease; he equally opposes the training diet system, as generally starving the nerve tissues by excluding hydrocarbons from food; nor should the patient be urged to work more than is natural under the circumstances, nor to rest from head work—in many cases cerebral exhaustion being intensified by the brain lying fallow; if there is undue sleeplessness, the head should lie low on the pillow, and if undue sleepiness, it should be kept high.

Was Germany Benefited by her Victory?

The Courrier Des Etats Unis quotes a statement from a German, in answer to the question, "Has the thousand millions dollars indemnity which France paid to Germany been a benefit to the latter?" to this effect: It has not diminished the debt nor decreased the taxes of Germany. On the contrary, he shows that the Prussian debt has increased since the war in the amount of $132,000,000, and that the taxes are higher now than before or during the war, and that the German Minister of France has recently asked Parliament to authorize a new loan with which to meet the current expenses of the government. It seems that the great indemnity fund has been spent in pensions, medals, strengthening fortifications, building railroads, increasing the navy, and what has not been squandered has been divided between the German States.

A Georgian near Atlanta cultivates a 20,000 acre farm. He raises corn and cotton, employes about 800 laborers who are tenants of the premises. Keeps a physician who assesses three dollars a head for his service, and a gospel man who charges a like amount. Body and soul are thus kept well together, and the mammoth farm is both a profit and a blessing.

Hair can be turned blonde, or in other words, killed, by washing in a very weak solution of soda twice a day. We happen to know that two of the leading belles of New York society owe their much admired golden tresses to this simple recipe. A piece of soda about as big as a small hickory nut to a quart or so of water is the right proportion. Less soda gives the hair a reddish tone. We do not advise, however, any such interference with nature.

Regal Finery.

Mrs. Hooper sends this interesting bit of news from Paris to the Philadelphia Press: "The Grand Duchess Marie of Russia has recently made a marvelous purchase, in the shape of a bedroom garniture of point d'Alencon lace, which was originally manufactured for Marie Antoinette. The approach of the revolution prevented the unfortunate queen from becoming its possessor. It was afterward bought by Napoleon I. as a bridal present for Marie Louise, and was again sold after the Hundred Days. After many vicissitudes this regal piece of finery has at last found its way into royal hands once more. It comprises a set of curtains, a counterpane, and six pillow-covers. The lace is as fine as the finest flounce ever worn by a royal bride, and the pattern represents baskets, wreaths, and clusters of roses and lilies in high relief in the delicate net which forms the background of that most splendid of all modern lace, the point d'Alencon. The price paid for this marvelous garniture was only 25,000 francs ($5,000). It has never been used, none of its possessors since the days of Marie Louise having ventured to display such a piece of royal extravagance, therefore it may be considered as a great bargain for its new purchaser. It was suggested that it might one day return to France in the possession of a new Empress, the Grand Duchess Marie being the lady to whose daughter it was recently reported that the Prince Imperial was to be betrothed. But the Grand Duchess unfortunately has no daughter, which is a slight impediment to the projected union."

The Philadelphia Inquirer thinks that relief from hard times would be found in the opening of the Black Hills country. It would start the country upon a new career of prosperity. A State which fails to have a wonderful oldest inhabitant die occasionally is not much of a State. California, therefore, steps to the front with her oldest. An inter-State oratorical contest is to come off at the capital of Indiana, on the 6th of May. The affairs of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company have passed into the absolute control of Sidney Dillon and Jay Gould. This looks bad for the company. Between the Indians and the United States troops, the miners in the Black Hills country are likely to have an unfortunate time of it. A band of hostile Sioux and a detachment of Gen. If the troops get there first, the leaders of the exploring expedition will be arrested and confined, the wagons burned, and the outfit destroyed; in the other case, there may be no one left to tell the story.

The prospect of relief from the terrible grasshopper scourges which for two years past have been visited upon a large section of the frontier States is not very flattering. A farmer of Blue Earth county (Minn.), recently found in one peck of earth, 800 eggs, all of which, after being placed near a stove, hatched out. It is stated that quite a number of farmers, discouraged with the prospects, have abandoned their homesteads and left the country, and it is feared that those counties most afflicted will be utterly deserted in a short thime.

Six hundred and eighty thousand dollars in gold was lately transported by rail from San Francisco to New York, in one "pile." The precious metal was in its crude state, and was done up in fifteen boxes, each containing a fraction over $45,000. The boxes were about twelve inches in length, four inches in height, and four inches wide, and were wrapped in silk thread, which was covered over with sealing-wax. The treasure was in charge of a single express messenger, who was locked in the car, his only company being six heavy Colt's revolvers.

Few men, in these days, live to see three quarters of a century of active military duty, but Field Marshal Gomm, of the British army, who has just died at the age of 91, has been in the army 77 years. He was with Wellington in his great campaigns, including the last and greatest. Gomm had seen oceans of fighting, and the simple record of his wounds and his promotions for gallantry would have sufficed for the honors of a dozen men. It is but a few years since he was made Governor of the Tower of London, the recognized berth of the champion veteran of the army. He was probably the last living General in the world who saw fighting in the eighteenth century.

POLITICAL MEMORANDA.

Gen. W. S. Hancock is the coming Democratic candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania.

There are five pairs in the present Senate—the Camerons, Joneses, Ferrys, Johnsons, and Morrills.

The State Treasurer of Pennsylvania announces that the treasury is empty, and the overworked legislators have been obliged to go home with unfilled pocket-books.

The Hartford Post announces that P. T. Barnum will be the Republican candidate for Mayor of Bridgeport at the approaching municipal election.

The mutations of political and social life in our country are somewhat strikingly emphasized by the fact that while Mr. Bruce (colored), of Mississippi, takes his seat in the United States Senate, his old teacher, Mr. Farren, of New Haven, is an applicant for the position of messenger to the same body.

Mr. Withers, the new Virginia Senator, was a physician at the breaking out of the war. After serving three years as Colonel, he was so severely wounded that he had to leave the army. From 1866 to 1669 he edited the Lynchburg News, and from 1869 to 1873 the Richmond Enquirer. He has eleven living children, of whom ten are daughters.

Secretary Bristow is taking his turn now as a Presidential candidate, and is receiving about as general commendation as ex-Speaker Blaine did just after Congress adjourned. The Utica Herald says Mr. Bristow is "one of the ablest and worthiest men in the public service," and the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle remarks upon this: "This estimate of Gen. Bristow will be cordially indorsed by thousands of earnest Republicans. His nomination for President is certainly among the possibilities, if not among the probabilities."

The following are the districts, deprived of representation by the recent death of members, in which special elections are pending, together with the party majorities at the last Congressional election: Massachusetts (Mr. Buffinton's), Republican majority 5,766; Fourth District of Maine (Mr. Hersey's), Republican majority 2,953; Ninth District of Georgia (Mr. McMillan's), Democratic majority 5,567; Ninth District of Illinois (Mr. Whiting's) Republican majority 260; Fourth District of Tennessee (Mr. Head's), Democratic majority 10,430.

There seems to be some opposition to the Hon. Fernando Wood as the Democratic Speaker of the next House out in Indiana. The Indianapolis Sentinel says: "The sooner the Democracy gets rid of the idea that Fernando Wood can be made Speaker the better. The Congressmen-elect ought to understand that the party will not tolerate the leadership of such a man, no matter what kind of dinners he gives. Whether justly or unjustly, Fernando Wood has earned a reputation throughout the Eastern States more unsavory, perhaps, than that of any public man except Tweed. To select him as Speaker would be simply ruinous to the prospects of the party. He is wealthy, polished, and able, and he may be honest, but he has a reputation that would damn the political prosperity of the Democracy in its present tender and delicate condition. He cannot count upon the support of a leading man or a leading newspaper in the State of New York."

The Buffalo Courier thinks it an error of our political system that a Congressional candidate must reside in the district he is to represent. It argues that our States in their capacity as independent and self-governing Commonwealths are sufficiently represented in the Senate, and that a member of the House represents his constituency on the one hand and the whole people of the United States on the other. Sometimes it happens that a district has no capable man who is willing to be its Representative, and in that event, the Courier claims, the constituency should be permitted to seek a candidate elsewhere. "On the whole," it concludes, "we believe that the prevailing practice has neither benefited the States nor the several Congressional districts, and it may be pointed out as one of the reasons why the House of Representatives generally consists so largely of inferior material. If ever a constituency shall go outside their own district and send to Congress a man of experience and spotless national reputation from another part of the State, without imposing on him a change of residence, they would win by such action general praise and higher satisfaction than ordinary local vanity has ever to expect as its reward."

A young man in Laporte found life insupportable because his girl went home from church with a hated rival, and thereupon undertook to glide into the silent tomb by the aid of strychnine, but was forcibly detained by a stomach-pump.

Considerable apprehension is felt at Fort Wayne as to the whereabouts of John O. Williams, a well-known citizen and a member of the dry-goods firm of Wooster, Williams & Co. He left about eight weeks since for Memphis on business, and for the past four weeks nothing whatever has been heard from him. He only expected to be gone a few days, and, as he had a large amount of money with him, some suspicions of foul play are entertained.

MISCELLANEOUS.

In Kokomo, the other day, when a spelling-match had been arranged between the lawyers and the doctors, and a certain spelling-book had been named as a standard, it was suddenly discovered that the doctors had cornered the market. Not one of the standard books could be obtained in the town by the lawyers, and the doctors were understood to have several gross of that kind in their possession. The lawyers, however, telegraphed for a new supply, and were furnished in time to make elaborate preparations for the match, which was long and remorseless, and ended in a draw.

A spelling match was held at Fort Wayne Tuesday night, with a large number in attendance, consisting of editors, lawyers, merchants, and school-teachers. W. H. Scudder, editor of the Fort Wayne Sentinel, was proclaimed victor after a long and interesting spell.

Forty-seven Representatives and Senators of the late Assembly neither paid for nor returned the volumes of statutes placed in their hands for use during the session. The books were worth $18 per set. In the courts at South Bend, recently, Sam B. Collins, of Laporte, entered suit for an injunction to restrain Josephine Drollinger, his divorced wife, and W. F. George from making sales of his so-called opium antidote, and also that they be restrained from using a list of names of his patients alleged to have been surreptitiously obtained. The case is an exceptional one as regards the right of a divorced wife to the use of a valuable secret belonging to her former husband. The court enjoined defendants from the use of the names of patients, but held that the divorced wife might rightfully use her knowledge of the "cure" precisely as she might any other intelligence of value taught to her by him.

THE NEW TEMPERANCE LAW.

FULL TEXT OF THE ACT TO REGULATE THE SALE OF LIQUORS.

The following is the full text of the new liquor law as it passed both houses of the General Assembly:

An Act to regulate and license the sale of spirituous, vinous, and malt, and other intoxicating liquors, to limit the license fee to be charged by cities and towns, and to repeal all former laws regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, and all laws and parts of laws coming in conflict with the provisions of this act, prescribing penalties for the violation thereof, and declaring an emergency.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to directly or indirectly sell, barter, or give away for any purpose of gain, any spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors in less quantities than a quart at a time, without first procuring from the Board of Commissioners of the county in which such liquor or liquors are to be sold, a license, as hereinafter provided, nor shall any person, without having first procured such license, sell or barter any intoxicating liquor to be drank or suffered to be drank in his house, out-house, yard, garden, or the appurtenances thereto belonging.

And it shall be the privilege of any voter of said township to remonstrate in writing against the granting of such license to any applicant on account of immorality or other unfitness (as is specified in this act).

Sec. 4. The Board of County Commissioners, at such term, shall grant a license to such applicant upon his giving bond to the State of Indiana with at least two freehold sureties, resident within said county, to be approved by the County Auditor, in the sum of $2,000, conditioned that he will keep an orderly and peaceable house, and that he will pay all fines and costs that may be assessed against him for any violations of the provisions of this act, and for the payment of all judgements for civil damages growing out of unlawful sales, as provided for in this act, which bond shall be filed with the Auditor of said county; provided said applicant be a fit person to be intrusted with the sale of intoxicating liquors, and if he be not in the habit of becoming intoxicated. But in no case shall a license be granted to a person in the habit of becoming intoxicated: Provided, That no appeal taken by any person from the order of the board granting such license shall operate to estop the person receiving such license from selling intoxicating liquors thereunder until the close of the next term of the court in which such appeal is pending at which such cause might be lawfully tried, and he shall not be liable as a seller without license for sales made during the pendency of such appeal. But he shall be liable for the violation of any of the provisions of this act during such time the same as if regularly licensed.

Sec. 5. If said applicant desire to sell spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors in quantities of less than a quart at a time, he shall pay to the Treasurer of said county one hundred dollars as a license fee for one year before license shall issue to him, and if he desire to sell only vinous or malt liquors, or both, in quantities less than a quart at a time, he shall pay to the Treasurer of said county fifty dollars as a license fee for one year before license shall issue to him, such fee to be paid into the school fund of the county in which said license is obtained, and applied and expended for common school purposes in the same manner in which the revenue of the common school funds are now expended.

Sec. 6. No city or incorporated town shall charge any person who may obtain a license under the provisions of this act more than the following sums for license to sell within their incorporated limits; cities may charge one hundred dollars, and incorporated towns one hundred dollars, in addition to the sum provided for hereinbefore.

Sec. 7. Upon the execution of the bond as required in the fourth section of this act, and the presentation of the order of the Board of Commissioners granting him license, and the County Treasurer's receipt for fifty dollars, if the application be for vinous and malt liquors only, or a receipt for one hundred dollars, if the application be for the sale of spirituous, vinous and malt liquors as aforesaid, the County Auditor shall issue a license to the applicant for the sale of such liquors as he applied for, in less quantities than a quart at a time, with the privilege of permitting the same to be drank on the premises, as stated in the aforesaid notice, which license shall specify the name of the applicant, the place of sale, and the period of time for which such license is granted.

Sec. 8. No license as herein provided shall be granted for a greater or less time than one year.

Sec. 9. A license granted under the provisions of this act shall not authorize the person so licensed to sell or barter any intoxicating, vinous or malt liquors on Sunday, nor upon any legal holiday, nor upon the day of any State, county, township or municipal election in the township, town or city where the same may be holden, nor between the hours of 11 p. m. and 5 a. m., and upon conviction thereof shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined in any sum not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars; and for a second conviction he shall forfeit his license, which shall be a part of the judgment of the court trying the same.

Sec. 10. Every person who shall directly or indirectly sell, barter or give away any intoxicating, spirituous, vinous or malt liquors to any person who is in the habit of being intoxicated, after notice shall have been given him in writing by the wife, child, parent, brother or sister of such person, or by the Trustee of the township where he resides, that such person is in the habit of being intoxicated, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $10 nor more than $50.

Sec. 10½. Any person of sound mind found in any public place in a state of intoxication shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction be fined in any sum not less than $2 nor more than $5 for each offense.

Sec. 11. Any person not being licensed according to the provisions of this act, who shall sell or barter, directly or indirectly, any spirituous, vinous or malt liquors in a less quantity than a quart at a time, or who shall sell or barter any spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors to be drank or suffered to be drank in his house, out-house, yard, garden, or the appurtenances thereto belonging, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not less than twenty nor more than one hundred dollars, to which the court or jury trying the cause may add imprisonment in the county jail of not less than thirty days nor more than six months.

Sec. 12. If any person shall sell, barter or give away, directly or indirectly, any spirituous, vinous or malt liquors to any person under the age of 21 years, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars.

Sec. 13. If any person under the age of 21 years shall misrepresent his age and state that he is over 21 years of age in order to purchase spirituous, vinous or malt liquors, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars.

Sec. 14. Any person who shall sell, barter or give away any spirituous, vinous or malt liquors to any person at the time in a state of intoxication, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars.

Sec. 15. Any person who shall adulterate, or who shall sell or offer for sale any spirituous, vinous or malt liquors which have been adulterated by the admixture of any deleterious substance therewith, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, to which the court or jury trying the same may add imprisonment in the county jail of not less than thirty days nor more than six months.

Sec. 16. Every place, house, arbor, room or shed wherein spirituous, vinous or malt liquors are sold, bartered or given away, or suffered to be drank, if kept in a disorderly manner, shall be deemed a common nuisance, and the keeper thereof, upon conviction, shall forfeit his license, and be fined in any sum not less than ten nor more than one hundred dollars: Provided, that no prosecution shall be instituted or maintained against any person for any violations of the provisions of this act occurring between the time when it shall take effect and the close of the first regular session of the Board of Commissioners of the proper county, the beginning of which session not taking place in less time than four weeks after this act shall have taken effect.

Sec. 17. Criminal Circuit Courts and Circuit Courts within their respective jurisdiction shall have power to hear and determine all complaints for the violation of any of the provisions of this act, and the grand juries of the several courts shall have, and it is hereby made their duty to take, cognizance of offenses against its provisions as in case of felonies.

Sec. 18. Justices of the Peace, within their respective counties, shall have jurisdiction to try and determine all cases arising under the provisions of this act, except as provided in section 16 of this act: Provided, that if in the opinion of the Justice or jury trying any such case a fine of $25 shall be an inadequate punishment for such violation, then the Justice in such case shall recognize the party in sufficient bond and surety to appear at the next term of the Criminal Circuit Court or Circuit Court of the proper county to answer said charge.

Sec. 19. All former laws regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, and all laws and parts of laws coming in conflict with any of the provisions of this act be and the same are hereby repealed. Every person who shall sell, barter, or give away any intoxicating liquors in violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be personally liable, and also liable on his bond filed in the Auditor's office, as required by Section 4 of this act, to any person who shall sustain any injury or damage to their person or property, or means of support, on account of the use of such intoxicating liquors so sold as aforesaid, to be enforced by appropriate action in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Sec. 20. It is hereby declared that an emergency exists for the immediate taking effect of this act; it shall therefore be in force from and after its passage: Provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to affect in any way suits or indictments now pending in any of the courts in this State under the provisions of any of the laws hereby repealed, and the same shall be tried and determined as though this act had not been passed.

Sleepy Baby.

At a recent meeting of the School Board, in London, attention was called to the necessity of establishing baby-rooms for the convenience of the infants, many of whom, it is stated, necessarily fall asleep during school hours, and it was decided to supply cots and mattresses to two schools as an experiment. This plan, it is expected, will enable a large number of children to attend school who would otherwise be kept at home to look after the infants. The sublime indifference displayed as a rule by babies to educational advantages no doubt renders it almost hopeless to keep them awake during school hours, and under these circumstances there seems to be no alternative but to provide them with cots and mattresses; but it should be remembered that the education of a child cannot begin too early, especially in these days of competition.

Castor oil is an excellent thing to soften leather.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

Come To Us, Spring.

Come to us, spring, beautiful spring;
We are weary of ice and snow;
Fold us within thy odorous wing,
Over us perfume of May-flowers blow.
Bathed in the dew drops,
Bring us their fragrance,
The robe of the woodlands,
The lingering sunlight,
Bring us the rivulet's musical flow.

Practical Suggestions.

What the world wants is a horse of utility. The fast horse as a fast horse has no utility. In a good calf there is value. The fast horse is a fabulous horse, because there is fabulous money in him.

Neatness in dairy husbandry began by washing the cow's bag at milking. Would milk regularly without fail. Would milk clean; last milk richest. Deep against shallow pans; would use medium. Would not work butter by hand. Would use tubs of scrupulous neatness. Would be very particular about salt; a coarse kind of the fine salt is the best; the Ashland brand recommended.

We have breeds of stock whose qualities are well fixed by long breeding, whose use would greatly hasten the improvement of our stock. A cross with the Devons would give dwarf natives. The Herefords make better oxen than cows. Ayrshires were good for milk and rough pastures. For a high name and the meanest cross take Jerseys. Durham short-horns are round, compact, handsome, of early maturity, and have little waste.

Concerning the folly of jumping at conclusions from a single year's experience in any agricultural experiment, a recent writer says: "During the last decade we have applied fertilizing substances to fields for three successive years and they gave us no returns, but these came at last. The next two or three years the field burdens were greater almost than could be conveniently carried. The pabulum was in the soil, and it only needed the action of earth solvents, heat or moisture, to place them in proper condition to be seized and assimilated by plants." It is wisely added: "We must beware of the influence of superficial and ill-considered experiments, so-called, in husbandry. They do not often afford us desirable aid in conducting successfully field labors."

To Keep Cider Sweet.

Prof. Horsford, of Cambridge, recommends the following plan for preserving cider sweet:

"When the cider in the barrel is undergoing a lively fermentation, add as much white sugar as will be equal to half or three-quarters of a pound to each gallon of cider, and let the fermentation proceed until the liquid attains the right taste to suit; then add an eighth to a quarter of an ounce of sulphite (not sulphate) of lime to each gallon of cider in the cask; first mixing the powder in about a quart of the cider, and then pouring it back into the cask, and giving it a thorough shaking or rolling. After standing bunged up for a few days, for the matter added to become incorporated with the cider, it may be bottled or used from the cask."

Trimming Fruit Trees.

A fruit-grower gives the following result of his practical experience:

"Twenty years ago I went into my orchard to ascertain, if possible, the best time to trim fruit-trees, having regard to the healing of the wounds made. I commenced with the month of April, amputated a number of limbs, watched carefully the wounds made, and the time the wounds commenced to heal. In this way I went through the twelve months of the year, and, after a close examination for one year after the work was done, I came to the conclusion that from the 20th of may to the 20th of June was the best time. The reason is, the wounds made then heal over in the shortest time and in the best manner. The two poorest months for healing are the months of February and March. When the wound is made in the forepart of June it will commence to heal within one week from the time it was made; but if in February or March, the wound made becomes hard and dry, and sometimes there is a liquid which comes from the wound and turns black as it runs down the tree. If the trimming cannot be done in the best time, I would next prefer the month of October or November."

Directions for Calcimining.

Buy the best bleached glue if the walls are to be white or some light tint (if dark it is immaterial so the glue is clean), and use it in the proportion of a quarter of a pound to eight pounds of whiting. Soak the glue over night; in the morning pour off the water, as it simply swells while soaking. Add fresh water, put it in a pail, and set that in a kettle of boiling water. When dissolved stir it into the whiting, adding enough water to make it, after mixing, of the same consistency as common whitewash. It may be tinted any color, and is applied with a whitewash brush. If the color is rubbed smooth in a little water and then mixed with the wash it will be more even. If the walls have been previously whitewashed scrape away all that will come off, and wash with a solution of white vitriol—two ounces in a pail of water. The vitriol will be decomposed, forming zinc white, and plaster of Paris, to which the calcimining easily adheres. It is important to dissolve the glue in a hot-water bath, for if scorched by too great heat its tenacity is impaired or destroyed. Whiting is simply chalk freed from impurities and reduced to a fine powder, and is also known under the names of Paris and Spanish white, though the latter is really a white earth found in Spain.

There is a great difference in whitewash brushes, and the beauty of the work as well as the ease of performing it depends very much on a good brush, making it well worth while to pay the difference between that and a cheap one. For the inexperienced it is more difficult to lay on tints evenly than pure white.—Country Gentleman.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

In selecting fowls for boiling, it should be borne in mind that those which are not black-legged are generally much whiter when they are dressed than the latter.

To Remove Mildew from Linen.—Mix soft soap with starch powdered, half the quantity of salt, and a piece of lemon and lay it on both sides with a painter's brush. Let it be in the open air—on grass is preferable—till stain is removed.

Sauce au vin Blanc, or White Wine Sauce.—Put two ounces of butter into a stewpan with a little parsley, a small (blanched) onion, one or two mushrooms (previously tossed in lemon juice), all finely minced, turn them well over the fire but do not let them brown; add one ounce flour, seasoning of salt, pepper, and mace, one pint of Chablis (or other light wine); simmer gently for half an hour, skim, and serve hot.

Yorkshire Parkin.—Five pounds oatmeal, five pounds treacle, one and one-half pounds butter, two pounds sugar, one gill of warm beer, one tablespoonful of ground ginger. To be mixed the day before. Another recipe: One and one-half pounds of oatmeal, two pounds treacle, one-fourth pound of moist sugar, one-half pound of butter rubbed into the oatmeal. A little ginger or finely cut candied peel may be added if liked; mix all well together, put into tea-cake tins and bake.

Pie Crust.—The American people as a rule eat more pie than any other nationality. In Europe a pie is rarely, if ever, seen upon the table. There is no doubt but our health would be much better if pies were unknown to us. But we will no doubt go on eating pies, and the only thing to be done is to overcome, if possible, the use of so much grease in the crust. Years of experience warrant us in saying that a delicious pastry may be made for pies, meat pies, fruit dumplings, etc., in the following manner: two tea cups flour, pinch of salt, thoroughly mixed dry. Have boiling water ready, and stir in until thick enough to roll out; put dry flour on rolling pin, and roll thin. This will be light, delicate, and much more healthy than when mixed in the ordinary way.

Monkeys Made to Work.

In the Straits settlements of the East large apes, of naturally intelligent breeds, are employed by their masters much in the same way that human slaves are made use of in some parts of Africa. The cocoanut palm is valuable for its fruit, but this is very difficult to procure, so the landlord of a "tope" of palms in the Malayan peninsula trains his apes to climb the trees and judiciously pick the ripest nuts for him, just as the Mozambique Arab trains his negroes to perform the same arduous office. But there appears to be a slight difference between the two cases—the apes seem to delight in the work. We learn from some correspondence in a Ceylon newspaper that the apes thus employed in the neighborhood of Singapore and Penang are bred in Atchin, and the owners itinerate and hire them out. They go up the trees with a line attached, and obey the command of their masters, choosing the proper fruit. They twist the nut round and round till it falls down from its stock, when the feat is hailed on the part of the apes by jumps and chuckles of evident satisfaction. The correspondent of the Ceylon Journal says he has frequently stopped at the police station at Tungey Bakup, and had a "kurumba" sent down from the cocoanut trees in this fashion.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Physical Phenomena of 1874.

An unusual number of physical phenomena appeared in different parts of the globe during the past year. Of the typhoons, cyclones and hurricanes of the Eastern Hemisphere, the destruction occasioned at Hong Kong on the 22d and 23d of September was most disastrous, 8,000 persons and much property being destroyed thereby; the New England coast storms in May; the great storms and rain falls of June and July in the Southern and Middle States, attended by floods at Pittsburgh and Allegheny City; the hurricane in Jamaica; the Mississippi overflow; the destructive floods in India, and at Lorida, in Spain, in the month of August; the snow-fall in Persia; the great severity of the winter in Northern Asia and in the Alps and Pyrenees; the unusual number of icebergs in the Atlantic; the great hail storm in the south of France; a slight eruption of Ætna and earthquakes in Vera Cruz, St. Thomas, Equador, Porto Rico, Mexico, Utah, North Carolina, Scotland, Inspruck, Smyrna, Constantinople and Ceylon, occasional heavy losses of property and considerable suffering, but with the exception of the Hong Kong disaster, the loss of human life has been comparatively small.—Toledo Blade.

A Texas Tragedy.

Helen Rodins was the belle of Selma, Tex., and John Kincaid, a planter, was her accepted lover. Two years ago, after again asking her to marry him and again hearing her refusal, he told her that he could no longer bear to be near her. "I am going to Mexico," he said, "and I forbid you to marry anybody else. If I hear of you disobeying this injunction I will come back and kill you." He went away and Helen thought lightly of his threat. After a while she fell in love with a druggist named Faust, and married him. A month ago they attended a public ball, and Helen was astonished to see her rejected lover there. He was affable at first, but as the night wore on he drank excessively of brandy, and then disappeared. Faust took his wife home and then started for Houston on business. In the morning she was found stabbed to death in bed, and Kincaid has not been seen in Selma since.

No newspaper, says an exchange, ever yet won position and abiding success without deserving it, and it can never deserve it unless in combines in itself those essential qualities and conditions of a press which command a free and considerate public approval. This is the true explanation of the COURIER's splended success.

Call at the COURIER office for job work.

THE TILTON-BEECHER TRIAL.

Sixty-second Day.—Mr. Beecher's testimony to-day bore directly upon the merits of the case. He gave an absolute, emphatic and unqualified denial of the charges against him; stated that there was not one word of truth in Tilton's or Moulton's allegations of criminality; that Kate Carey's story about Elizabeth sitting on his knee was false; that, in short, there was no adultery, not even improper proposals, and he never confessed anything of the kind to anybody.

Sixty-third Day.—The examination of Mr. Beecher was resumed. His testimony was chiefly in rebuttal of the evidence of Tilton and Moulton, whose statements of the defendant's admissions of guilt the latter flatly contradicted. The accounts of several of the interviews as sworn to by Tilton and Moulton were branded by Mr. Beecher as monstrous falsehoods. Touching the famous letter of contrition, he denied its composition or dictation, but admitted that it fairly represented the substance of what was said at the interview preceding the writing of the letter.

Sixty-fourth Day.—Mr. Beecher's testimony was explanatory of the letters that passed between Mrs. Tilton and himself. Mr. Fullerton called the attention of the court to the fact that Mr. Beecher had before him a memorandum of the questions to be asked and his answers thereto. This was frequently referred to by the witness, for the purpose of refreshing his memory as to dates. This unusual proceeding on the part of a witness was the subject of a good deal of remark.

Sixty-fifth Day.—The day was spent in examining Mr. Beecher's letters and eliciting from the witness explanations of them. His manner was firm and solemn, and his denials most emphatic.

Sixty-sixth Day.—The proceedings opened quietly and tamely, with the resumption of the chain of evidence from the point where it was left off the previous day. Beecher gave a number of emphatic denials to statements made by plaintiff; and one in particular, which seemed to put Tracy's position in a more favorable light than it has hitherto been regarded. In reply to a question, Mr. Beecher said the first intimation he received that Gen. Tracy had been consulted in regard to the difficulties between Tilton and Beecher was from Frank Moulton. Witness had not been consulted in regard to this selection of Mr. Tracy nor of any one else.

The amendment which the express companies made to the Postal law, by which the rates on third class mail matter were doubled, is not only diminishing the receipts of the Postoffice Department, but increasing its expenses. The estimates for postage for the department were made before the change in the rates. As a large part of its mail matter is of the third class, its postage appropriation will be exhausted inside of six months. Mr. Jewell will then be obliged to send this matter by express. The companies had better make all the money they can before next December, for this source of their income will then be cut off.

FEMALE SUFFRAGE.

Decision of the Supreme Court Denying the Right of Women to Vote.

The following is an abstract of the opinion recently delivered by the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Miner vs. Hoppersatt, denying to women the right of suffrage. The opinion was delivered by Chief-Justice Waite, all the Associate-Justices concurring:

This is the case presenting the question whether under the Fourteenth Amendment a woman who is a citizen of the United States and of a State is a voter in the State, notwithstanding the provisions of the Constitution and the laws of that State confine the right of suffrage to men alone. It is said that women are citizens. They are persons, and, therefore, under the Fourteenth Amendment, declared to be citizens of the State wherein they reside. But it did not require that amendment to make them such. They were, before, persons and people, and were not in terms excluded from citizenship by the Constitution. The Federal Constitution was ordained by the people of the United States, and whoever at the time of its adoption was one of the people became a citizen. All children born of citizen parents within the jurisdiction are themselves citizens. The naturalization laws are reviewed to show that women have always been considered citizens the same as men; also the laws giving jurisdiction in Federal cases. It is then said that the Fourteenth Amendment did not affect the citizenship of women any more than it did of men, and thus minors' rights do not depend upon it. She has always been a citizen from her birth, entitled to all the privileges, immunities, etc., of citizenship. The amendment prohibited the State in which she lives from abridging any of those rights. The right of suffrage is not made in terms one of the privileges of the citizen. The United States has no voters, and no one can vote for Federal, without being competent to vote for State, officers. The elective officers of the United States are chosen directly or indirectly by the voters of the States. The amendment did not add to the privileges or immunities of the citizen; it simply furnished an additional guarantee for the protection of such as he already had. Nor is the right of suffrage co-extensive with the citizenship of the State. When the Federal Constitution was adopted, all the States but Rhode Island had Constitutions of their own, in not one of which were all citizens recognized as entitled to this right. And under all these circumstances it cannot be for a moment doubted that if it had been intended to make citizens of the United States voters the framers of the Constitution would have so expressed that intention, and not have left so important a change in the condition of citizenship, as it then existed, to implication. But if further evidence is needed it is to be found in the provision of the Constitution. If suffrage is necessarily a part of citizenship, then the provisions of the Constitution which gives citizens of each State all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States would entitle the citizens of each State to the right to vote in the several States precisely as the citizens of those States are. Other provisions, among them that relating to the apportionment of representatives, were cited to the same point. But still again, after the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment it was found necessary to use in the Fifteenth Amendment the following language: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude." The Fourteenth Amendment had provided against any abridgment of the privileges or immunities of citizens, and if the right of suffrage is one of them, why amend the Constitution further to prevent its being denied on account of race, color, etc.? The duty of the United States to guarantee to the State a republican form of government is discharged in protecting those governments which were recognized as being republican in form by the Constitution when adopted. The governments of the States being then accepted it must be assumed that they are such as are to be guaranteed. The admission of new States is then considered, and it is found that there is nothing to favor the idea that suffrage is a right of citizenship, but everything to repeal it; also, the restoration of the States to the Union after the war, none of them having provided for female suffrage. Besides, a person who has simply declared his intentions to become a citizen of the United States may vote under certain circumstances in Missouri and other States, and this could not be if suffrage depended upon the right of citizenship. The court are unanimous in the opinion that the Constitution of the United States does not confer the right of suffrage upon any one, and that the Constitutions of the several States which commit the trust to men alone are not necessarily void. Affirmed.

THE GEORGIA CYCLONES.

The Details of the Recent Terrible Storm—Three Hundred Persons Killed and Fifteen Hundred Wounded.

[Augusta (Ga.) Cor. Louisville Courier-Journal.]

The recent cyclone which passed over this region was the most awful ever heard of in the United States. I have been along a portion of its track, and, having just returned, will endeavor to give the readers of your paper an account of it.

It crossed the Chattahoochie River from Lee county, Ala., and entered Harris county, Ga. From thence it passed through the counties of Talbot, Upson, Monroe, Jones, Baldwin, Hancock, Warren, McDuffie, and Columbia. It crossed the Savannah River fifteen miles above Augusta, entered Edgefield county, S. C., passed through Barnwell, Lexington, Richland, Sumter, Marion, and Horry counties of that State, and finally ran into the Atlantic Ocean off the coast of North Carolina.

A second cyclone, precisely at the same time, seemed to have formed this side of Milledgeville, crossed the Ogeechee river fifteen miles below the village of Mayfield, in Hancock county, and passing through Glascock and the lower edge of Richmond, crossed the Savannah twelve miles below Augusta, into Beech Island, S. C., and from thence ran due east into the Atlantic.

As I was along the northern one of these cyclones, I will more particularly describe that. The two were exactly alike in size, shape, color and devastation. They were both the most terrible visitations ever sent by Providence upon the States of Georgia and South Carolina.

The cloud was, in color, inky black, half a mile high, half a mile wide, was cylindrical in shape, and traveled very much like a revolving barrel coming end foremost. It was illumined with phosphorescent light, and momentarily would glitter as if 1,000,000 matches had been ignited in it.

It was accompanied by a continuous roaring sound, as of 500 cannon in the decisive moments of a pitched battle. The bravest man ever born could neither have felt, seen, nor heard it, with calmness. There was a force and a power; a sublimity and grandeur about it unnatural, awful, wholly its own. But a thousand incidents are related showing that the hand of Providence was in it—that it was governed by laws as regular and immutable as is the sun.

It traveled from west to a little north of due east, going as straight as a crane or a cannon ball would fly. It passed over the entire State of Georgia in exactly three hours, traveling at the rate of fifty-three miles per hour.

The whole number of killed in Georgia will not fall below 300, and the wounded reach 1,500.

Through Carolina the devastation and death were equally as great. The southern cyclone crossed the Savannah at Fury's Ferry, sunk the boat, struck the plantation of Mr. Foreman, tore it to pieces, and killed and wounded a great many on it. From thence forward to the ocean the accounts are as terrible and as appalling.

On the 4th of April, 1804, now lacking but a few days of seventy-one years, a great storm like this came up from the direction of Dooly county, and passed through Hancock, Warren, and Richmond, crossing the Savannah fifteen miles above Augusta. There are a few people now living who remember it, and plenty have been told by their parents of it. It was described in the Augusta Chronicle. All accounts agreed that it was illuminated by the same strange light as the last one. No one was killed by it.

The course of the grain market has again been very favorable for producers, holders and speculators on the "long" side of the trade, but directly the reverse to the unfortunate "shorts." The surrounding influences were nearly all of a favorable tenor and such as would naturally be expected to produce an active set of markets, and an upward movement in values. These influences were used as a lever by the bulls in their efforts to force a higher range of prices, and with good success. The receipts of the leading grains—wheat, corn and oats—have been steadily decreasing, this week's arrivals being considerably below the expectations of speculators. The shipping movement is on the increase, the low rail freights indicating a better demand. The grain now in store is generally held by operators for delivery on contracts, for shipment, or for purposes best "known to themselves;" at any rate, they are not disposed to sell, and the "shorts" are beginning to anticipate trouble in filling their contracts. The increased demand from this interest, further aided by favorable Eastern advices and the "bull" movement of interested speculators, resulted in the material advances shown on all grains, the exact amount of the advance being shown by the annexed table—the closing prices being about the highest figures reached during the week. Seller May is the favorite option all round, with cash grain scarce and wanted. Rye about nominal. Barley firm.

LIVE STOCK.

The cattle market was rather weak until Friday, and values declined about 12½c per 100 lbs. At the close however the market was again active and firm, and closed steady at $4.75@5.20 for medium to fair, $5.30@5.65 for good, $5.70@6.25 for choice steers. Extra sold at $6.50@7.00. Stock cattle quiet at $3.50@4.50. Butchers' stock dull at 2.75@5.00 for inferior to choice. Hogs in demand and values were firm and higher, closing at $7.25@8.50 from common light to choice heavy, $8.80@9 for extra. Sheep dull and heavy at $3.00@6.25 for poor to choice.

PROVISIONS.

Never in the history of Chicago as a commercial city has the provision trade exhibited such a degree of activity as during the past week. The following table exhibits the aggregate trading in mess pork and the options dealt in during the week ending this evening:

	Brls.		Brls.
Cash	4,424	Seller July	16,750
Seller April	26,880	Seller August	1,000
Seller May	95,850
Seller June	109,250	Total	[illegible]

The following table exhibits the aggregate trading in lard for the same time and the options dealt in:

	Tcs.		Tcs.
Cash	1,856	Seller July	4,250
Seller April	18,500	Seller August	2,000
Seller May	54,700
Seller June	27,500	Total	108,800

The following table exhibits the trading in the different kinds of meats during the past week:

	Lbs.		Lbs.
Hams	170,000	Long clear sides	485,000
Shoulders	1,360,000	Short clear sides	1,225,000
Short rib sides	7,760,000
Total			11,000,000

The aggregate value of this product reaches the enormous sum of $12,150,000, and exceeding a daily average of $2,000,000.

According to this representation the stocks of mess pork and lard have changed hands more than twice during the week, and the trading in mess pork aggregates more than one-half the entire trading of the packing season of 1869-70, while the trading in lard exceeds that of the packing season of 1869-70. The market during the past week was unusually active and trade was largely confined to speculative circles. Prices were firm and considerably higher. Cash mess pork sold at $20.00@21.50 and closed steady at $21.40@21.50; seller April closed at $21.35@21.37½. Values ranged at $2@2.30 for poor to good; $2.35@2.37½ for prime, and $2.40@2.45 for choice. Apples were dull with large stocks on the market. Quotable at $2.50@3.00 per brl for good to choice lots, and about $3.50 in a retail way. Hides were dull and easy. Potatoes ruled firm at $1.08@1.10 for Eastern peachblows in car lots, and $1.15 from store; early rose about $1@1.05; Western peachblows sold at 90c@$1. Tallow, 8¼c. Vegetables dull. Onions weak at $3@3.50 per brl for yellow. Turnips 60@75c, and cabbage about $1.50 per dozen for choice. Veal dull at 3@8c for poor to choice.

Utilities.

Camphor is said to be an antidote to strychnine.

The fumes of a brimstone match will remove berry stains from a book, paper, or engraving.

Oxyd of manganese added to the soil in which the hydrangea grows will cause the flowers to turn from pink to purple.

Durable colors can be prepared economically, according to the English Mechanic, by mixing small portions of sulphate of iron, nitrate of manganese, and nitrate of cobalt, or sulphate of copper, with a solution of sulphate of zinc. The mixture is then reduced to dryness, and subjected to sufficient heat to drive off the sulphuric acid. The colors prepared by this process are greens, grays, pinks, and gold.

It is suggested that ice may be easily produced in mild winters by filling suitably constructed sheet-iron vessels to the depth of about an inch with water, which will soon freeze, even when the temperature is but little below the freezing point. By repeating the addition of water as the first portions become frozen, blocks of clearest ice, six inches thick, may be formed during a night; and when the temperature by day is suitable, a single laborer will be able to fill a large ice-house in a short time. By pouring water which has been cooled in the vessels nearly to the freezing point over the ice after it has been packed, at suitable intervals, when the temperature of the air is below the freezing point, a compact mass of ice may be found of more value for use than a much larger quantity loosely packed. Even in winters favorable to the production of ice, the above method may be found the most convenient and the cheapest for filling ice-houses.

How a Lady Should Sit on a Horse.

The ideal of a fine horsewoman is erect without being rigid, perfectly square to the front, and, until quite at home in the saddle, looking religiously between her horse's ears. The shoulders should be perfectly square, but thrown back a little, so as to expand the chest and make a hollow waist, "such as is observed in waltzing," but always flexible. On the flexibility of the person above the seat all the grace of equestrianism, and on the firmness below all the safety, depend. Nervousness makes both men and women poke their heads forward—a stupid trick in a man, unpardonable in a woman. A lady should bend like a willow in a storm, always returning to an easy yet nearly upright position. This seat should be acquired while the lady's horse is led, first by hand, then with a leading-stick, and finally with a lunging-rein, which will give room for cantering in circles. But where a pupil is encumbered with reins, a whip, and directions for guiding a horse, she may be excused for forgetting all about her seat or her position. The arms down to the elbows should hang loosely near but not fixed to the sides, and the hands, in the absence of reins, may rest in front of the waist.

A New Industry.

In Scotland a new industry has sprung up which promises to be important, consisting of the use of calcined granite, instead of clay, for the manufacture of pipes and other earthen articles. It is stated that the material will resist a strong fire and is not affected by transitions of heat and cold. Any preparation of the material when once properly finished may be heated to whiteness without injury. The new process of making earthenware will be heartily welcomed by housekeepers.

The advocates of the recognition of God in our national Constitution intend to hold a national convention at Philadelphia during the Centennial celebration, in order to emphasize the dependence of our material national growth on divine favor.

All Sorts.

Niagara Falls is to have a daily paper during the summer.

Despite acts of Parliament English women and girls of tender years continue to labor in the brick fields like slaves.

Mr. Forsyth, M. P., says the prospects of the woman suffrage movement in England were never brighter than they are now.

An eminent French physician declares that the decrease of dyspepsia in France is owing to the number of apples eaten by the people.

Benton, Me., enjoys the distinction of being the first town in the United States to elect a School Board composed entirely of women.

California aspires to be a great cotton manufacturing State, and hopes to supply China with cotton goods more cheaply than England can.

There is a stove in use now at Newtown Friend Meeting House, Delaware county, N. Y., which bears date of 1715, and is therefore in its one hundred and sixtieth year.

Rev. Josiah Henson, the original Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom" of the famous "Cabin," took part in a concert at Boston, recently, singing a plantation melody of his younger days.

"J. Gray—Pack with my box five dozen quills." There is nothing remarkable about this sentence, only that it is nearly as short as one can be constructed and yet contain all the letters of the alphabet.

Georgia has shunned the chief difficulties of usury laws by enacting that as high as twelve per cent. may be taken by special contract, while seven is still to be "understood" as the legal rate in ordinary causes.

A short-horned steer was recently butchered in Detroit that weighed 4,100 pounds alive, and yielded 3,000 pounds of dressed beef. This is believed to be the largest animal ever slaughtered for beef on this continent.

It was so excessively cold in Jerusalem during the past winter that for the first time in the present generation ice was formed. The Arabs, having never seen ice before, were sorely puzzled and could not comprehend why "water should change into glass."

A "Woman's temperance crusade" has been started in India. A small band of ladies in Calcutta have been holding religious services in the drinking saloons frequented by sailors in Bow Bazar, meeting with but little opposition from the saloon keepers.

A tramp in a New Haven lock-up was recently overheard describing to a crowd of his brethren the best places for lodgings and food between New York and Boston, illustrating his remarks with a rough chart which he had prepared as the result of his experiences.

On Feb. 28, the pneumatic mail system was opened for public use in the city of Vienna. By this method letters and packages not exceeding two ounces in weight can be sent from one end of the city to the other—a distance of about eight miles—in something less than two seconds.

There will be about 100 vacancies among the cadet midshipmen at the Naval Academy, to be filled at the annual examination in June next. Members of the House of Representatives, whose districts are not represented at the Academy, are making their nominations to the Secretary of the Navy.

Five members of the senior class at Harvard intend forming a party to travel on foot through Ireland, England, France, Switzerland, Germany and Italy. They propose to start immediately after Commencement, and be absent about a year. They will take passage over by steerage, and return by cabin.

In a New Haven court Charles H. Miller sued for divorce from Julia Ann Miller. At the same time another Julia Ann Miller was trying to escape by divorce a vinculo matrimonii with another Charles H. Miller. The former couple were divorced, and the latter, supposing the decree was for them, remarried, and now there is trouble among the Millers.

Irrigation is much talked about now. The repeated droughts make people anxious about the supply of water for their crops. Irrigation, however, cannot be made a paying process, or operation, unless springs are accessible at a sufficient height to flow over the land to be irrigated. We doubt whether water can be raised by art for the general purposes of irrigation and be done profitably.

Marriageable Ages in Different Countries.

In Austria the age of discretion, both for males and females, is 14, and unless this age has been reached by both parties, the marriage is not valid.

In Russia 18 for males, and 16 for females.

In Italy 18 for males, and 15 for females.

In Prussia 18 for males, and 14 for females.

In France 18 for males, and 15 for females.

In Bavaria the rule is different in different districts; in one being as low as 14 for males, and 12 for females.

In Denmark 20 for males; 16 for females.

In Greece 14 for males; 12 for females.

In Hesse-Darmstadt and Baden the consent of parents is necessary to males until their 25th year, and to females until their 21st.

In Saxe Coburg Gotha the law is somewhat curious about marriage. The general rule is, that a man cannot marry until he is 21; but an exception is sometime made, by grant of the government, upon petition, where the parents of the young man are unable, from age or other cause, to manage the farm or their business, whatever it may be, and it is deemed that the assistance of a young woman will be useful in the household—not, we presume exclusively in playing the piano.

In the American Union marriage is regulated by the different States, although Congress has assumed to prohibit polygamy. Not only are the required ages different, but the degrees of relationship within which marriage is permitted. In some States an uncle and niece are allowed by law to marry each other.

GOSSIP OF THE DAY.

Gen. Spinner's retirement from the office of United States Treasurer will necessitate the counting of every dollar in the treasury vaults, amounting to more than one hundred millions of dollars.

A bill has been introduced in the New York Legislature providing that jurors on unusually protracted trials shall receive extra compensation. It is intended to apply to the Tilton-Beecher jury.

Dr. Talmage, the pulpit orator of Brooklyn, has got disgusted with the developments of the Beecher trial. He raves against the newspapers for printing the evidence, and prophecies ruin and damnation to the editors who print it.

The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune telegraphs that "Senator Oglesby, of Illinois, has an ambition to become a candidate for the Vice-Presidency upon a ticket with Speaker Blaine, and that the friends of the latter are encouraging Oglesby in his ambition."

Ben Butler is the attorney in a case pending in the Treasury Department under very peculiar circumstances. The case is a claim for $50,000 for property seized in New Orleans for the use of the Northern Army by Gen. Butler, in command of the Union Army. Butler now appears as counsel in the case against the acts of Butler, as General. Queer, isn't it?

A letter has been written by Gen. Sheridan to Gen. Sherman defining the Black Hills region, and stating that there has not been any fair test yet made near Harney's Peak to determine the existence of gold there in large quantities. Gold probably exists much further west than the Black Hills of the Cheyenne, and Gen. Sheridan proposes to send an exploration up the Yellowstone to the mouth of the Big Horn.

The people of Michigan are afforded the opportunity of deciding by their votes at the polls the question of prohibition, as both branches of the Legislature have united in the passage of a resolution amending the Constitution of the State by striking out the section which prohibits the Legislature from passing any act authorizing the grant of license for the sale of intoxicating liquors. The amendment is to be submitted to the people at the general election in November, 1876.

Civilization in Japan is progressing. A compromise has been brought about between the Mikado and the disaffected statesmen of the empire; a war-vessel of foreign style of construction has been launched with great ado; while the establishment of a college for the instruction in obstetrics of Japanese women, the coinage of a trade dollar, and the detection of an attempted swindle in the interest of foreigners, furnish additional proof that Japan is rapidly advancing to a place among the enlightened and progressive nations of the earth.

Compulsory education is being vigorously enforced in New York city. Sixty policemen are engaged in taking a census of children not in attendance upon school, and will report about the middle of April. It is a noteworthy fact that so far no compulsion, properly so-called, has had to be used. Persuasion has proved sufficient. In many cases, it has been only lack of decent clothing which kept children away. When this was supplied, they have gone joyfully. As yet the newsboys, boot-blacks and factory operatives have not been approached. The hardest work will have to be done among them.

One of the most trying spelling matches anywhere on record took place lately in Boston. The contestants were on the one side members of the press, and on the other High school boys. The newspaper company was mostly made up of compositors and proof-readers, commonly reputed to be accomplished spellers. Yet the boys were victorious. At the very last round, a proof-reader of the Transcript and a school-boy were the only ones standing. The proof-reader missed "conferrable," spelling it with one r.

Mr. Childers, the well-known English traveler, delivered a lecture in London on the evening of April 1st, in which he gave an account of his last American tour. A cable dispatch states that he spoke in terms of high eulogy of America and the United States. He thought it was probably as prosperous as any country in the world. He estimated that in fifty years it would contain 150,000,000 inhabitants, while the progress of England was necessarily limited. He forcibly presented reasons why England should seek friendship and alliance with the United States.

The famine in Asia Minor has been far more destructive than was supposed. Karajali, a town of some 400 inhabitants, has lost 355 by death, and at Akali 500 out of 1,200 people have perished by starvation. In Yuva more than half of the inhabitants have died. This proves how uncivilized people suffer from the exposures of nature and the uncertainties of harvests even in the most genial climates. People groan over the privations and wretchedness of the poor in our great cities, where if one person dies for want of food or fuel in the winter there is no end of rebuke. But scarcely a year passes that a famine does not drop its blight down on some portion of Asia and Africa, and even at the best times, with the richest soils and the fairest climate, the people are often pinched for even the coarsest food.

A negro murderer named Bryan, who was under sentence of death at Morehead City, N. C., has obtained a respite in a singular and unusual manner. The day before the one set for the execution the Sheriff and all the other county officers who were in any degree responsible for the execution of the sentence resigned in a body. The reason given by these officials for the non-execution of the death penalty is that the negro criminal belonged in Orleans county, and not in their (Carteret) county, whither his case had been removed and tried. The Governor had, on this account, to postpone the execution to the 3rd of September, when a new Sheriff and county officers will be elected.

POLITICAL MEMORANDA.

It is a coincidence, perhaps, that the two men who were elected Vice-Presidents when Mr. Lincoln was elected President—Hannibal Hamlin and Andrew Johnson—are now members of the Senate.

It is stated that the friends of ex-Senator Patterson, of New Hampshire, are about to take steps to vindicate him in relation to the Credit-Mobilier matter. Some new facts have come to light confirming the assertion of his entire innocence.

Thurlow Weed has been interviewed by a correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer on the Presidential prospects for 1876. He is reported to have said: "Your party (Democratic) might obtain the power in 1876 if it had good leaders. I can't, however, discover any within it."

Chicago Tribune: "When A. J. and B. B. heard of the Hon. J. Proctor Knott's lecture on 'The Model Statesman,' a blush suffused their cheeks, and they looked at each other with that benevolent expression which often accompanies conscious but modest superiority."

The Utica Herald expresses the belief that the Speakership of the next House of Representatives lies between Messrs. Randall and Wood; that Mr. Kerr, of Indiana, will become Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and Mr. Cox of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, while the chairmanship of the Committee on Appropriations will lie between Swann, of Maryland, Hancock, of Texas, and Lamar, of Mississippi.

The act under which the North Carolina Constitutional Convention is to be elected requires every delegate to bind himself by oath not to help incorporate in the new instrument any clause impairing the operation of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth or Fifteenth Amendments to the Federal Constitution, or the reconstruction acts, nor any provision looking to payment for emancipated slaves, or in any way recognizing the rebel debt, or abridging the term of office of any of the present State officers.

During the Senatorial contest in West Virginia, Maj. Hotchkiss, of Staunton, made a sensible speech. He said: "Gentlemen—If no one will make a speech I will, and I will stop when I get done. Citizens of West Virginia, if you would all take the same interest in developing the resources of your country by opening your rich mines, cultivating the soil, improving your stock and cultivating habits of industry, that you take hunting public offices for yourselves or friends, you would soon have one of the first and best States in the Union."

The Washington correspondent of the New York Graphic writes: "Speaker Blaine is a large-sized, determined, healthy, muscular man, and the back hair of the clerks who sat in front of him is filled with chips that flew from the bodies of his ivory mallets. He always preserved order when he started to do it, for he meant business if the desk had to go. He was a model Speaker, for he never got tired. He loved his neighbor, for he always told him to sit down when he should know enough to sit down and stop talking loud, and in this consisted good advice that was appreciated."

A Washington letter-writer says of the two New York Senators: "The most striking and engaging of the new acquaintances is Kernan, of New York. I hate to admit it—but if truth does not prevail in the correspondents' gallery where shall the weary seek it? New York possesses the two fine-looking men of the Senate. If common repute be not a jade, that State is likely to also own the two chieftains of the body. Conkling's mastery of the radical side is undisputed. He is the big, bright, handsome boy on the back forms, and the remaining Republicans are his abject tags. Kernan comes accredited with the ability which should give him the control of the opposition. He has all of Conkling's strong points, with genialty added. It is odd that the "coincidence" hunters do not dwell more upon the fact that New York, largest and grandest of commonwealths, furnishes the two powerful men of the Senate, and picks them both from a small inland city—Utica—whose population covers in the neighborhood of only 30,000."

A New Hampshire grade Durham cow has produced in 200 days four tons and 800 pounds of milk.

INDIANA NEWS.

INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS.

Citizens of this State have recently secured patents on inventions and improvements, as follows: Congress gaiters, J. W. Tutewiler, Indianapolis; awnings, C. J. Trumper; machines for crushing coke, C. Glazier, Indianapolis; corn drills, J. B. Ludlow, Muncie; millstone balances, J. A. Althouse, New Harmony; bed-bottoms, E. W. Tucker, Indianapolis; shoes, Achilles Ballard, Dublin.

Mr. Isom Ross, of Jefferson county, is planting 2,000 honey locust trees on the hillside of his grounds in the "Irish Hollow."

The Terre Haute Journal advances the opinion that the decrease of the Wabash river is owing in a large degree to the drainage in recent years of what has been known as the Great [illegible] Swamp of Indiana. This extensive swamp, which covers a large extent of country in the northeastern portion of this State, extending also into Ohio, has formed a sort of reservoir for the reception of water, whence it has been given off in gradual and regular supplies to the head-waters of the Wabash, which was the principal stream fed by it. The draining of this great swamp, undertaken as a matter of private enterprise for the purpose of reclaiming the land, has been so far successful that the contents of the swamp are now principally discharged through a canal into the Maumee river, instead of, as formerly, being fed out to the Wabash.

DEATHS.

Asa May, an old citizen, died suddenly in the City Treasurer's office of Lafayette, on Thursday, while transacting some business. He was one of the oldest men in the city, being over 81 years of age.

Marion county mourns the loss of two of its most esteemed citizens—Obadiah Harris, aged 86 years, and Judge Daniel B. Smith, aged 73 years, both of whom were among the oldest settlers of the State.

D. B. Hunt, an old citizen, connected with the advertising and real estate business, was found dead in the canal at Indianapolis, last week. Whether his death was accidental, or whether he was murdered or committed suicide, has not transpired.

LEGAL.

The Indiana Legislature is prone to make fine distinctions. It seems that the law recently passed prohibiting the sale of "deadly weapons and ammunition" to minors does not interfere with the sale of powder, shot and caps, but only of manufactured cartridges for guns and pistols.

It has just transpired that a bill, originating in the House and passed by both bodies of the Legislature, became a law by the statute of limitation, without the Governor knowing of its existence until it was too late for him to either approve or veto it. The document referred to was an act authorizing County Commissioners of the several counties of this State to purchase books, stationery and other articles for the several county officers, and for the conduct of public business, defining penalties and prescribing punishment for violations of the provisions of the act. The act has now become a law, attached to which is a two-line explanatory note from the Private Secretary to the effect that this bill was delivered to the Governor on Monday, March 15, 1875, and not before.

CASUALTIES.

The burning of Dolson's flour mill, at Frankfort, causing a loss of $15,000, was one of those pieces of stupid carelessness which have no excuse. The mill was an old, dry, frame structure. The Crescent says: "The occasion of the fire, it is thought, was from a lot of ashes, dirt, and clinkers that had been taken out when cleaning the flue in the afternoon, and thrown against the side of the building."

While a party at Indianapolis were engaged in firing a salute in honor of the Democratic victory in Connecticut, the gun was prematurely exploded on the nineteenth round, injuring William Petrie in a terrible manner. Part of one of his hands was blown off, and he was shockingly burned about the breast and face. Both his eyes are supposed to be destroyed. It is possible that he may recover.

On Tuesday morning, about daylight, the body of Peter Doge, Sr., an old resident of Jefferson township, was found in the cana about three miles from Fort Wayne. Some one had placed an obstruction upon the tow-path to prevent parties from driving thereon, and it is supposed that Doge attempted to pass the obstruction, upsetting his wagon into the canal. When found, Mr. Doge lay in the water, covered completely by the overturned wagon, with a frightful gash in his head, evidently caused by striking a large stone where he lay. The blow no doubt caused his death, or he would have been able to get out of the water.

CRIME.

Samuel Irvin, of Jefferson township, Elkhart county, was found dead beside the railroad track one morning of last week, buried nearly all over in a snow bank. He had left Elkhart the night preceeding in company with a man by the name of McGeary. Both were under the influence of liquor. McGeary has been arrested, and the case is to be judicially investigated.

PERSONAL.

S. T. Powell has resigned his position as Supervisor of Internal Revenue for the States of Indiana and Ohio. He holds the office until June 30.

RAILROADS.

Frankfort declines to give $30,000 to aid the narrow-guage railroad from the Mississippi river to the Atlantic ocean. The Crescent says: "If the road is built at all it will probably be carried to Kirklin, ten miles northeast of Frankfort. The probable reason for the failure was that the confidence in the building of the road was not such as would induce careful men to invest money."

Many scalpers, hotel-keepers and others in Chicago, who purchased Baltimore and Ohio tickets when the reduction was first made, fearing that the war is to continue for too great a length of time, are now anxious to dispose of those "cheap tickets," and it is said that instead of attempting to sell to passengers they are going down to Lake (just over the State line in Indiana) and demanding their money back from the company, taking advantage of the new Indiana law, which compels railroad companies to receive tickets back and refund the full amount paid for them.

MISCELLANEOUS.

In the courts at South Bend, recently, Sam B. Collins, of Laporte, entered suit for an injunction to restrain Josephine Drollinger, his divorced wife, and W. F. George from making sales of his so-called opium antidote, and also that they be restrained from using a list of names of his patients alleged to have been surreptitiously obtained. The case is an exceptional one as regards the right of a divorced wife to the use of a valuable secret belonging to her former husband. The court enjoined defendants from the use of the names of patients, but held that the divorced wife might rightfully use her knowledge of the "cure" precisely as she might any other intelligence of value taught to her by him.

The proof-reader of the Indianapolis Sentinel left his desk the other night and went to the spelling-match. While he was gone the following telegram was given out to be put in type: "A dispatch from New Bedford, Mass., says the banking-house of S. P. Burt has suspended. Liabilities, $300,000; assets, $150,000." The telegram appeared in next morning's Sentinel in this shape: "The Newfoundland boarding-house of S. P. Hurt & Co., has suspended. Liabilities, $300,000; assets, $450,000."

Indiana postal matters: Established—Liberty Center, Wells county, Samuel J. Jackson, Postmaster. Discontinued—Toto, Stark county. Postmasters Appointed—Ashley's Mills, Montgomery county, Isaac E. Waddle; Bowling Green, Clay county, Lewis W. Rice; Columbia, Fayette county, John H. Sterrett; Hawkins, Jay county, Reuben Jellison; Hermann, Ripley county, Henry Klintwort; Hunterstown, Allen county, John C. Hunter; Lake Cicott, Cass county, Jesse Lazenby; Leavenworth, Crawford county, Emanuel B. Hawn; Marshfield, Warren county, Benjamin A. Jones; Morristown, Shelby county, Elbert Tyner; Spiceland, Henry county, J. W. Fawcett; Sulphur Hill, Shelby county, John T. Conger; Sulphur Well, Crawford county, Edward Perkins; Waverly, Morgan county, Francis M. Fields.

An Indianapolis fire company had its house furnished with a billiard table, whereon ye fire laddies were wont to manipulate the ivory spheres when not otherwise engaged. And now the stern city fathers have ordered the table to be removed, an order the firemen are not at all inclined to obey.

The Deaf and Dumb Asylum investigation committee, appointed by Gov. Hendricks at the suggestion of the late Legislature, have submitted their report to the Governor. The document is a long one, and not only exonerates Superintendent McIntyre and others of the Board of Managers from all charges preferred in the anonymous letter which gave rise to the investigation, but compliments the management for their efficiency and integrity.

The Oldest Congressmen Now Living.

The Hon. Horace Binney, aged 95, of Philadelphia, Pa., was born in that city Jan. 4, 1780. He represented Pennsylvania in Congress from 1833 to 1835.

The Hon. Willard Hall, of Wilmington, Del., was born in Massachusetts, Dec. 24, 1780, thus making him 94 years. He is the oldest in point of service, having served in Congress, from Delaware, from 1817 to 1821.

The Hon. Artemus Hale, of Bridgewater, Mass., is in his 92d year, having been born in that State Oct. 20, 1783. He was a member of Congress from Massachusetts from 1845 to 1849.

The Hon. Perkins King, aged 91, of Cairo, Greene county, N. Y., is a native of Massachusetts, where he was born Jan. 12, 1784. He represented New York in Congress from 1829 to 1831.

The Hon. Joseph Johnson, of Bridgeport, W. V., in his 90th year, was born in Orange county, N. Y., Dec. 19, 1785. He represented Virginia in Congress from 1823 to 1825, from 1835 to 1841 and 1845 to 1847.

The Hon. George Grennell, of Greenfield, Mass., in his 89th year, was born in that State Dec. 25, 1786. He was a member of Congress from Massachusetts from 1829 to 1839.

The Hon. Joseph Grinnell, of New Bedford, Mass., in his 87th year, was born in Massachusetts, No, 17, 1788; he was a member of Congress from 1843 to 1851.

The Hon. Daniel Sturgeon, of Uniontown, Pa., in his 86th year, having been born Oct. 27, 1789, was a United States Senator from Pennsylvania from 1840 to 1851.

A New Postal Burden.

The provisions which, at the very end of the recent session of Congress, Senator Hamlin, of Maine, succeeded in foisting upon an appropriation bill to double the rates of postage upon all matter of third class, usually called "transient," has awakened intense indignation in every part of the country, and among all classes of people. And this indignation is just, whether viewed in its relation to the provision itself or to the way in which its passage is understood to have been secured.

The new law, while it will increase the profits of the express companies, imposes an onerous burden upon the people, who will demand its repeal at the earliest possible day. It is a law which every citizen will hate, and which must grow more odious with every day's experience. Even if it had been so worded as to double the rates of postage only upon merchandise, it would still have been odious; for the express companies could urge no argument in its favor that would not be equally potent if offered to show that the Postoffices should all be abolished and the business of carrying letters and newspapers confided to themselves. The law as it stood before this change was a great accommodation to the people, and well calculated to make the Postoffice Department popular. The express companies had no legitimate ground of complaint, and Congress should have turned a deaf ear to their insidious pleadings. That any member of Congress sold his vote we do not affirm, but we do say when a great monopoly sends its agents to Washington well supplied with money and succeeds by a trick in getting the legislation it asks for, there is ground for the suspicion that some of our legislators think less of the public welfare than of their own private interest.—Christian Union.

Getting Drunk at Home.—The question as to whether a landlord may get drunk in his own house came before the Magistrate at the Dudley Police Court, in England, the other day, when a publican named Smith was charged with being drunk on his own premises. It appeared from the evidence of a police constable that on paying a visit to the establishment of which Smith is the proprietor, at half-past two in the morning, he found the house open, but no one there except the defendant, who was very drunk and abusive. It was urged on behalf of the defendant that the words of the act, "any person found drunk," did not apply to landlords. The Magistrate dismissed the case.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Watching for Father.

There's a little face at the window,
And two dimpled hands on the pane;
And somebydy's eyes are fixed upon
The gate at the end of the lane.

The hills have caught the shadow
Which heralds the coming night,
And the lane, with its flowery fringe, grows dim
To the watcher's anxious sight.

Where, half way down,
Like a glittering crown,
A firefly band have clustered
Round an aster leaf—
A royal chief—
A driven herd are mustered.

Away behind,
With busy mind,
But a step that is light and free,
And a sunburnt face
On which the trace
Of a hard day's work you see,
Comes the farmer home from toil,
Driving the cows before him;
And the child-eyes, strained at the window there,
Were the first in the house that saw him.

Ah! would, when the day is done
And I leave my cares behind me,
I could have such a pair of winsome eyes
Searching the night to find me!

Around the Farm.

The Rural World says that when sweet potatoes are transported the roots should be puddled in a mortar made of cow-dung and earth about as thick as cream. This prevents wilting and causes a ready growth.

P. L. Calkins, near Iowa City, Iowa, from March 11 to Dec. 31, 1874, made 2,127 pounds of butter from an average of twelve cows, four of them heifers, and five over twelve years of age. During the summer they received no other feed than grass from the prairies. The butter was sold for $638.

Harris Lewis, now President of the New York State Agricultural Society, is known to be a strong advocate of the economy of cultivating root crops. He is reported, after trying numerous varieties, to now cultivate only the Long Red, Ovoid, and Yellow Globe Mangels (giving preference to the Long Red), and the White Sweet German turnips.

At a late meeting of farmers in Massachusetts one man from New Hampshire related his experience with a mare, which had, in nine years, besides paying for her own keeping, and two colts of hers which he still held, enabled him by her colts which he had sold, to pay a $3,500 mortgage on his farm, and also paid the expenses of his son in college.

The following is a striking comparison of the respective interest in sheep industry in the great progressive agricultural nations of the world—England, France, and the United States. The number of acres is given, also the sheep kept:

	Acres.	Sheep.
Great Britain and Ireland....	47,000,000	34,000,000
France........................	95,000,000	27,900,000
United States................	407,735,041	28,477,951

If the United States supported as many sheep per acre as Great Britain, her number of sheep should rise from 28,000,000 to 250,000,000.

Farmers, grade up your stock; if you do not feel able to buy and breed thoroughbred stock, breed your common stock this spring to none but thoroughbred males. Secure the service of some of the thoroughbreds of your neighbors, or procure one of your own or some reliable breeder, and when once you have a lot of grade stock, either cattle, horses, hogs or sheep, you will never raise scrubs again, for farmers raise stock for the purpose of making the most money out of their farms by feeding their crops rather than sell the grain and hay to dealers. Then the kind of stock that will mature the quickest and grow the largest is the most profitable for meat, and it is now no longer a question, but a settled fact, that the grades of common stock crossed with thoroughbreds are more profitable to Western famers than raising scrubs, while first cost of grading up is small compared to the actual profits in dollars and cents. Too many farmers just here are penny-wise and pound-foolish; because they cannot get fine thoroughbred males as cheap as common stock they don't like to make the start—to make the first outlay—but the world moves, and our stock must improve with everything else.—Western Agriculturist.

Domestic Tool-Chests.—Every family should have one of these. It would save much inconvenience and expense, for all small jobs about the house could then be done without sending for an expensive mechanic. The cost of the necessary tools should prevent no one from providing them, as they would pay for themselves in a single year. To begin, there should be a chopping or wood-ax, a hatchet, a saw, a claw hammer, a mallet, several gimlets of different sizes, two augers, say a half inch and an inch, two screw drivers, one large enough to screw up bedsteads, two or three chisels, a small plane, a pair of pincers, a pruning knife, a jack-knife, a pair of shears, one or two files, a carpet stretcher, a ball of twine, etc. There should also be an assortment of nails, from spikes down to small tacks, a few brass-headed nails, screws of various sizes, and the nails and these should be kept in a box, something like carpenters carry, in separate apartments. The tools should be hung up in places marked out for them on a board surface, where there should be an outline of each made, so that, when a tool is done with, it can be returned to the exact place belonging to it. You can always tell, too, when any tool is missing. There should be a tool closet on the ground floor of some part of the house, to contain a wide shelf, under which there should be a suitable drawer to contain all that may be required in the way of light material. No house should be considered complete without such a closet, and they should be provided in building a house. Once accustomed to such a great convenience, no one would do without it.—Germantown Telegraph.

About the House.

Never try to extinguish a kerosene fire with water. Smother the flames with blankets or rugs.

Chloride of calcium or glycerine, added to shoe blacking, will prevent the latter's drying in the box.

The practice of heating milk in water is quite common among the dairywomen of Vermont and New Hampshire, and has been practiced by them from the early days of dairying in that portion of the country.

One cheerful face in a household will keep everything bright and warm within. Envy, hatred, malice, selfishness, despondency, and a host of evil passions, may lurk round the door, they may even look within, but they can never enter and abide there; the cheerful face will put them to shame and flight.

Lamp-chimney Cleaning.—It is, perhaps, not generally known that cleaning lamp chimneys with a rag, on a table-fork, or wire, or something of that sort, will cause them to break on lighting the lamp. The best way is to put the hand on the top, then steam then inside with your breath, then rub with clean paper.

A Good Cake Receipt.—Three cups of sugar, one of butter; beat together, and the yolks of seven eggs well beaten, add one cup of sweet milk, four and a half cups of flour, the whites of seven eggs beaten to a froth, two teaspoonfuls and a half of yeast powder; flavor to suit the taste. This makes nice large cakes.

Recipe for Sponge Cake.—Dissolve three-quarters of a pound of sugar in a gill of cold water, and bring it to a boil. Have the whites of six eggs beaten to a stiff froth. Add then the yolks of six eggs together, beating them thoroughly. Then pour the sugar in very slowly so as not cook the eggs. Stir in one-half pound of flour. If managed rightly this makes a spendid cake.

How to Make a Valuable Recipe Book.—Every housekeeper should have her very own recipe book—a book of her own creation, of gradual growth and proved excellence, and we propose to show our lady readers how to make one. In the first place buy a blank book and write your name and the date on the first leaf. Divide the book into as many different departments as you wish, heading each page with the department to which it belongs, as follows: Recipes for cleaning, recipes for soups, recipes for cooking meats, recipes for cake, and so on through family cooking. Then comes cooking for the sick, care of the sick and all the various things that are a part of a woman's duty, and for which, unfortunately, there is no school but experience. Number your pages if they are not numbered in the beginning, and make an index, leaving blank spaces in the index to correspond with the blank pages between departments which you do not expect to fill immediately. Write down under these different heads every recipe which you have actually tried, or the results of which you have seen in the houses of your friends, and enter the page in the index.

A Terrible Fight.

A terrible fight between a man and a bull-dog took place near Glasgow, Scotland, a short time since, the circumstances of which go to show how human intelligence can debase itself, not to the level of the brute creation, but far below that standard. It is said that such encounters are by no means uncommon in that neighborhood, a statement which we sincerely trust is incorrect.

It seems that two men, whose names are Daniel Shields and Donald Dumbarty, met at a drinking saloon, when the latter commenced to boast of the pluck and powers generally of a dog which he owned, of the bull species. Shields, who was excited by liquor, declared that he could whip the dumb animal with nothing but his fists. Dumbarty very much doubted that, and offered to bet a gallon of whisky that he could not. The talk upon the subject grew warmer and warmer, until several others joined in the matter, and a formal bet as above was arranged. No time, it was declared, was like the present time, and so the fight, it was resolved, should come off at once. Dumbarty went home for his dog, while all the interested parties adjourned to a secluded spot not far away. Here an arena was marked out, and the preliminaries arranged in the most formal manner, the rules of the prize ring being adopted, the same as though two pugilists were to contend for superiority in sparring.

It was not long before Dumbarty appeared with his dog, a medium-sized animal, which he held in restraint until the word was given, when he released him and set the animal at Shields. The latter stood alone in the middle of the ring, and the dog, seeming to understand perfectly what was expected of him, leaped forward and sprang at Shields' throat, but was received in mid-air with a blow straight from the shoulder, taking him between his throat and jaw with such force as to send the dog high in the air and over the heads of the bystanders. An opening was made in the ring, and the dog rushed back toward Shields. This time the man was the attacking party, and meeting the animal before he could spring upon him from the ground, Shields kicked him with his heavy brogan shoes, so as to send him once more like a foot-ball into the air, and, as was afterward found, breaking one of the animal's ribs. But the dog never uttered a cry. He was "grit" all through.

The instinct of the animal now taught him caution, and in place of springing recklessly at his enemy a third time, he came forward cautiously, and watched his chance to spring upon Shields without exposing himself to the same sort of catastrophe which he had experienced. If he could once fix his jaws upon the man's body—that was his natural game. This time the dog jumped on the one side and the other, avoiding the approach of Shields, until by a sudden movement he jumped forward and fixed his teeth in the upper part of the man's hip. It was a terrible grip, and bull-dogs are proverbial for holding on when they once get their jaws fixed upon an enemy. The man had a big quid of tobacco in his mouth, and by bending down his head succeeded in expectorating nearly half a gill of the strongest kind of tobacco saliva through the dog's jaws into his throat, at the same time seizing one of the fore-paws, biting it through so as to nearly sever it from the limb. The tobacco-juice nearly choked the animal to death, to say nothing of his paw, the most sensitive part of a dog's body, and he slunk away.

It was none too soon, for Shields was bleeding profusely from the frightful wound in his thigh, some artery having been severed, and he soon became partially insensible. He was conducted to the hospital, and properly resuscitated by surgical aid. It was a pretty costly gallon of whisky for the winner.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN INDIANA, APRIL 15, 1875

☞The election in Evansville, Ind. last Tuesday resulted in a complete Democratic triumph. This is one of the close cities of the State and its politics in general elections frequently has a decided effect on the Legislature

☞The result of the municipal election in Cincinnati are rather disheartening to those republicans who has bets out that Ohio will wheel into ranks of the faithful in October next. As an indictor of republican victories next fal', the Connecticut election is likewise most unsatisfactory.

☞The saintly and philosophoar Erasmus once said that "that which is properly our own must be procured by our own labor," and one can fully realize the truth of this when he sees a stalwart, robust man patiently devoting himself to the task of licking the uncancelled postage stamp off a letter which he just received.

☞Amid the crash of matter and the wreck of worlds the grand old State of Rogues' Island, which requires men to own property before they can vote, which polls fewer votes than Cincinnati, and which is owned body and branches by the Tariffites and Cotton lords stands by the republican party. The hope of a Third Term is not dead yet.

☞Chicago's last sensation was the imprisonment of W. F. Storey, editor of the Times, for contempt of court. He was snatched for ten days, and his attempt consisted in his recent attack upon the grand jury while in session After Storney had been incarcerated in jail about ten hours he walked out on a supersaedeas, granted by Judge McAllister, of Supreme Court.

☞Rhode Island has actually gone republican, and that talk about the tidal wave will all have to be gone over again. However, it may be interesting to note that the little state has never missed returning a republican majority since 1852. Indeed there is no possibility of a change, as there is no room for two political parties in so small a state. The republicans have got the standing room and they cannot be ousted.

☞The importance of the splendid Democratic triumph in the Connecticut election can hardly be overestimated when we consider its effect on the politics of the country. At the New Hampshire election of one month ago the Democrats gained one Congressman but lost the Legislature and that body will probably elect a Republican Governor. At best the result was a drawn battle but the Republican generally claimed a victory and put in the plea that the tide which set in against the Republicans last fall had spent its force and turned backward speedily to engulf the victors. The party press and the leaders of the Administration hosts made the most of this version and it undoubtedly had the effect to brace up many Republicans who were commencing to be troubled with weak backs. With the prestige which they attained from New Hampshire the Administration forces went into the Connecticut campaign with alacrity and with assurance of success, backed by all the power which the Federal patronage and a free use of money would give them. A straight out and out party fight was made. For Governor the party nominated Mr. Greene, who is the Mayor of the city of Norwich, and who signalized his servility to party and to the Administration of officially ordering a salute of one hundred guns to be fired in honor of Sheridan's late raid on the Louisiana Legislature and the indorsement of the same by the President. It will be remembered that since that time the Republican United States Senate formally indorsed the action of the President and fully committed the party to that infamous policy. The Democrats accepted the issue squarely and the campaign was fought chiefly on the Southern question. The defeat of the Republicans was so overwhelming that it points as a fixed finger-board to the rout of the Administration hosts in the Presidential contest next year. It shows that the hearts of the people do not beat in sympathy with the plans to oppress the Southern people and prolong the era of misrule which the ascendancy of the Republican party will surely fasten upon the country. It shows too, that Connecticut is distinctly a Democratic State.

NATIONAL REUNION OF THE NORTHERN AND SOUTHERN ARMIES.

By the action of the gentlemen in charge of the arrangements for the forthcoming soldiers' reunion in this city, this post-bellum reunion business has at last been placed where it will do the most good. General Stiles proposed that the invitations be extended to "all surviving soldiers of the late war throughout the country—east, west, north and south." The proposition was favored by General Cameron, Col. Rickaby, Capt. Laughlin, and the mover, and was adopted, with an amendment proposed by Gen. Julius White, in the following form:

"Resolved. That a general invitation be extended to all surviving soldiers and sailors of the late war, throughout the country, who regard the flag of the United States as the emblem of undivided and indivisible nationality, to meet with us at our forthcoming reunion, and that the committee on invitations be instructed to extend personal invitations, as far as practicable, to such of them as in the judgement of the committee have national reputation as soldiers."

It is a significant fact that this resolution was adopted without dissent. It is plainly an indication that, among men who saw actual service at least, the animosities of the war have substantially subsided. Professional politicians there are, and probadly always will be, who seek to profit upon the capital of hate: but the infinitessimal trace of soul that a proper analysis might discover in a professional "home guard" politician is a very different thing from that by which men are inspired who have stood under fire.

The spirit that would seek to promote the division of the American people into hostile castes is simple detestible. It is neither patriotic, politic, nor ware. That which makes America one nation, "undivisible," is not unity of mere constitutional forms; it is the unity of character and aspiration found in one people. There is no magic power in political forms, nor in any possible arrangements of government machinery, that can make one nation of a people not inspired by the sentiment of a common nationality. Constitutions may declare who are citizens; political agencies may provide guarantees for the immunities of citizenship; but neither, nor both together, can create nationality. The Scandinavina, the Teuton, and the Celt many become American citizens by the formal process of naturalization, and may be made members of electoral body by statutory enactment: but that which will alone make them true members of an American nationality is that will divest them of a national character distinctly Scandinavian or German or Irish. This cannot be done by paper constitutions, nor by any possible acts of government. The same political arrangements may embrace two or three separate and distinct nationalities, as the case is under the British constitution, and also under our own. The Irishman on his own island is an English citizen; but he will not be of the English nationality. The German and the Irishman, naturalized in the United States, are American citizens; but as a rule they decline to be of the American nationality until the second or third generation. They somehow prefer to be Germans and Irishmen; and all the dirty political demagogues prefer that they should be, too. They ask to be American officeholders, not because they are part of the American nation, but because they are parts of German and an Irish nation; and the dirty demagogues tell them that they should be American officeholders for that strange reason. In like manner is it with those who would keep open a "bloody chasm" between Americans that pointed their guns north and Americans that pointed their guns south. They are all American citizens, they must all live under the same policy; but, say the demagogues, we will not meet them on the basis of a common nationality, nor invite them to meet us.—Chicago Times.

NO MIDDLE MEN with us; this is the secret of our immense trade. We buy at first hands and sell direct to the consumer; hence, we save our customers the profits of the speculator, jobber and wholesale merchants. These profits amount to from 10 to 20 per cent. Our customers get the benefit of them. Take Teas, for instance, the profits on that article are so great that the price is often doubled before it reaches the consumer. Every time it changes hands there is 10 to 20c. per pound added to it. This, of course, the consumer has to pay. Of course the retailer will endeavor to persuade you that his Teas are worth the money, that they cost him so and so. Well, this is all true but the trouble is he has paid too much in the first place and can't help himself. He purchases from the wholesale grocer, and the wholesale grocer has to add his 20c. All these extra profits our customers get the benefit of, and it is just the same as Coffees, Sugars, Spices, Canned Goods, Oysters, &c., as on Teas. No Middle Men with us. They would starve to death if they had to live on the profits they make of us.

Call and see it at Beuret's store, near the old postoffice building.

The dry goods store of Wm. Richmond has been removed to the business room recently occupied by S. Lauferty in the clothing line. The establishment is superintended by G. W. Young Esq., an experienced dry goods man, who is ably assisted by our genial and clever friend Tom. Scott, New goods are now being received and a fine display can now be seen on the counters, at lowest prices

There is a very fine perodical published in St. Joseph, Mich., and several of our citizens subscribed for it. It is to contain a fine chromo of Auburn with a full historical description. An agent lifted $2.50 from each subscriber nearly two months ago, but a copy of said publication has not come to hand yet. But, of course, its coming. Did'nt the agent say so. One or two are getting a little shaky and think they have been swindled.

Ladies and Gentlemen, we call your attention to the Large Stock of Goods at Harry Stamets' Fancy Store in Ensley block. You will miss a good bargain if you don't buy of Harry.

As we were passing up Calhoun street to-day, we were suddenly blinded by the flash of—something, we knew not what. Instinctively, we raised our hand to shut out the marvellous brilliancy, and when we opened our eyes again Tom Mays stood before us—that diamond pin glistening and shimmering like a meteoric spark.—Ft. Wayne News.

We have seen several persons who could not see well, and it was'nt exactly a diamond pin that done it, either. Of course, we do not mean to insinuate.

In a little drive over town the other day we were surprised at the great amount of improvement going on. There is scarcely a locality, but what can be found a number of new buildings in various stages of construction from the laying of the foundation to the plastering inside. We thought our place did well last year, but this season will eclipse all former efforts in this direction. New additions are being laid out, and the work of enlarging and beautifying our alrerdy handsome place, goes bravely on.

We had to laugh, last Saturday, at a country fellow, who misunderstood the "King of Pain Man," and thought he offered four bottles for nothing, when he said, "who'll take these four." The fellow braced up to the wagon, took the four bottles and started off. The Medicine Man cried out, "Hold on, one dollar, sir," and the man handed them back, looking sad and sorry, as he wanted them, he said to give his mother-in-law, for she would certainly talk herself out of her grave if he did'nt get some kind of killer on the inside of the woman.

Mike Long's little daughter has been quite sick for several days past.

John Somers has purchased the south forty acres of Mr. Baker, east of Cedar Creek, and will lay the same off in town lots immediately. This will make a fine addition to our town for residences and we believe there will be quite a demand for them. They will be near the center of town and will be sold at reasonable rates. Secure one before they are all gone.

We stood on the well scared battlements of old Fort Sumpter, while at Charleston, and found it much as we expected a fine old fortress, notwithstanding its brick and mortar. The side facing Morris Island was pretty well shattered with the bombardment by Gen. Gillmore during nearly two years' seige, but a small appropriation made each year by Congress is getting it in pretty good shape again

The Fort Wayne News wants old ex-Mayor Sharpe, Rep. nominated this year for the same year. A half century ago this man Sharp dodged into the position through the bickerings of the Democracy, and every since that eventful period he has been a standing candidate for the Radicals to look upon and contemplate. We don't think it is Sharp (e) at all. If you want to know the lucky man, ask the next Democratic City Convention.

Houses for rent, are in great demand in Auburn. It took us a week to find a spot to rest our weary head. Behold the fowls of the air, they toil not, neither do they spin (we quote from memory) yet they don't have to hunt for houses to live in, and sometimes we wish we were a bird on this account. Rents are very reasonable too, we could not rent a house in New York city for the same price we do here.

Excursion Notes.

There was a good deal of inquiry made on the route as to whether a northern man would be treated well were he to remove south and engage in business, not office hunting. There was but one answer and few in our party but what felt that it was a true one. Everywhere the citizens were anxious to show up the best features of their locality, that we might go home and say to our readers that such and such points were good ones for northern emigration. Society, which a few years ago looked down upon labor, has undergone a radical change, and to-day a farmer, in a large portion of the south, is thought as much of as those in the north.

While in Florida we were [illegible] reception at Tallahassee, and to give an idea of how they feel down there we give an extract below from the speech on that occasion by Ex-Gov. Bloxham:

"With a soil unsurpassed and a climate that has properly caused our State to be designated the "Italy of America," the emigrant can only be solicitous as to the "sentiments of the people" or the welcome he will receive. Animosities engendered by hotly-contested political conflicts, have, unfortunately, produced in some sections of the south criminations and recriminations, which have been seized hold of by the political demagogue to agitate the popular mind in the north in a manner prejudicial to our prosperity.

Florida, fortunately, is more favored.—A Republican Governor, differing in political sentiment from myself and our old citizens, but animated and actuated by a patriotic desire for the welfare of his adopted State, bears noble and truthful testimony in his official documents to the peace and kind feeling that reigns supreme within our limits. Life, liberty and property are as well protected in Florida to-day as in a northern state. We have no harrowing recollections of the past. Planting ourselves upon the broad basis of progress, we ask only, in a national point of view, for a Union of equal States under the Constitution. We desire that the masses of your people should understand us We ask you, gentlemen editors, to lend a helping hand to secure that understanding. Three years ago, when our country, from Maine to Texas, was shaken by a great political conflict, what was the position of the South? We raised the name of a life-long opponent as our standard bearer. And why? Not that we loved Mr. Greeley, great and good as he was—our hearts leaned more fondly to Indiana's distinguished statesman, your own noble Hendricks—but we desire to tender the olive branch to the north thro' our sternest opponent in days gone by, thinking that such a channel would be taken as a token of our desire for peace, and as an evidence of the fidelity of the tender. We to-day accept the Constitution of our common country, giving full force to all its amendments; we extend freely equal rights to all classes, regardless of previous condition; we extend a hearty welcome to all strangers, and a God-speed to every settler who desires to become one in our State—whether they flee from the despotisms of the Old World or the ice bound regions of the north—we welcome them with open arms and a generous clasp of the hand to the sunny glades of our own Floridas. What more can you ask? What more do you desire You are too noble to ask, we have too much self-respect to grant, that we should go to the grave of our Lee and his splendid followers, and write traitor upon their foreheads; palsied be the tongue that would request it. But while we kneel at his grave, with almost the reverence of idolatry, we still accord equal sentiments of patriotic promptings to those noble dead of your own army, and while we give "tears of love for the gray" we also extend "love and tears to the blue;" and to-day, should any foreign power be so reckless as to force upon us a trial of arms, you would find the southern soldiery rallying with unabated ardor 'round the stars and stripes, and the same devotion and valor displayed as when years ago the northern and southern soldiers marched shoulder to shoulder, and carried our eagles in triumph at Buena Vista and Chapultepec, and into the glittering halls of the once noble Montezumas.

Let us forget that we ever had a civil war; let us obliterate it from the tablets of our memory, and remember only that we are all Americans—a proud passport throughout the civilized world.

But, gentlemen, while giving you a cordial welcome, do not consider me partial when I bid thrice welcome to your fair companions. Woman stands the fairest incarnation of the spirit of love and liberty that vivifies the universe. Her tender hand moulds the plastic mind of the infant man; our support in youth, our solace in manhood, the guardian angel of our declining years. And while Florida boasts, and proudly boasts, of the beauty and accomplishments of her fair daughters, the light of our firesides, the idol of our hearts—still we are always more than happy to pluck fair flowers from our sister States and transfer them to our genial clime.

There is a good deal of Complaint about the fact that the Courier does not arrive at Fairfield Center on time. The package leaves here on Thursday, reaching Waterloo at about 12 o'clock M.—There is certainly time to get it into the mail going west from that point in the afternoon. If it gets to Sedan on Thursday it surely ought to go to the Center in the mail Friday morning. We have never yet failed to send it on time from the office, and it goes north every Thursday. This we are certain of. If it fails to reach its destination on time the fault lies either with postmasters or route agt's We hope its delay will not occur again.—If it does we propose to know where the trouble is, and our friends at the Center will please let us know the first time it fails to come on time.

Opening of First National Bank of Auburn.

Yesterday the First National Bank of Auburn was opened for the transaction of business. President Lanning, Sec'y Hazzard, assisted by Geo. Hazzard, Esq. of New Castle, and Thos. Newby, of Cambridge, both experienced bankers, being present, the books were opened and the institution put in running order.

The necessary deposit has been made at Washington, and the bank notes will be on hand next week. About $5,000 have already been deposited in the mammoth safe, and we have no doubt but that a [illegible] will find this the safest and best method of securing their surplus capital.

The safe is a model piece of mechanicism, weighs 20000 pounds, and is perfectly burglar and fire proof. It requires the opening of five combination locks before the money can be reached, so that it is simply impossible for any party, not understanding the combination, to get at it.

It was deemed best to establish a National Bank because of the confidence our people have in this greenback currency. There is a security about it by this system of deposit at Washington before you can get a circulating medium, that commends it to the most careful, and we believe it will prove a great advantage to our citizens in the county. Of course its not expected that a bank will be established in our midst to accommodate the public without looking to its own interests but those connected therewith do not propose to be extortionable, by asking a half per cent. per month more interest than money is worth.

The bank is now ready to issue drafts, bills of exchange, and make loans at a reasonable per cent. For the present the bank is located in the building west of Fluke's corner, formerly occupied as a drug store.

A Ride With a Kuklux.

The Fort Wayne Sentinel dishes up the bowie knife and revolver scene, that took place among the Southern excursionists, on the cars between Jackson and Montgomery, Ala. We give below an extract therefrom, but the first rendition of the affair is told by our genial friend John Hanly, Esq., who perhaps appreciated the circumstances more fully than any other one present. A tall Mississippian stepped aboard the train and entered the smoking car, the other being filled with excursionists. He accordingly took a cushion from the seat in front of him, placed it under his head, a second one serving as a soft rest for his No. 15 brogans. He soon fell asleep and became obvious to everything surrounding. Two of the excursionists came in while he was yet slumbering, and, not wanting to sit down on the empty framework of a seat, looked around for the cushion.

They espied it under the feet of the "native."

Not wanting to waken him for so trivial a matter, they quickly took away the cushion, sat down upon it, and began a lively conversation.

They were not permitted to enjoy it long, and, together with the others in the car, were suddenly called to a realizing sense of things by the southron, who jumped up from his recumbent posture, and drawing a "navy" from each of two separate hip pockets, said in thunder tones, "whare's the sun of a gun that took that thar cushing?"

The southron was a tall fellow, well built, and could pull down the scales at 250 or over, and not half try.

As he gazed around on the excursionists and carelessly handled the two revolvers, he looked like a person "meaning business."

Again he murmured, like a cooing dove "I'd like to see that d—n son of a gun that took those cushings."

He intimated, "that ef that thar cuss'd show up, he'd be eternally gol swizzled ef he wouldn't make mince meat on him quicker'n a ring tailed monkey'd chew a walnut."

Even if this pleasant prospect held out, no one offered to state he or she "had tuk those cushings." In fact everybody was intent on reducing themselves to the smallest compass possible, and getting out of range of the revolvers. After haven tilated his opinion regarding the persons around him in general and the one who "tuk those cushings" in particular the hero of the hour settled down into his seat.

Our informant states that he was expecting this walking armory would suddenly place his hand at the back of his neck, draw out a bowie knife and put it between his teeth, preparatory to beginning a general slaughter. As there were only about three pistols owned by the party conjointly, he thought the condition of affairs not encouraging.

Whatever might have been the intentions of this whole souled, chivalrous, high-toned southron, he did not clamor any longer for blood, but merely sat gripping his trusty weapons; perhaps hoping that in an unguarded moment somebody would, so to speak, knock the chip off his shoulder. The party who had designed and executed the briliant idea of taking "those cushings" stepped across the aisle to the southron, and explained matters.

He said "he ment no offence—there wasn't any other cushion around, and, seeing that one, took it; didn't suppose it would interfere with the gentleman's comfort," etc., etc., etc.

The response to this was somewhat similar the first outbreak:

"Why in—didn't you say so afore, ef you was that thar feller?"

As a fitting answer to this didn't then occur, the gentleman said nothing in particular, but, with the others in the car, awaited for the carnage to begin.

The exponent of chivalry seemed to think better of it, however, and put up his revolvers, at the same time pulling out a pocket-pistol. This he offered to the man "that tuk those cushings," who eagerly cemented the sudden friendship by a generous draught of corn-juice.

RANDALL—LONG—At the residence of the bride's parents, on last Sabbath, by Rev. Wm. Long, Mr. W. L. Randall and Miss Adah Long.

The above affair created no little excitement in fashionable circles, and quite a number of the friends of the happy couple were present to witness the ceremony. We got in about a minute too late for the nuptial ceremony, but made good time with the cake and lemenade so liberally dispensed. We offer our congratulations to the happy couple and wish them prosperity in the journey before them. May their's be a life of few dark days with many golden ones, happy, joyous, peaceful, extending far into the eventful future.

CAPTURE OF BURGOYNE.

[The following curious satirical effusion was written and published shortly after the event it relates to.]

Here followeth the direful fate
Of Burgoyne and his army great,
Who so proudly did display
The terrors of despotic sway.
His power and pride and many threats
Have been brought low by fortunate Gates,
To bend to the United States.

British prisoners by Convention,	2,442
Foreigners by Contra-vention,	2,198
Tories sent across the Lake,	1,100
Burgoyne and his suite, in state,	12
Sick and wounded, bruised and pounded, Ne'er so much before confounded,	528
Prisoners of war before Convention,	400
Deserters come with kind intention,	300
They lost at Bennington's great battle, Where Stark's glorious arms did rattle,	1,220
Kill'd in September and October,	600
Ta'en by brave Brown, some drunk, some sober,	413
Slain by high-famed Herkerman, On both flanks, on rear and van,	300
Indians, settlers, butchers, drovers, Enough to crowd large plains all over, And those whom grim death did prevent From fighting against our Continent, And also those who stole away, Lest they down their arms should lay, Abhorring that obnoxious day;	4,413
The whole make fourteen thousand men, Who may not with us fight again.	14,000

This is a pretty just account
Of Burgoyne's legions' whole amount,
Who came across the Northern Lakes
To desolate our happy States.
Their brass cannons we have got all
Fifty-six—both great and small;
And ten thousand stand of arms,
To prevent all future harms;
Stores and implements complete,
Of workmanship exceeding neat;
And proper harness, no way scanty.
Among our prisoners there are
Six Generals of fame most rare;
Six members of their Parliament,
Reluctantly they seem content;
Three British Lords, and Lord Belcarras
Who came, our country free to harass,
Two Baronets of high extraction
Were sorely wounded in the action.

THE LEGACY HUNTERS.

It was Abigail Varley's threescore-and-tenth birthday. She was a rich widow, childless, and with no known relations save two gentlemen cousins.

Never was cousinly attachment more beautifully illustrated, or cousinly jealousy less amiably exemplified, than in the daily walk and conversation of these two collateral kinsmen. They bestowed so much affection on their common relative, that they had none left to waste between themselves.

Both were several years younger than the lady, with a fair prospect, according to the course of nature, of surviving her; and how to supplant each other in her will, which she had at last begun to talk seriously of making, was the problem which at present engaged their attention.

On the morning in question, when Cousin Roger called to wish Cousin Abigail the usual "many happy returns," he was not a little chagrined to find Cousin Dick there before him. However, he presented his annual gift, and went through his annual speech without missing a word; and seeing Tabby, the cousinly cat, perched snugly on his rival's knee, by way of not being outdone in cousinly attention, he took up Pompey, the cousinly poodle, though dogs were his abomination.

"Well, Cousin Abigail, I hope your health continues good," said Cousin Roger, patting Pompey's head and glancing suspiciously at Cousin Dick, whom he devoutly wished at Jericho.

"Not so good latterly as it has been. The fact is," the old lady continued, "I have been thinking seriously of sending for Mr. Parker, with a view to settling my worldly affairs without delay."

"Oh, there is no need of haste, cousin," broke in Dick; "you have many years before you yet;" mentally adding, "What has possessed the old ninny to put it off so long?"

"Well, well, I suppose there's no hurry about it," said Cousin Abigail.

"And yet," Cousin Roger ventured to hint, "it is always well to be prepared; none of us can tell the minute or the hour, you know."

"And, after all, calling in a lawyer is not so serious a matter as calling in a doctor," said Cousin Dick, facetiously.

The conversation was interrupted by the entrance of a young and beautiful girl, at whom Cousin Dick stared with a surprised and troubled look.

"Pardon me, ma'am," she said, in a voice remarkably sweet and gentle; "not knowing you were engaged, I came to see if you wished me, as usual, to read to you to-day."

"Presently, dear," Mrs. Varley answered, in a tone that plainly hinted her visitors would not be pressed to stay if they offered to go.

After an awkward pause, the two cousins took their departure together.

"Who is that girl?" inquired Roger, as soon as they had reached the street.

"You may well ask," said Cousin Dick; and, stooping, he whispered something in his companion's ear, at which the latter started suddenly.

"Good heaven! the resemblance is certainly striking. But what is to be done? Do you think the old—Cousin Abigail, I mean, suspects anything?"

"Not yet, I think; but no time is to be lost. I have a plan which it would be well for us to talk over together."

And the two hurried rapidly along.

Mrs. Varley had occasionally found time hang heavy on her hands, and so had advertised for a person to fill the post of "companion" to an aged lady. It was thus that Hester Darling had become an inmate of the house.

At as early an hour as was seemly on the morning following that on which we introduced them to the reader, Roger and Dick again presented themselves before their cousin.

"We have thought it our duty, cousin ——," began Dick.

"Our bounden duty," put in Roger.

"As painful as it is imperative," Dick continued.

"To put you on your guard, ma'am," Roger added.

"Against a deceitful and designing person," exclaimed Dick.

"Who is no better than she should be!" shouted Roger, indignantly.

"Upon my word, cousins, I do not comprehend a syllable you have uttered," said Mrs. Varley; "nor shall I be likely to if you both keep talking at once. Come, Dick, you seem least excited. What is the meaning of all this?"

"What means, may I venture to ask," said Dick, "did you take to ascertain the character and antecedents of the young woman at present sheltered beneath your roof?"

"Why, none," replied the good lady. "Her young and truthful face was recommendation enough on which to give her a trial."

"We have ascertained her to be a most abandoned creature," proceeded Dick, "and have deemed it proper at once to apprise you of the discovery. Should she deny the accusation, we are prepared with abundant proofs."

And the two cousins took their leave, with an air of exalted virtue.

Mrs. Varley was a lady of the strictest propriety and severest morals. Much as she pitied the poor and friendless girl, she must be promptly freed from this foul and dreadful charge, or cross her threshold never to return.

She went directly to Hester's chamber.

"You must tell me your past history, child, said Mrs. Varley, in a determined, but not unkindly, tone.

"Oh, madam, I pray you pardon me; but I cannot, cannot tell it!"

"Then it has been one of shame and guilt?"

"For a time, of shame, madam," answered the young girl, with flushed cheek, "but never of guilt."

What was it that caused Mrs. Varley to start so suddenly, and stagger half-fainting to a seat at Hester's dressing-table?

"Who—whose likeness is that?" she exclaimed, in a scarce articulate voice, pointing to an open miniature on the table.

"My mother's," Hester answered.

"Then you are Florence Marvin's child?"

"That was, indeed, my mother's name."

"More, you are the daughter of my only brother, George Haywood, for Florence Marvin was his wife."

With a stifled cry, she who had believed herself alone and friendless in the world, fell on her kinswoman's neck and wept tears of mingled gladness and sorrow.

Her story, which Hester had refused to confide to a stranger's ears, she now willingly imparted to one from whom she felt she had no longer a right to withhold it.

That her brother had married in opposition to her father's wishes, and had been disinherited in consequence, was already known to Abigail Varley; but what distant spot he had selected for his home, and what had befallen him there, she had never learned.

The story was sad enough:

After a few toilsome, but not unhappy, years—for they were spent in the loved society of his wife and child—a dire calamity had fallen upon George Haywood. He came under suspicion of a fearful crime. A network of circumstances too intricate for man's wit to disentangle environed him, and he was condemned to die. The stern judgment was carried into effect, and the executed murderer's despised widow sought concealment for herself and child in a change of place and name. Long, long years afterward, the truth was discovered; but the judicial murder was passed among the things irrevocable. The poor widow died at last—died broken-hearted, but with one consolation—she had lived to see her husband's innocence vindicated.

"And this, my poor child, is the shame of which you spoke?"

"My life has known no other."

Not many days after, Hester was sent to one of the first seminaries in the land, for she had yet time enough to avail herself of opportunities of culture hitherto beyond her reach. Her aunt and she kept their own counsel. Cousins Roger and Dick only knew that the object of their solicitude had disappeared, and probably congratulated themselves on the success of their virtuous stratagem.

After a time, Mr. Parker, Mr. Abigail's lawyer, was sent for; and after that the good lady seemed wonderfully revived in health and spirits. At her next birthday, the prospect of "many happy returns" produced anything but a happy effect on the two expectant cousins, who began to think that, after all, the life-tables were not infallible. But her time came at last, and, within a decent period after the sad event, Cousins Roger and Dick were duly summoned to attend the reading of Abigail Varley's will.

They were a good deal startled at the sight of their old enemy, the strange girl.

Poor Tabby, as if seeking consolation in her bereavement, leaped upon the knee of her old friend Dick, who stroked her back pathetically, but a little nervously. Pompey, who took things more philosophically, stretched himself out for a snooze at the feet of Roger.

Mr. Parker, drawing from his pocket the document, proceeded to read it. The introduction was long and formal. But, hark! there's something coming now.

"To my cousin, Richard Figgins—"

Richard looked at Roger in triumph.

—"I give and bequeath—"

You could have heard both their hearts beat.

—"In consideration of the natural love and affection which I have long observed between them—"

Dick looked puzzled.

—"My favorite cat Tabby—"

Dick gave Tabby a furious stroke the wrong way.

—"And no more of my estate."

With a fling that betokened a most emphatic renunciation of the legacy, Tabby was sent mewing and spitting to the farthest corner of the room.

"To my cousin, Roger Smith—"

It was Roger's turn to triumph.

—"In consideration of the natural love and affection—"

Roger began to feel suspicious.

—"I give and bequeath my dog Pompey, and no more of my estate."

With a violent kick, Pompey was sent spinning after the cat; and the fear of her who had so long kept the peace between them being no longer before their eyes, the pent-up enmity of years found vent in an uproarious fight, in the noise of which the voice of the old lawyer was almost drowned; but the words, "rest and residue of my estate—niece, Hester Haywood," were sufficiently audible, and Cousins Dick and Roger stayed to hear no more.

THE NIMBLE BANK-NOTE.

The following amusing scene, which occurred recently in an American family, will be found not uninteresting. The chief role is played by money, the prime mover in such affairs. An eye-witness recites the occurrence in the following words:

One evening that I took tea with a friend of mine, while we were seated at the table, Mr. Baker, my friend's husband, while absently feeling in his vest-pocket, found a five-dollar note which he had no recollection of putting there.

"Halloa!" he exclaimed, "that is no place for you. I should have you put in my pocket-book. Here, wife, don't you want some ready money?" and he threw the note across the table to her.

"Many thanks," she replied; "money is always acceptable, although I have no present need of it." She folded the note and put it under the edge of the tea-tray, and then proceeded to pour out the tea and attend to the wants of her guests.

At her right sat Mrs. Easton or Aunt Susan, whom we all knew as an acquaintance who, from time to time, spent a week with Mrs. Baker. Her visit was just at an end, and she was about to return home that evening.

As Mrs. Baker was pouring out her tea, it occurred to her that she was in her aunt's debt for certain small matters, and when she had the opportunity, she pushed the note under her plate, saying:

"Here, aunty, take this five dollars in part payment of my debt."

"Very well," she replied, "but the money does not belong to me. I owe you $15, my dear Grace, which you lent me last Saturday. I had to pay the taxes on my little house and had not the ready money, and Grace lent it to me," exclaimed Aunt Susan.

Grace, an orphan, was a cousin to Mrs. Baker. She and her brother Frank boarded with her, and made a very pleasant addition to the family circle. She was studying music, and her brother was clerk in a mercantile establishment.

As soon as Aunt Susan received the note, she handed it to Grace, saying:

"I will give you this now on account, and the rest as soon as I get it."

"All right," answered Grace, laughing, "and since we all seem in the humor of paying our debts, I will follow suit. Frank, I owe you something for music you bought me; here is part of it," and she threw the bank-note across the tea-table to her brother, who sat opposite.

We were all highly amused to see how the note wandered around the table.

"This is a wonderful note," said Mr. Baker; "I only wish somebody owed me something and I owed somebody something, so that I might come into the ring."

"You can," said Frank. "I owe Mrs. Baker—or you, it's all the same—for my board; I herewith pay you part of it."

Amid general laughter, Mr. Baker took the note, and playfully threw it again to his wife, saying:

"It's your's again, Lucy, because what belongs to me belongs to you. It has completed the round, and we have all had the benefit of it."

"And now it must go around again," replied she, gayly. "I like to see money circulate; it should never lie idle. Aunt Susan, you take it. Now I have paid you ten dollars."

"Dear Grace, here is another five dollars on my account," said Aunt Susan, handing it to Grace.

"And you, Frank, have received ten dollars for the music you bought me," said Grace, handing it to her brother.

"And I pay you ten dollars for my board," he continued, and the note once more rested in Mr. Baker's hands.

The exchanges were quick as thought, and we were convulsed with laughter.

"Was there ever so wonderful an exchange?" exclaimed Grace.

"It's all nonsense!" cried Mr. Baker.

"Not in the least," answered his wife. "It's all quite right."

"Certainly," said Frank; "when the money belonged to you, you could dispose of it as you would; I have the same right; it is a fair kind of exchange, though very uncommon."

"It shows the use of money," said Aunt Susan; "it makes the circuit of the world and brings its value to every one who touches it."

"And this note has not finished its work yet, as I will show you, my dear husband, if you will give it to me again," said Mrs. Baker.

"I present you with this five-dollar note," said Mr. Baker.

"And I give it to you, Aunt Susan—I owed you fifteen dollars, and I have paid my debt."

"You have, my dear friend, without doubt; and now, my dear Grace, I pay you my indebtedness, with many thanks for your assistance."

"I take it with thanks, Aunt Susan," replied Grace; "and now the time has come when this wonder-working, this inexhaustibly rich bank-note must be divided, because I do not owe Frank five dollars more. How much have I to pay yet?"

"Two dollars and sixty-two cents," replied Frank.

"Can you change it?"

"Let me see; two thirty-eight—yes, there is the change; the spell is broken, Grace, and you and I divide the spoils."

"This bank-note beats all I ever saw. How much has it paid? Let us count up," said Grace. "Mrs. Baker gave Aunt Susan fifteen dollars, which Aunt Susan gave me; I gave Frank twelve dollars and sixty-two cents; Frank gave Mr. Baker ten dollars—altogether fifty-two dollars and sixty-two cents."

"It's all nonsense, I tell you," cried Mr. Baker, again; "you all owe each other what you owed before."

"You are deceived, my dear, by the rapid, unbroken race this little sum has made; to me it is as clear as daylight," replied Mrs. Baker.

"It is all nonsense. How could the note which you gave Mrs. Baker, if nothing to me or to you, be divided between us two?" asked Grace.

Mr. Baker did not seem to see it very clearly, but the others did, and they often relate this little history for the amusement of their friends.

A Cosy Retreat.

A raid was made on the illicit distillers in Southwest Virginia, several weeks ago, and a number of them captured. One offender, with a romantic turn of mind, had discovered a commodious cave, through which meandered a crystal stream of water. Above it was a large hollow tree, with a number of large limbs reaching out from the parent stem. The enterprising manufacturer of the ardent spirits had managed to convert this hollow tree into a chimney, through which the smoke from the distillery passed in indistinct clouds, being diffused in unnoticed quantities to the limbs and out into the air. He had all the paraphernalia of a first-class distillery, and was quietly squeezing the juice from the cereals secluded and apart from the vulgar, prying, meddlesome outside world, when officious myrmidons of the law interfered with his pastime.

Posture.

In standing, the true posture is the upright one with the heels together, or nearly so, and the toes turned out at an angle that is easy, and gives a strong base support to the body. The arms when not in use should hang evenly by the side, or be folded on the chest. In sitting, the spine should be kept straight, and the hips and knees only bent. Suppose you try standing in the way I tell you, and, to be sure that you are upright, stand with your heels against the wall of the room. Now if your hips, shoulders, and the back of your head touch the wall, you are upright. Maintain this attitude and go before a large glass and see how straight you are. Try and get into the habit of maintaining this posture when standing, walking or running; and after a while it will be easy for you. Now sit down in your chair as you generally do, spread out over half the room, so nobody can get by you without falling over your feet and legs, and ask your mother how she would like to have you always take up so much room in the world. Then try sitting upright, and see how she likes that. Try both ways before the glass and see if you don't like the upright position best. Some people think it a sign of weakness to look much in the glass; but I should like to have one side of every room, from the floor half-way to the top, a large mirror, so people could see their own behavior and attitude in it all the time. I believe they would be ashamed of themselves whenever they saw anything wrong, and learn to do better. One reason why many people are so mean is because they never see themselves. They don't know how badly they do act. A very large looking glass in their room would help them a good deal. Fancy, for instance, a large boy or girl quarreling right before a large mirror. They would laugh themselves into good nature at once, or else go off and hide for shame. Then again, if people could always see themselves in a large mirror they would like their good deportment so well that they would want to repeat it constantly. Sickly, deformed and ugly people never want to look at themselves in the glass.

Uprightness of the body is not the only thing to look after. There is an uprightness of mind that thinks and acts correctly, that does what is right, tells the truth, and is kind and tender of the feelings of others. There is a verse in the Bible which every boy and girl should remember and practice, and which reads: "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."—Herald of Health.

A Quaint Picture of the Capital of Maryland.

For a hundred and eighty years Annapolis has been the capital of Maryland. Its social glories are not so much of the days of the cavaliers as of those of powdered wigs, knee breeches, and three-cornered hats, when the gentry of the province made the little capital their winter residence, and their wives and daughters on festive occasions exchanged stately greetings with the assembled company in towering head-dresses, lustrous satins, and rich brocades, or trod a measure in the dance to the thumming of the harpsichords and the spinnette. We confess we have a liking for our quaint little capital, with its streets radiating from inner circles like the ribs of a lady's fan. It is our only remaining relic of colonial times, with its great mansions and its squat, low-browed houses that repose within their shadows. It is a bit of the old world transplanted to the banks of the Severn. Its prevailing aspect is that of decayed gentility. Its choicest annals are reminiscences told by the winter fireside, or after tea, and before tables are set for whist. A few ancient gentlewomen, proud of their lineage, still make it their abiding place, and live, as it were, on the traditions of the past. Their genealogical knowledge is as minute as it is wonderful. It is piquant, too, if you want to know "who's who," where they came from, whom they sprang from, and whether the pot was earthenware or porcelain, they can tell you, and can describe with particularity of circumstance the process of transformation.—Baltimore Gazette.

What Did He Mean?

Old Mr. Throop, up on Eighth street, is as good as he is corpulent, and has a way of singing hymns in soft undertones as he goes along the street. Yesterday morning he was picking his way along the slippery grade down Division street, singing as usual, and he just finished the line: "A charge to keep I have," when he felt a terrible concussion, and the air was full of hats and spectacles and handkerchiefs and Arctic overshoes, and old Mr. Throop blended his hymn into "Dog gone the diddledy dad binged infernal old trap to the gol dinged Pikes." And of all the people who helped him up and handed him his things, not one could tell what he meant by those remarkable phrases, and we don't believe he knew himself.—Burlington Hawkeye.

A German Bishop who happened to be a Prince, was so profligate that one of his equals ventured to speak of the scandal he brought on religion by his immoralities.

"You mistake," he replied, "I do this as a Prince, not as a Bishop."

"But," rejoined the other, "if the Prince goes to h—l, what will become of the Bishop?"

Transient Newspaper Postage.

The new postal law—which is a fair sample of the legislative capacity of the Forty-third Congress—is severely condemned by the daily press of the country, and for two reasons. First, because it imposes an unreasonable tax on transient newspapers. Second, because it affects the daily press, thereby reducing their sales. Now, we cannot but smile at this loud whine of the daily journals on the excessive tax on transient newspapers. It proves that when their ox is gored they have a wonderful sympathy for the public, and an honest sincere contempt for Congressional stupidity. But when Congress surprised every sane man and woman in the country by making the publishers of newspapers prepay the postage for their subscribers, the daily press "had nothing to say." Why? Because nine-tenths of the daily newspapers are circulated outside the mails—are delivered by carriers and sold by newsdealers. The burthen fell almost solely on the weekly press—and a very serious burthen it is, especially to those of large circulation.—Woonsocket (R. I.) Patriot.

Opposing Emigration.

The Berlin correspondent of the London Times writes: Emigration to America having very much decreased of late, the Berlin Government, who have long looked with disfavor upon the steady diminution of the national resources involved in the movement, have determined to profit by the present opportunity for stemming the tide. The two principal measures to be adopted are the dismemberment of the immense crown lands of Prussia and the prohibition to enlist emigrants on foreign account at a premium of so much a head. By the former measure poor people are to be enabled to acquire a few acres and a house which they may call their own, the latter step being intended to put a final stop to the business of Brazilian and other foreign agents bent upon luring people into misery. There is no doubt that this determination of the Prussian government will shortly begin to be felt in America and elsewhere.

A Formality Complied With.

In Augusta no provisions have been made this winter for feeding and lodging tramps. A vagabond went into a police station and wanted to sleep there:

"We only lodge prisoners," said the Sergeant behind the desk.

"You only lodge prisoners," replied the vagabond meditatively.

"That's all," was the reply; "you've got to steal something or assault somebody, or something of that kind."

"I've got to assault somebody, or something of that kind," again repeated the vagabond, thoughtfully. Then he reached across the desk with his long arm, and knocked the Sergeant off his stool, saying, as the officer got up with his hand to his eye, "Give me as good a bed as you kin, Sergeant, 'cause I don't feel very well to-night.—Portland (Me.) Argus.

Couldn't Do It.

A prisoner at the Police Court called an acquaintance the other day to swear to his general good reputation, and when the man had taken the stand the lawyer asked:

"Are you acquainted with the prisoner's reputation?"

"Yes, sir."

"And do you swear that it is good?"

"No, I can't replied the man after a moment's thought. "I won't swear to the reputation of any man who sits in his house and blows a brass horn all day and half the night."

And he stepped down.—Detroit Free Press.

New York Tribune: "There is likely to be a good deal of brimstone in the air in Ohio during the next campaign. Gov. Allen, according to the Republican journals, indulges in profanity to that extent that it passes out under the door of his room in a blue fog whenever he becomes excited. The Hon. B. F. Wade has always had the reputation of being an expert in the same way, and Mr. John Robinson, the circus man, whom the Republicans have nominated for Mayor of Cincinnati, is said to use expressions which would knock the bark off a hickory tree. Messrs. Moody and Sankey should come home from London and, with Mr Varley, concentrate at once upon Ohio.

A fertile-brained Danbury man, who cannot sleep on his back without conjuring up a series of distressing figures and situations, has hit upon a singularly effective plan to prevent getting in that position during the night. The contrivance consists of a tack driven through a shingle. The shingle is fastened to his back loosely, and when he turns over from his side the tack is driven into his back, and he at once springs into the air and awakes when he comes down. The first night he bounded up a distance of eight feet, and pulled all the clothes off his wife, but it awoke him almost instantly. He is getting more used to the sensation now, and rarely jumps over three feet when the tack strikes him.

Curious Phenomenon.—A curious phenomenon was noticed during a recent balloon ascent by two experienced French aeronauts of thorough scientific attainments, M. Tissandier and M. de Fonvielle. They were able to hear voices from below, and remarks which indicated that the persons in the balloon were visible to the speakers, although at the time a cloud obscured the surface of the earth from the view of the aeronauts themselves. This occurrence is explained by the hypothesis that a cloud may be transparent and opaque at the same time, according as it may be viewed in different directions.

THE GOAT AND THE HORSE.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

A Goat who lent a ravished ear
A Fiddle's harmony to hear—
The while unconsciously his feet
The viol's measures gaily beat,
Unto a Horse, who near him stood,
So rapt he quite forgot his food
In the sweet music of the bow,
(Such was the player's wondrous power!)
Thus—when the witching strains were done—
A boastful monologue begun:
"My honest neighbor, do you know
Whence came the sounds that charmed us so?
The viol which so sweetly sings
Owes all its music to the strings;
And those same strings—be pleased to note—
Came from the bowels of a Goat!
(A mate of mine you may have seen
With me upon the village green;
Where, side by side, we used to play
Through many a pleasant summer's day,)
And who can tell, my worthy friend,
But I, some happy day, may lend
The like assistance to the art
Which has such power to charm the heart?"
"True!" said the Nag; "but not alone
Are strings required to give the tone;
The viol bow, pray, do not [illegible]
From my long tail the hairs supply
With which the Bow so deftly brings
The music from the stupid strings!
The cost to me is surely small;
(A little fright—no pain at all,)
Then, for the pleasure that I give
I have my payment while I live
In conscious pride; while you, instead,
Must wait for yours 'till you are dead!"

Why a Child Loves Sugar.

The craving of children for sweets is well known to be one of the most imperious of their appetites. It has reference probably to that ceaseless activity which especially characterizes the age of childhood. It may be that sugar performs in their system the part enacted by the fatty substance in the bodies of adults. As it undergoes oxidation—is burnt up, circulating with the blood—it may be the source of the power which enables them to keep in motion from morning to night. Besides this it is known that it renders easier and more perfect the digestion of the albuminous food upon which their growth depends. In respect to these offices it is, therefore, nearly essential to their well being. And yet how strong, for generations, has been the prejudice against sugar! Under what difficulties, and in the face of what discouragements and protests, have our children obtained the luxury.—Prof. Palmer.

SPRING BONNETS.

Openings of millinery at exclusive houses settle all vexed questions and decide details about bonnets. The absence of all ornaments such as jet or filigree is remarked, and scarcely a yard of lace is used. Trimmings consist entirely of flowers, gros grain, and the various new ribbons. Of the last, serge ribbon, soft and finely twilled, is the choice with fashionable milliners. Brocaded scarfs are rich and effective, but they have been so largely imported that they will probably become common. There are no more monotone bonnets. The chip is of one color, the ribbon another, the face trimming a third, and the flowers are several different colors. Cream white, pale yellow, and poppy red prevail, and they are associated with other colors in ways that form odd and new contrasts. Of twelve hats designed by Virot for a New York milliner, not one was without a touch of scarlet somewhere.

The shape that promises to secure favor is that with a wide halo brim and large crown. The brim is turned up broadly above the forehead, and slopes narrower on the sides and back. Chip bonnets of this shape have a full face trimming and a rouleau that extends under the entire brim, even crossing the back, and holding it out from the hair. Much of the style of the bonnet depends upon this roll under the brim, and it also adds to the comfort of the wearer, as such bonnets, when properly placed on the head, fit so trimly that an elastic for holding them on is almost superfluous. The hair must be dressed close to the head, and very softly, dispensing with "topsies" and other hard filling for braids. Ladies just returned from Paris wear a long and wide Catogan braid, tied by a bow above the nape of the neck; their front hair is fully frizzed, and all finger puffs are abandoned. The new bonnet is then set snugly on the head, neither too far forward nor back, and the effect is excellent. Two long streamers of white tulle, each a yard long and three-eighths of a yard wide, are put on the back of the bonnet and tied under the chin; these are the only strings seen. As we have already said, the trimming is massed high in front, and does not always surround the crown.

Black Chantilly lace bonnets are made over new frames that give the appearance of having a very shallow crown resting on a face trimming nearly three inches deep. This face trimming is a mass of small white flowers, such as dwarfed daisies or button-roses; a brown bird nestles on the lace crown.

White chip bonnets to wear with black or with dark colored suits have two or three colors in the trimming, and much black velvet. Pale blue and buff serge ribbon, the deepest green with cream-color, and pearl or French gray with poppy red, are seen together. Picturesque hats for the country are very large.

NEW NECK-TIES.

A novelty just introduced is the neck-tie of black or of white tulle, with square or with pointed ends, embroidered with floss, and dotted with tiny white silk buttons; price $2.75.

Ecru batiste neck-ties are new, and in favor for wearing with black and very dark colored suits. The ends are wrought with English embroidery; price $1.75. There are also white Swiss muslin ties, with ends of English embroidery, sold for the same price.

NEW COLLARS.

New Byron collars and square cuffs are of sheer white linen, with their scalloped edges daintly wrought with navy blue, Turkey red or black. Accompanying these, and sold as part of the set, are thin white muslin neck-ties tied in a bow in front and wrought to match the collar and undersleeves. Price $4.50 for the set.

All imported collars now have the neck-tie to match. There are English collars of linen, with a half-inch border of bias striped percale and a small flower wrought in color in the turned-over corners. These have sheer muslin ties also edged with percale and embroidery, and likewise cuffs. The three pieces cost $4.50.

NEW VEILS.

New veils are of black thread not dotted with the tiniest buttons, and wrought in scallops and vines on the lower edge. They cost $3.75 a yard. Plain tulle (not dotted) edged with a vine is $2.75. White tulle veils are fashionable with dressy carriage toilets, but are in bad taste with plain street dress. These are lately imported with pearl beads dotting them. The tulle is a yard wide, and costs $4 a yard; three-eighths of a yard is sufficient for a mask veil.—Harper's Bazar.

Gentlemen's Fashions.

A writer in the Home Journal says of gentlemen's spring fashions: "The principal novelties for spring wear are in fancy checked suitings of which the Knickerbocker is the leading one. They are made up in the new style of a single-breasted three-buttoned sack-coat, or two-button morning-coat. In point of novelty the three-button sack-coat has the preference. It is cut of medium length, and shaped so as to define the figure smartly; the top button is rather high, and the fore part is sufficiently cut away from the third button to display the waistcoat. There are four outside patch-pockets, and the coat is always worn with the three buttons buttoned. The sleeve is finished with a single hole and button, and stitched round the bottom to correspond with the edges. The waistcoat is made single-breasted, without a collar, cut long, and with four outside patch-pockets, to match the coat. The two-button morning-coat, from fancy suitings, is cut of good length, and made with flaps on the hips and pockets under, and one outside breast-pocket, patch and button, or with a welt. The waistcoat single-breasted, with a step collar. Trousers are cut straight and full to the leg, with side-pockets and welt on the side-seams, without any spring at the bottoms, and fall naturally on the boot. For better wear the frock coat is still the leading garment, the principal change being that it is now sometimes made to wear four buttons buttoned. This style, however, is likely to be more popular in England, where the climate will better admit of its being worn, than here. They are worn somewhat shorter in the skirt than during the winter, but still of good length. The lapels are cut rather bold and inclined to droop a little at the top, with silk breast facings to the button-holes and edges flat braided, or plain facings, and bound narrow. A white double-breasted waistcoat is worn with this coat to show above the turnover of the lapel, and the trousers of a medium colored stripe in a neat pattern. In England it is very general to wear rough cheviot checked trousers with a frock coat, especially for morning wear."

A Reminiscence of the Early Use of Anthracite Coal.

A local correspondent of the Pittsburg Commercial writes: "Anthracite coal was discovered in Pennsylvania soon after the settlement of the Wyoming Valley, but its first practical use was by Obediah Gose, in his blacksmith shop, in the year 1768. In 1791 Philip Ginter discovered anthracite on the Lehigh. In 1802 Robert Morris, of Philadelphia, formed a company, and purchased 6,000 acres of the property on which Ginter discovered the coal. The coal company was called "The Lehigh Coal Mine." This company opened the mine, and found the vein to be fifty feet thick, and of the very best quality of coal. The company made every effort to secure a demand for the coal, but without success, and having become thoroughly disgusted with their speculation, leased the 6,000 acres of this mammoth coal field to Messrs. White & Hazard, of Philadelphia, for twenty years, at an annual rental of one ear of corn. Messrs. White & Hazard tried to use the coal in the blast furnace in 1826, but failed; the furnaces chilled. In 1831 Neilson conceived the idea of the hot blast for saving fuel, and in 1833 David Thomas adopted the idea of the hot blast and anthracite together. White & Hazard had, previous to this, formed a company and bought the property. In 1839 David Thomas made the use of anthracite for making pig metal a success, by which the twenty ears of corn were transferred into $20,000,000. And this is the early history of the great Lehigh coal mines of the present day. I remember well the banquet given by Burd Patterson and Nicholas Biddle at Mount Carbon, in 1840, at which time they paid William Lyman, proprietor of the Pioneer Furnace, $5,000, the premium they had offered for the first successful use of anthracite coal as fuel in the blast furnace. But David Thomas was the lion of the day. It was he who showed them how to do it, and hale and hearty to-day, as then, he stands a worthy representative of science. Long may he live, and peaceful be his death, and may the memory of his deeds never be forgotten by Pennsylvania. He is a master mechanic, and I should be pleased to see the Chair of Mettallurgy in the Mechanics' High School of Pennsylvania, marked Thomas."

Do Not Eat Raw Eggs.

One of the most common prejudices of housewives and mothers is that hard eggs are difficult to digest, especially the white, and that the less they are boiled the better they are for weak and dyspeptic stomachs. The reverse is the case, as there is more danger of raw and soft white of an egg passing through the digestive apparatus without being really digested than when thoroughly boiled and hard; in fact then it constitutes a most excellent food for dyspeptics, as experience is proving. A writer in the Medical Journal says: "We have seen dyspeptics who have suffered untold torments with almost every kind of food. No liquid could be taken without suffering; bread became a burning acid; meat and milk were solid and liquid fires. We have seen these same sufferers trying to avoid food and drink and even going to the enema syringe for sustenance. And we have seen their torments pass away and their hunger relieved by living upon the white of eggs which had been boiled in bubbling water for thirty minutes. At the end of the week we have given the hard yolk of the egg with the white, and upon this diet alone, without fluid of any kind, we have seen them begin to gain flesh and strength and refreshing sleep. After weeks of this treatment they have been able, with care, to begin upon other food." And all this, the writer adds, without taking medicine. He says, what we also have always maintained, that hard-boiled eggs are not half so bad as half-boiled ones and ten times as easy to digest as raw eggs; and we have no doubt that an animal may be starved to death by eating only the raw white of an egg, for the same reason that dogs have been starved by eating gelatin alone. Only toothless babies can digest soft food, such as milk.—Manufacturer and Builder.

Hipocrasy.

Hipokrasy iz one ov the lowest priced sins in market.

Hypokrits, without meaning it, and without even suspekting it, pay to virtew one ov the finest kompliments she ever receives, for they acknowledge her power and simplicity, when they array their wolfish forms in her lambs wool.

Hipokrasy iz not only a grate wickedness, but a dredphull phoolish one too, for it kosts dubble the time and pashunce to be a cunning nave that it duz to be honest.

Thare would be a poor excuse, at least for prakticing hipokrasy, if this vile artifice ever did sukceed in eskaping detekshun, but soner or at last we hav seen an imposture ov enny kind brought to grief.

It iz very rare, if ever, that a crime or deceit iz buried with its perpetrator, and thare iz hardly enny thing that iz dishonest which the world dispizes more and will work harder to detekt than hipokrasy.

Hipokrasy, like impudense, iz a certain sign ov weakness, and like impudense, too, iz allwuss a sorry koward.

Theze two moral vagrants are often found in each others company, but az a general thing hipokrasy is too mean to be impudent, and sneaks about the world humble, but devilish.

Next to stealing stands hipokrasy, two sins that I don't beleave the devil himself feels proud ov.—Josh Billings.

By His Shadow.—The people of the East measure time by the length of their shadow. Hence, if you ask a man what o'clock it is, he immediately goes into the sun, stands erect, then looking to where his shadow ends, he measures its length with his feet, and tells you nearly the time. Thus, workmen earnestly desire the shadow which shows the time for leaving their work. A person wishing to leave his toil, says, "How long my shadow is in coming!" In Job 7, 2, we find it written, "As a servant earnestly desireth the shadow, and as a hireling looketh for the reward of his work."

Herbalistic Remedies.—In former days, if a member of the household became indisposed, the family-head, under instructions from the gray-haired dame, went to the forest or the field, to gather herbs or berries, from which were quickly made invigorating extracts, which ere many days brought the patient safely around, and saw the family gathering once more without a missing member. How is it now? The slightest indisposition brings the "family physician," with his handsome carriage. He feels the pulse, examines the tongue, looks very grave, writes a few lines of hieroglyphics, charges a big fee, and leaves, only to return the next day and find his patient mercurialized sufficiently to be really sick. A week or two of attendance follows, and therein lies the secret of "wealthy physicians." Compare the physique of the present age with the past, and the story is complete. Reader, discard chemicals and try herbs. If you are ill, try the great herbalistic remedy, Dr. J. Walker's Vinegar Bitters. 30

The art of voicing reeds, the most difficult and important in the manufacture of cabinet or parlor organs, was invented by Mr. Emmons Hamlin, of the Mason & Hamlin Organ Co., in 1847. It has been universally adopted by American and largely by European makers, but none have attained that high standard of excellence in it which is reached in the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs. This fact is universally recognized by musicians.

The "Housekeeper" of Our Health.

The liver is the great depurating or blood-cleansing organ of the system. Set the great housekeeper of our health at work, and the foul corruptions which gender in the blood and rot out, as it were, the machinery of life, are gradually expelled from the system. For this purpose Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, with small daily doses of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are pre-eminently the articles needed. They cure every kind of humor from the worst scrofula to the common pimple, blotch or eruption. Great eating ulcers kindly heal under their mighty curative influence. Virulent blood poisons that lurk in the system are by them robbed of their terrors, and by their persevering and somewhat protracted use the most tainted system may be completely renovated and built up anew. Enlarged glands, tumors and swellings dwindle away and disappear under the influence of their great resolvents. Sold by all dealers in medicines.

A friend of ours who is Chief Clerk in the Governmental Dispensary, says that no medicine chest is now complete without Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. We always supposed it was prescribed by law; if it is not, it ought to be, for certainly there is nothing in the whole materia medica of so much importance to the soldier and the sailor as Johnson's Anodyne Liniment.

Are you aware that the premonitories of Consumption are Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Pains in the Side and Chest, Difficulties of Breathing, etc.? If you permit these symptoms to run on, tubercles will be the result, and end in Consumption. Now, if you want to cure these diseases, use Allen's Lung Balsam without delay. For sale by all Medicine Dealers.

The unparalleled success invariably attending the introduction of

New Discovery for Consumption.

Far surpasses that of any other medicine ever placed before the American people. In fact it has exceeded the most sanguine expectations of its proprietors. Wherever it is sold a lively and increasing demand is at once created, and why is it? Our answer is this: It is a remedy that travels on Its Own Merits and always gives Perfect Satisfaction, hence the success. We know whereof we speak and in order to prove this statement we make the following offer: Do not Ever Ask to Buy until you know what you are getting. All we ask of those troubled with consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, &c., is to go to Miss Molly Kline has been absent from the city for several weeks, visiting friends in the Western part of the county.

Miss Celia Brumback, and Miss Bell Lapsett, of Corunna, were guests of several of our citizens last week.

The COURIER has the largest circulation of any paper of its age in Northern Indiana. It's only $2.00 a year.

Robbin red-breast having taken her flight to lands of perpetual summer for the second time, now greets us again with her silvery song.

The ladies will please bear in mind that we have on hand the most beautiful calling cards ever before brought to this place. There is fifty in each pack, and we give them already printed, for one dollar. Call and see samples.

The people of the German Reform church had their social, last Friday, at the residence of Mr. E. Shull, two miles North-west of the city. Everyone seemed to enjoy the occasion, and returned home about mid-night.

Elmer Crocket, Esq., of the South Bend Tribune gave us a call last Tuesday, Mr. C. is working as "out-side man" for the above paper, and has a good business way with him, that will prove beneficial to the firm.

Mrs. Little and Fair, filled up their Millinery rooms in grand style, and have just received an immense stock of all grades of goods. Their hats, bonnets, ribbons, &c., are the best and choicest of every market, and everything is being sold at greatly reduced prices.

Those who have mutilated currency prepare to shove it off on your neighbors. At the beginning of next month the government will redeem this injured money by making a reduction in value proportional to the degrade of mutilation of the note. Be warned in time.

Last Friday, we were again visited by a snow storm. The snow commenced falling the night before and kept it up off and on, all day Friday. It was no more nor less than discourging to our citizens and farmers, as they both have a large amount of work which ought to be done. We say to the beautiful snow, in the language of the past, "let up, let up."

It is of the utmost importance that holders of deeds and mortgages should see to it that they are recorded. The new law requires that all instruments of the kind must be recorded within forty-five days after their execution. Not only should real estate owners make sure that the deeds under which they hold are recorded, but also that all previous deeds are recorded.

Prof. Geo. Steel, located over Baldack's carpenter shop, is one of the best ornamental painters in the state. Parties from neighboring towns who like to see neat and tasty work, can never do better than to employ the above gentleman. He also keeps first-class workmen to do house painting, and his work will give the best of satisfaction in every grade. It well soon be time for fixing up your dwellings and we refer you to Mr. S. before you let the job.

Gen. Pennybacker, the federal commandant at Nashville, invited Gov. Potter, an ex-confederate officer, to review his troops a few days ago. It was a practical commingling of the blue and gray, and the enthusiasm was intense. As the reminiscence of a lost cause rode up, the band struck up "Hail to the Chief." This is the sort of thing which the president and his lieutenants dislike exceedingly, as it tends to abbreviate the mission of the republican party.

We understand that R. K. Brush, Esq., of Elkhart, has been appointed mail agent on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. If the report be true, it is exceedingly good news, as Brush is one of the most active and efficient workers in the Republican ranks, and has spent cords of money in keeping the Elkhart Observer on its feet. R. K. will be "right at home," among the mail bags, and make a very popular and efficient agent.—Kendallville Standard.

And yet this man Brush was postmaster at Elkhart, and we believe was relieved of his office on account of a defalcation. But where are the men that meet with favor under the present administration, the only qualification required, being an efficient work in the Radical camp.

The election in Connecticut caused our radical friends so much trouble, that they were forced to call on Senator Morton for an explanation. The Radical press tried to ease down on it, but it wouldn't win. And Morton's explanation of how it was done is meeting a similar fate. The fact is it won't explain away. Give the Democracy a few more such victories and there will be few wanting an explanation. Let them come, we repeat it, let them come.

The Presbyterian social struck a new idea last week. They had a "taffy-pull." Everything for the same price of admission. The gals were in their glory, because their mouths were 'goinin'; and the boys were also hunk-a-dora because the "whole business" only cost twenty cents for their self and gal. Candy pulls are a nice thing. So are the gals—but this thing of paying ten cents for all you can chuck down, just when taxes are due, is simply awful, and yet they talk of hooping up the same dish again.

RED CLOUD.

We are gratified to be able to state, on the authority of Mr. Wilde, that the famous trotting horse Red Cloud, has entirely recovered from his lameness, as stated in our editorial notice some weeks ago, and that he will be ready for the June races. This will be good news to our Western friends, who take a lively interest in everything that appertains to this well-known Indiana horse. He will be a dangerous competitior in the free-for-all classes this year.

The Boston Globe takes Senator Morton to task for his utterances in regard to the Connecticut election, saying: "Before Senator Morton undertakes to discourse learnedly on Connecticut politics again, and draw the awful moral from the recent "sad event," it would be a good plan for him to consult some one who knows something about the matter, and thus save himself from a ludicrous exhibition of ignorance." By the way, this would be a good time for the Senator to go down to New England and study up all the mysteries of politics in the state of shoepeg oats and wooden nutmegs.

Indianapolis has just one beautiful little green spot right in the center of the city, called the "Circle," where the trees are green and where all summer the birds sing as happily as in the woods so far away. And now the Indianapolis papers are calling imperatively to have it opened. That would be an unkind cut upon Evander C. Kennedy's speech in the Legislature this winter. The poet laureate should command some respect from his barbarous neighbors.

Geo. Hypernix, one of our fast b'hoys, was arrested last week on suspicion, of stealing about forty seven dollars. Geo had bought a suit of clothes of the firm of Miller & Casebeer for twenty-one dollars, and after this was discovered he was arrested and a trial was had. The gentleman who lost the money could not speak English, which made matters bad for the attorney, on that side. The trial was dismissed, Geo. covering up his tracks so that no proof could be given of his theft.

Morton says because Geo. Hawly and a few more in Connecticut apologized for the misdeeds of the Radical party they were defeated. He believes there ought to be no apologies made in other words he wants the mass of the people to remain in ignorance of the rottenness of the party. But the people are rapidly finding out the cause of the terrible state of our country to-day, and propose to apply the remedy by supporting the Democracy and thus rid themselves of a party that has feasted on corruption and extravagance since it came into power.

Monday morning bright and clear with prospect of summer weather.

He was an Irishman, and took the obviously economical view of the subject. It was on the train from New York to New Haven. The conductor on reaching him said, with brevity and blandness, "Ticket?"

"Well, begarra," answered the Irish party, "I guess I've made a bit of a mistake. I wanted to go to Easthampton Massachusetts, and I have bought a ticket for Easthampton, Connecticut."

"Why didn't you buy a right ticket?" said the conductor.

"Well, I saw the two of them, but the one to Easthampton, Connecticut, was the cheapest, and so I bought that one."

The COURIER accepts the location of the new jail "under protest," and we regret to notice a disposition on its part to convict the citizens of the county of a want of taste, because they did not insist that the Commissioners should tax them $4,000 to buy additional ground for the building.—Press.

A splendid location could have been puchased on North Cedar street, for, at the greatest, $1500. The lot already purchased by the county, is worth $800, and can be sold for that. That leaves a difference at the farthest of $700. Thus do those $4,000 existing only in the fertile imagination of the editors of the Press dwindled down to one sixth of that amount. And in point of drainage it is worth a thousand dollars more than the old site.

As a minister and a lawyer were riding together, said the minister to the lawyer, "Sir, do you ever make mistakes in your pleading?" "I do," said the lawyer. "And what do you do with the mistakes?" inquired the minister. "Why sir if large ones, I mend them; if small ones I let them go," said the lawyer. "And pray, sir," continued he, "do you ever make mistakes in preaching?" "Yes, sir, I do." "And what do you do with the mistakes?" "Why, sir I dispose of them in the same way you do. I rectify the large ones and pass the small ones. Not long since continued he, "as I was preaching, I meant to observe that the Evil one was the father of liars, but made a mistake, and said the father of lawyers. The mistake was so small that I let it go."

☞ Concerning the speakership of the next House the Philadelphia Bulletin's Washington correspondent telegraphs this: "Democratic politicians still here say that the contest over the speakership of the next House, which is being carried on secretly by the friends of the several candidates, is engendering a good deal of rivalry, and is rapidly assuming a better aspect.—Those who are aware of what is going on "under the surface," say that the contest is virtually narrowed down to two candidates, Randall, of Pensylvania, and Kerr, of Indiana. The former is said to be the most active, and has been in communication with really every Democrat representive in the South. The extreme Democrats are urging the election of Randall on account of his leadership in opposing the force bill, while the more conservative members are said to prefer Kerr who at present seems to lead in the race. Both Fernando Ward and S. S. Cox are counted out of the fight by politicians who are watching the contest closely.

ONE OF BUTLER'S HITS.—One of the last as well as one of the neatest hits made by General Butler, just before the close of the last session in Congress, occured during the famous "dead lock" fight on the Civil Rights Bill. The question of adjournment was under consideration, and General Butler had stopped over to Mr. Randall's desk for a private consultation. Butler favored a Sunday session. Randall opposed.

"Bad as I am, I have some respect for God's day," said the Democrat, "and I don't think it proper to hold a session of Congress on that day."

"Oo, pshaw!" responded Butler, 'don't the Bible say that it is lawful to pull your ox or ass out of a pit on the Sabbath-day? You have seventy three asses on your side of this House that I want to get out of this ditch to-morrow, and I think I am engaged in a holy work."

"Don't do it, Butler," pleaded Sam "I have some respect for you that I I don't want to lose. I expect some day to meet you in a better world."

"You'll be there, as you are here," retorted Butler, quick as thought—"a member of the Lower House."—Harpers Magazine.

Corunna can now boast of two saloons, and still the crusaders are not happy.

LOVE'S MEMORIES.

One day, in pensive, dreamy mood,
  I thought of bonny Mary—
How fair she was, how sweet and good,
  How fairy-like and airy!
I held a treasured [illegible],
And let it round my finger twirl,
But thought, "'Tis strange a few short years
Since we two parted, blind with tears,
  It's golden that should vary!"

The glinting curl was soft and bright,
  Yet redder brown than golden;
I turned and turned it to the light
  To catch the color olden.
"Alack!" I sighed, "'tis gone. Dear girl!
Her image fades out like the curl;
I see her now, my graceful maid,
So peerless that she made afraid
  The heart she would embolden."

Then came a thought of sudden pain:
  "How now! her hair so sunny
Was wavy, soft, yet always plain,
  Not curled at all. How funny!
What changes may a tress befall!
I cannot make it out at all;
The precious lock is ruined quite;
Ah me! I'd not have seen this sight—
  Not for a mint of money!

"I'll put it by, this girl of yours,
  No more it soothes and blesses."
I took the paper, dropped before,
  That held my Mary's tresses.
Ha! think upon it! not the same!
Not "Mary" was the written name,
But "Jenny"—Jenny, darling girl—
Here was the bonny sweet brown curl,
  And gone were my distresses!

Jenny, my flower! my girl of light!
  My heartsome, winsome Jenny!
I saw it all. The locks were right;
  'Twas puzzling, 'mong so many.
Safe in its snowy paper laid
I found my Mary's golden braid;
And, close beside it Bessie's tress,
Raven and glossy—Rare Queen Bess!
  The sweetest girl of any!

Where are they now? Who? What? The girls?
  Or do you mean the tresses?
The girls. Ah, well (how Tempus whirls!),
  Each one a husband blesses.
Married and settled long ago—
Bess, Jane, and Mary—don't you know?
Mary and Wallace made a match;
Bright Jenny found a brilliant "catch;"
  And Bess took me—the precious!

YOUNG MOLL'S PEEVY.

Villate's "drive" of logs had jammed at the foot of Red Rapids in the very throat of the main "pitch," where the Aux Lievres falls over the ledges into the "glut-hole," fifty feet below.

A wilder spectacle I never saw throughout the lumbering region during a space of eight years. The gates of the dams at the foot of all the lakes were up; the volume of water was immense. Rocks, which in summer stand twenty feet out of the rapids, were now under water. The water came pouring down the long incline, black and swift as an arrow, and went over into the pool at one thunderous plunge, throwing up a vast column of mist. Two ledges only, situated in the very throat of the "pitch," showed above water. These rocks the lumbering company had designed to blast out the previous autumn, but had been prevented by heavy rains. They then stood twenty-seven feet out of water. Now their crests are barely exposed, and the flood washes over them in its mighty rhythm-motion. In the rapids the whole stream is compressed to a width of a little more than seventy yards.

A light jam had formed that morning at a place about a mile above. This was broken by getting a haul on it from the shore with a dog-warp. Thereby several thousand logs were liberated at once, and went down together into the rapids. The older drivers exclaimed that it would make mischief when it started; but nothing could be done; it broke and went out with a rush. We, who were ahead, ran on down the ledges to see it go through the falls, and we had to run fast to keep up. The instant the logs entered the rapids they left us behind. We could see them going down, however, end over end, and hear them "boom" against the sunken rocks. Turtlotte and a Welshman named Finfrock were ahead. I heard Turtlotte call out in French that the logs were jamming, and saw the butt ends of great sticks fly up, glittering, out of the water. The logs had struck and hung on one of the center rocks, and on the shelving ledges upon the east side. The ends of these large sticks, three or four feet across, stood fifteen feet or more out of the water. We ran on, clambering from crag to crag, till we came to a point looking down on the gulf, sixty feet beneath; and that was about near enough, for the ends of the logs flew up almost on a level with our eyes, as they went over, and the spray drenched our faces. The ledges under our feet trembled as if an earthquake were shaking them, and not a word could be heard, even when shouted in the ear. The combined noises were louder than thunder, heavier, deeper. It was a warm forenoon, and the sun shone into the rack dazzlingly bright, making a vivid rainbow. It was the hottest, maddest chasm that can well be imagined; and to see that brilliant rainbow hanging there so still and motionless amidst all that uproar, gave one a queer sensation.

Old man Villate himself, with his red cap over his ears, came puffing down, shouting at the top of his lungs. We could see his lips fly. The hitch was betwixt the shelving ledges on the east side and one of the mid-channel rocks. It was not one log that had caught, else the weight of the water would have broken it out. It appeared that two large sticks had come down with the ends across each other, and a third log, perhaps several logs, overlying these. When the current sucked them through the rapid, between the center rock and the shore ledges, the outward ends of the crossed logs struck on both sides.

The warps were brought, and Villate called for volunteers to go down, or rather be let down, the ledges and prize off the shore ends of the jammed logs with "peevies." There were plenty of bold fellows; but every man hesitated. Murmurs of "certaine mort," "sûr mort," "porte du tombeau," "porte d'enfer," arose and were repeated.

"It's a hard world, but I wants to tarry in it a spell longer boss!" said one grizzled old Yankee from the Maine rivers, with a sage shake of his long head. We all knew that when the jam started it would go through like an avalanche. Whoever was down there would have to go with it—into the glut-hole.

By noon all the crew had come up. The jam filled the whole river for a third of a mile back from the fall, so completely that during the afternoon the west bank gangs crossed on it to the east side. We lighted our fires on the ledges; and as the evening advanced it was a picturesque sight—the red-shirted drivers camping there and sitting in messes about their coarse fare.

All the next day we worked with the warps. Nooses were dropped over the upright ends of the logs at the foot of the jam, and the gang was set to pull on them. Later in the day a heavy capstan was rigged. The hawsers broke like twine. It was impossible to start a log, so tremendous was the weight of water and lumber combined.

Next day the jam was mined with powder placed in water-tight molasses casks and connected with fire at the top of the ledges by means of tarred fuses. The blasts blew out splinters freely, but failed to break or dislodge the large sticks. Villate fumed and sweated. Unless the drive went down to market, not a dollar would be paid to one of us, so he declared. "If you want your pay, break the jam," was his constant exhortation, enforced by vigorous curses—and, indeed, we had been hired on these terms: wages to be paid when the drive reached Montreal—not before. This is a common rule, or used to be; the men have thus a strong interest in the driving.

A plan was mooted among the messes the following night to cut out the front logs. The same scheme has been often put in execution. It was argued that by stretching a warp-line across the rapids, from cliff to cliff, directly over the foot of the jam, a man might be lowered on it, with an ax, and cut away the logs. A large "basket"—so it was talked—might be swung on the cable. By slackening the line, the ax-man could be lowered to the logs, and the instant the sticks cracked under the strokes he could leap to the basket and be pulled up out of harm's way, and let the jam go through under him. The idea gained favor. The following morning the end of one of the seven hundred foot lines was taken across on the jam to the ledges on the west bank. Fifty men went over with it, to handle it. With a hundred men there was no difficulty in lowering and raising it at will. When drawn taut, it hung sixty feet above the foot of the jam. One of the Indian drivers, named Lahmunt, had been at work weaving a basket of ash strip, and as soon as this novel carriage was finished and slung on the cable, the project was ready for trial. While the project was being talked over, several of the drivers had declared themselves willing to undertake the feat, but now that the basket was slung, and after seeing it drawn out over the abyss, they were less disposed to proffer their services. It needed strong nerves and a stout heart to gaze into that foaming gulf and not turn dizzy.

There was among us a youngster whom the old drivers called "Young Moll's Peevy." Young Moll was a half-breed (French and Indian) girl, or rather woman at this time, of thirty or thirty-three, and the mother of this boy. Some of the drivers said that his rightful patronymic was Skelly; but this was a rather obscure matter.

"The Peevy," as he was half-humorously christened, must have been nearly or quite eighteen. The name was said to have come to him one day in boyhood, when a "peevy" was dropped off a glut into ten or a dozen feet of water. Several of the drivers were trying to hook it up, but kept missing it. The boy, then eleven or twelve years old, had come along unobserved. Presently, and without saying a word, he dropped off the logs, brought up the peevy and ran away, dripping. The men laughed, and not knowing his name called him "the peevy-boy." Afterward, when they found out his mother, they named the urchin "Young Moll's Peevy." But his mother called him Lotte. A stranger would not easily have believed him the child of the fresh young person who had cared for him; for he was unusually stalwart and bronzed by exposure. Seen together, they rather resembled lad and lass. I thought so, at least, when first I saw her, coming to fetch him dry feeting and a clean shirt. She had walked twenty miles to bring them, through the woods, following our trail. And the way she kissed the young man, aside, was, or looked to be, rather lover-like than maternal. Afterward, on several similar occasions, I was much struck by the genre picture they made; the youth had the great black eyes and black curling hair of his mother. The drivers used to chaff the fellow unceasingly about Young Moll and the care she took of him, all of which he bore silently, with a troubled, resentful eye; though, otherwise, a great noble-hearted boy, generous and inclined to jollity. Really, the rough fellows thought the more of the young woman for this motherly affection and wealth of care for her boy. It was in their uncultured faces, all the while their tongues belied them.

The "basket" was slung and ready. The gang on the other side were gesticulating, with random tugs at the line. There was something whimsical in the way the proposers of the project shrank the one behind the other, with assumed bravado and covert glances at each other's faces.

"I shall have to go myself," Villate exclaimed, with his characteristic French oath. "I will go myself, fat as I am!" when bashfully, as if afraid of giving offense, young Lotte said he would go "if no better man wanted the job." There was at first muttered "non nons" of a discussion in the crowd, but nobody claimed the "job," and Villate was but too glad to get a man to go. In a moment the young man had stripped to his shirt and red drawers, taken his ax and stepped to the basket, but it was found to be insecurely attached; and afterward several better modes of handling the line were suggested, in all causing a delay of an hour or two.

And now, as if the birds of spring, just flitting past, had carried the word, or some presentiment of evil had found its way to the Peevy's mother, she inopportunely made her appearance. Rad Cates privately touched my elbow and nodded back, up the bank. I then saw young Moll standing partly in the cover of a shrub fir, a hundred yards off, intently watching the gang and the extended warp.

Several of the men saw her, but did not look or notice her after the first glance. "Parbleu! a pity she's here!" one said, and they closed in about Lotte to prevent his seeing her. But the woman soon came nearer, going partly around the crowd, keeping aloof. She had a new plaid shawl, gayly colored, pinned closely about her neck, and her long, black, Indian-like curls showed beneath a beaded scarlet hood. There was an intently anxious look in her eyes; she appeared worn and tired.

"The Peevy" was much too tall a man to be shut up in the crowd. Presently he espied her, and his eye fell. After a time he casually, as it were, made his way back to her. None of us heard what was said. The most instinctively kept their eyes to themselves. The gang on the other side was staring across the chasm. Villate ripped out an oath and I saw Lotte push the girl aside so roughly that she caught at a shrub to save herself. He walked straight to the brink of the cliff.

"I am here," said he. I never saw him look so manly. We knew his eye was quick and his hand sure. I had little doubt that he would cut the front logs and come up safe. We did not know what the danger was till afterward. He stood upright in the "basket," with one hand on the hawser to steady himself, and his ax in the other.

At a signal the gang on the west side straightened the line. We paid it out slowly. They drew him out from the brink of the ledge, till the basket was directly over the center rock. Then gradually we slackened it, and let him down foot by foot, down under the rainbow, where the hot, mad midst flew up in fierce gusts, bearing the strong odor of crushed spruce fiber. He seemed to bear the deafening roar without confusion, and glanced about quite coolly, as it looked.

Our attention was given closely to his signals and to our task, yet I saw Young Moll coming forward, step by step, as the "basket" went deeper and deeper into the gorge, her eyes riveted on it. She was very pale and her hands were tightly clenched. The drivers cast ominous glances at her.

"I don't half like the looks of the woman!" I heard muttered, and I think the sight of her filled every one with a sense of the foreboding.

As soon as the basket was down to the logs we saw him step out upon them, and thence to the rock. From moment to moment the mist hid him, and transient jets of water, from betwixt the logs, squirted high over his head. Guardedly he planted one boot, shod with the sharp corks, upon one of the large logs—the one he judged it best to cut away first; the other rested on the rock. The "basket" he had placed on his back. We were holding it steady from both banks, ready to pull it up when signaled. Before and beneath him raged the cataract. We saw him raise his ax and strike it into the log. The bright steel flashed in the narrow chasm. At the fourth stroke the great log cracked. He threw the ax and clutched the basket. A mighty crash rang up. The jam had started—was moving—going down—madly splintering—thundering into the glut-hole! The wet splinters all along the rapids went up a hundred feet in air. On both sides the gangs were running backward, hoisting the "basket." It rose twenty feet a second! A hundred and fifty strong men pulled with might and main! As he rose he waved his hand to us.

Ah, God! we were too slow! It was all done in a trice. One great stick, ending over like a fagot, barely missed the basket. Another longer log, whirling up struck the warp farther out, and hurled him down with it! The cable was torn from our hands! Gone like a flash, into the gulf below! From the one great rough human heart on either bank a groan of pity blended with the roar.

"Too d——n bad!" they cried out in all sincerity, and stood staring.

Then all eyes turned toward the poor fellow's mother. She had thrown up her hands when the timber swept him down, as if to shut out the sight, then dropped them on a sudden, with a moan.

"Catch her!" some one shouted. Half a dozen standing nearest sprang forward—for she was standing on the very verge of the rocks. Her eyes had fallen on old man Villate. They were like the eyes of one in mortal agony. The blotched and bloated old rum-butt turned his face aside and downward, and thrust out his hand as if to fight off flame. For their lives the men durst not lay hold of her. She seemed to waver in soul betwixt grief and fury.

A moment after, the men gave a loud shout! She was gone from where she had stood, and the echo of a smothered shriek—tribute of a woman's heart to death—came to our ears. We sprang to look over. There was a glimpse of the bright shawl whirled amid the foam.

"Did she fall?" some cried out.

"Throwed herself down!" said those who saw it.

We never saw trace of either of them. But the jam went out, to the last log. Two hours later the gangs were following the drive down the stream—on to Montreal! But the men had turned sullen. Scarce a laugh or a cheery shout was heard for three days.—Scribner.

The Substance and Shadow.

A cook-book is a good thing to have, but something to cook is better. Not so, however, thought Paddy.

An Irishman went into a butcher's shop and asked, "Have you any sheep's heads, masther?"

"Oh, yes," was the reply. Pat, after a deal of higgling, bought one, and then wished to know how to make it ready.

The shopman began to tell him, but Pat, not being blessed with a good memory, asked him to "write it down on a piece of paper," and meantime laid down his purchase at the shop door.

A dog, seeing a good chance, seized the head and bolted down the street. Pat immediately gave chase, bawling at the top of his voice:

"Come back wid me sheep's head, ye robber, ye!" but after a stiff run, he had to give in dead beat, when he consoled himself with the remark, "Niver moind; he hasn't got the resate how to make it ready."

The O'Possum.

If there is any thing in names this animal is Irish, but there isent none there now, and them in the collinies call theirselfs possums, like they was natifs. Possums is bigger than a bird, but not so big as a dog, and has a sharp nose and a long bald hedded tale wich is all ways cole as ice, never mind the wether. Its jus as if their tales was ded and the funerals was posoponed, but this aint so, for there tales is mity lively if you have ever see 'em roun the bars of their cage. I herd a man from Ostralia say that they was no place in the world where nature had been so good to her creatures, and he said, the man did, that if it wasent for the possum's tale how cud they hang by 'em from the branches of trees like they do, but wen I ast him what they hung for he dident kno. I spect its only to show they aint afraide.

The she one has a tobacco pouch on the outside of her stummick, and wen the little ones is friten they creeps in it, and wen they are snug they dont care a copper wot becomes of their ole mother wich is outside. When the dogs fines a possum and it cant git to a tree it lies down and pretens it is ded.

Once they was a dog wich diddent kno about possums foun one a lying like it was ded, and after rollin it over a wile, and smellin it, the dog lay down by it and went to sleep. Wen the possum saw the dog was a sleep it got up quitely to go a way, but jus then the dog opend its eyes and see the possum standin up. Such a friten dog you never see, and such a friten possum you never see, but the dog most. It jumped up an made for home, howlin at evry leep, and fore it got home it had a change from a black Newfounlarn pup to a ole bull dog as wite as milk.

A man wich had a pet possum and a chicken wich he thot ever so much of was a settin at his table writin one day, wen he see the possum come in at the door and try to sneak under the bed. So the man he said Cleopatra, wich was the possum's name, come here and do some tricks on the table, but the possum needed lots of coaxin, and wen it was gettin up on the table beggin, like a dog, the man herd his chicken go yeep, yeep, yeep! Then the possum she started and stared all roun the room like she said wy, bles my soul, were is that chicken? But the man he knew were it was wel enoughf. Then the chikin went yeep, yeep, agin, and the possum ran to evry side of the table and lookt over the edg, and then came back to the middel a shakin her head like sayin I cant make it out at all, it beats me! But wen the man he cluckt like a ole hen the chickin stuck its head out of Cleopatra's pouch, were it had been put a way to be et.

Possums is marsupials, wich souns very fine and grand, but I spose its jus cos they ca[illegible] any thing els, with their cole tails [illegible] them pockets on their stummackses.

Live Stock and Population.

Prof. Thorold Rogers, of Oxford University, England, has made up a curious return of the proportion of domesticated live stock to population in the most prominent countries in the world. It shows the following results:

Great Britain has one cow to every twelve persons, a sheep for everybody, and one pig for every six.

France has a like proportion of sheep, a double share, comparatively, of cows, but only one pig to every six persons.

The Swedes have a cow between three and one-half of them, a sheep between two and three-quarters, and a pig to a baker's dozen.

There are as many sheep as there are Norwegians in Norway, when they are all at home, and two and one-half of them—the Norwegians—are entitled to a cow. They can have only one-eighteenth of a pig each.

Denmark has a cow for three persons, as many sheep as persons, and a pig for four and three-quarters persons.

Prussia, with her usual uniformity, has an equal number of cows and pigs, one to every five inhabitants, besides a sheep apiece all round.

Wurtemburg has a quarter as many cows as people, a sheep to two and three-quarters, and a pig to every seven.

Bavaria rates the same as Wurtemburg as to cows and sheep, and is as much better off for pigs as one-fifth is better than one-seventh.

Saxony has a sheep and a pig for every eight persons, and a cow for every six.

Holland has a cow to every four, a sheep to every four, and a pig to twelve persons.

Belgium a cow to six, a sheep to nine, and a pig to eight (which is an Hibernicism.)

Austria has a cow for every six persons and a sheep and a pig for every five persons.

Switzerland runs up to the Swedish standard on cows, one to three and one-half persons, and has a sheep for five, and a pig for every seven and one-half persons.

We Americans close the list with a cow for every four of us, a sheep apiece, one pig to every one and one-half.—Rural New Yorker.

The Spelling Mania.

Dr. Moss was about right when he said, at a late spelling-match between two Christian associations, that the man isn't entitled to much respect who cannot spell any word in the English language in more ways than one. There are certainly two ways in which every English word may be spelled—one as pronounced, and one as it is written. But conventionality is a dreadful thing. The man who pronounces an English word as it is written makes himself about as ridiculous as the man who writes an English word as it is pronounced. One would think that so palpable a contradiction as this might be corrected in the interest of more than 100,000,000 people. The English language is spoken and written by more people than the language of any other civilized people. Yet none other is so barbarous in its othography and orthoepy. The language is a jumble, from the complex character of its origin. A mixture of Anglo-Saxon, Norman-French and German, acquiring its Greek through the Latin, and its Latin through the French, it is a composite of richness and irregularity. We have departed from the almost universal rule of cultivated tongues in the relations between spelling and pronunciation. Sanscrit, Greek, Latin, Italian, German, Spanish are all written as they are pronounced, and pronounced as they are written. Having acquired the organic sounds peculiar to the different nationalities, it is an easy matter to spell the words correctly in any of these languages. Even in the French there are rules which govern the discrepancies between orthography and sound. Not so in English. Hence the English-speaking people are necessarily "bad spellers." To spell English correctly comes by nature much more than Dogberry's reading and writing, for the accomplishment is the result of a retentive memory, as well as long application. The most serious application will fail without the assistance of this natural gift of a tenacious memory.

The new amusement of spelling matches, old and familiar in the country-school districts, has, in its present form, a wide field of usefulness as well as entertainment. As if in keeping with the contradictory character of the language, nothing brings one into ridicule as quickly as bad spelling. The printers and the proof-readers get an excess of abuse which they do not merit. If they would put into type and pass every word as it is written in editorials, local articles, advertisements and communications (especially the latter), the issue of a large morning daily would be a more wonderful orthographical product than the wildest efforts of Josh Billing or Artemus Ward.—Chicago Tribune.

The Pumpkin.

The pumpkin iz a large, yello fruit, about one foot in diameter, and not far from being round.

The seed ov it is shaped like the hed ov an Injun arrow and iz about the size ov yure middle finger nail.

The seed iz inserted into the ground about the 15th ov May, and cums to light in about 6 days.

The pumpkin keeps on bizzy growing untill the fust day of Oktober, and then gives up the contest.

Pumpkins gro on to a vine, and thar iz but few if enny smarter weeds than a pumpkin vine. On ritch ground they will gro four inches a day, besides growing about two inches each night, and they have large, yello flowers on them about the size and shape ov the other end ov a key bugle, or French horn.

Each ov these flowers means a pumpkin, and I hav seen 16 able-boddyed pumpkins on one vine.

This is called "sum pumpkins."

Pumpkins are planted among corn, and after the corn haz been got off I hav seen the pumpkins so mutch on the ground that yu couldn't count them.

The most remarkable thing about the pumpkin iz the pi that iz in them.

Each able-boddyed pumpkin haz from 6 to 8 pize in them, and there ain't no food, anshunt or modern, kan outstyle them.

Pumpkin pi iz az hard to beat az the simple truth iz. Pumpkins are kut up into strips and hung up in the kitchen for winter pi.

I dont kno whare or when the pumpkin waz fust diskovered, or who it waz who fust worked it up into pi.

Christopher Columbus found Amerika, Newton waz the father ov gravitashun, and menny a man haz spent hiz whole life and talent on perpetual motion and never kaught up with it, but who fust found a pumpkin or invented it iz a mistery up to this hour.

Pumpkins grow the most cheerfully in Nu England, bekause folks are most kind to them thare, but the pumpkin iz a good-natured plant, and will gro ennywhare if people ain't sassy to it.—Josh Billings.

Primitive Plowing.

A Mexican correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal, writes:

"On our way back to Temisco we had an opportunity of observing, more closely than diligence or railroad can permit, the process of plowing as commonly practiced in this country. The plow itself is almost a fac-simile of the pattern used by the Egyptians in the time of Abraham, and certainly commends itself to all agriculturists on account of its great simplicity and cheapness. It consists of a wooden shaft, about four feet long and four inches thick, armed at its lower extremity with an iron point, slightly flattened and sometimes presenting a feeble forward curve. The other end is provided with a round stick passed through a hole to serve as a handle. The pole, consisting of the stem of a small tree, from which the bark has been peeled, is fifteen feet long and attached to the shaft by means of mortise and peg. The implement thus constituted is fastened at the extremity of the pole to the middle of a very light wooden yoke, about seven feet long, which rests immediately behind the horns of a pair of oxen and is fastened there by thongs of rawhide passed around the roots of the horns. Not less than fifty such contrivances were crawling at a snail's pace over the field which we stopped to notice, scratching up the ground to the depth of two or three inches—certainly to us a very novel sight."

MY SPRING-TIME.

I loved a love in my spring-time,
  Which the years have set back so far,
That it shines through the mists of the present,
  With the wan sweet light of a star.

We were "poor and proud," we lovers,
  He toiled for his daily bread,
I had naught but my girlish beauty;
  So wherewithal could we wed?

We dreamed we could wait for riches—
  Ah, me, but we waited long!
I was weak in my girlish frailness,
  But my love was patient and strong.

Till there came a day when the sunshine
  Fell warm on a clay-cold face—
On hands that had wearied of labor,
  On feet that had stopped in the race.

And the soul that had hoped so bravely,
  Went forth from our life alone.
And for me there was left a memory,
  And the name on a graveyard stone!

Then, 'mid the wild tumult of anguish,
  That rent my sad heart in twain,
Rose the thrill of a sore self-pity,
  For the hopes we had hoped in vain.

But that sore pain passed with my spring-time,
  So that wherefore should I grieve?
It comes as a dream of the morning,
  To one that resteth at eve.

And the years that my young heart dreaded,
  The sad years so empty and long,
They taught my tried soul patience,
  And the patience hath made me strong.

The Greatest Crop in the World.

The hay crop of the United States for the last year is reported at over 27,000,000 tons cured. This at $20 per ton is about $500,000,000, and does not include what was eaten but not cured. The live stock of the United States was worth $1,525,000,000. These had to get their living out of grass. The value of animals slaughtered for food in that year was $309,000,000. The butter crop was 514,000,000. This all came from grass. There were produced 235,000,000 gallons of milk, worth $25,000,000. This, too, came from grass. Next, 100,000,000 pounds of wool, at $25,000,000. This got its living from grass. Next, 53,000,000 pounds of cheese, worth $5,000,000. Add all these items together, and the grass product of 1874 of the United States was no less than $1,292,000,000. The total value of all agricultural products in the United States was $2,447,538,658. In other words, the grass crop of the United States can pay off the national debt in two years.

The Fashions.

The present fashionable bonnet is simply a large hat with flowing brim, and upon it and inside of its upward front rests a conservatory of flowers. There are numerous other shapes, each pretty, some coquettish, all becoming, light and graceful withal. Straw is disappearing and in its place is chip of the lighest and finest ecru, dust color, drab, black and white. The English round hat will be very popular as affording protection to the eyes. All of the hats have drooping streamers behind, but there are no strings and very few feathers are seen.

As the beauty of the bonnet consists in the heaped-up masses of flowers on the front, there is evidently no room yet for the proposed change in vails. The stiff scarf of lace or tulle will, therefore, continue in use placed under the hat, to the injury of the eyes, and with the loss of the grace given by floating lace. The newest shapes imported are called La Brune, Lucia, the Ristori, the Bon-Ton, and in English, the Warwick, with a high round crown and flaring brim; the very piquant Girofla turned up at the left side. A coquettish sailor hat is called Castalia; and there are other shapes, the front or back being decided by the trimming.

For early spring and cool summer days there is a large display of "suitings," so called from being made up simply with other fabrics in a suit. These are in all wool broken plaids, extremely soft and fine, of single width, called camel's hair; twilled, damasked, diamond-blocked, bird's eye and diagonal, in drabs, grays, blue-gray, and neutral-tinted ground, with thread-like bars and broken lines of blue, red, dashes of green, dull blue and gold color. The overskirt and basque are made of these fabrics, and the skirt and sleeves of silk, the color of the darkest or most prominent dark shade of the plaid. These cost 80 cents and $1 a yard. All Oriental stuffs are fast gaining popularity; delicate grey Japanese silks of this season have tiny black figures scattered over their surface with here and there an embossed white flossy silk figure, giving an exceedingly silvery look by gaslight.

Black silks are more lustrous than they have been for many years past, and much finer in the reps. American silks are steadily gaining in popularity on account of their rich appearance, durability and freedom from all chemical dyes and mixtures. The colored silks of this manufacture come in all the new fashionable tints—the Oxford, a cold, blue gray; a Russian gray of pinkish hue; seal brown and beige brown; jujube, a red brown like paste; all shades of steel and dust color and olive and bronze greens, deep green, and violet merging into plum shades. Besides these are all the light evening shades. The colored American silks are especially adapted for street wear.

A novelty this spring is guipure grenadine, or called by others ecru linen, open worked in Hamburg designs, or like English embroidery, so very open that scarcely any of the fabric is to be seen.

At present, fashions seem to have settled into the cuirass and long apron, scanty skirts with much less trimming, and quantities of shirr. Shirring is introduced in sleeves, waists, aprons, headings of flounces and ruffles. The figure will not be disguised by voluminous drapery and quantities of trimming. It is impossible to do away with the useful, pretty and economical polonaise, covering as it does a multitude of evils in the way of shortcomings in the dresses of a past season. So they come again in cashmere, silk-trimmed, and jet-embroidered, and in braided and embroidered camel's hair.

There are several important changes in fashionable jewelry. A taste for colored stones is revived, in accordance with the passion for everything Oriental in dress.—New York Tribune.

Loss by Weeds and Insects.

It is estimated that the value of produce annually raised in this country is $2,500,000,000, of which amount nearly or quite one-fifth, or $500,000,000, is lost, according to the American Naturalist, from the attacks of injurious plants and animals. A single campaign of the army worm cost the farmers of Eastern Massachusetts $250,000 worth of grass. Missouri alone loses from fifteen to twenty million dollars annually from insect depredations. The annual damage to the apple and pear crop from the codling moth amounts to several million dollars, and the work of the curculio is costly. A partial remedy is to be found in a close study of insect habits, with a view to ascertaining what insects there are which hold the depredators in check and destroy them. It is hardly possible to estimate the havoc annually wrought by the grasshopper and the potato beetle, for example, and any bird or insect which would reduce such pests would be a substantial benefactor to the farmer. As to the "injurious plants," or, in the common vernacular, weeds, the only method that is feasible is to kill them at their very germination by means of proper agricultural machines. The Country Gentleman affirms that the annual growth of weeds in this country amounts to eight million tons, or enough to load a compact train of wagons long enough to span the globe.

Barber—"Well, I am a little shaky this morning, that's a fact, (vibrating the razor in dangerous proximity to the customer's juggler.) You see, I've been drinking pretty hard lately, and last night I had an attack of delirium tremens; but——"

The darkey didn't stop to hear any more. "Gosh A'mighty! boss, you can't shave me," he yelled, and slipping out of the chair, he made for the door, lathered as he was, and disappeared.

P. T. Barnum's Latest Wonders—A Colossal Exhibition.

Harper's Weekly devotes nearly two columns to explaining and extolling the great enterprise with which P. T. Barnum is making historical his forty years' career as the most liberal and daring showman in the world. The statistics which Harper Brothers give us from authentic sources are nearly overwhelming. They make an ordinary head dizzy. Mr. Barnum has always boasted that he gave his patrons double their money's worth, and his claims are generally acknowledged; but this time he seems to have far outstripped himself. Last year he obtained from the Connecticut Legislature a charter for "The P. T. Barnum's Universal Exposition Company," with a capital of a million of dollars; Mr. Barnum, who is President of the company, and Mr. Coup, his Manager, have spent many months in Europe perfecting their plans. The object of this great company, as they announce, is to elevate amusements, divest them of all objectionable features, and thus render them worthy the patronage of the most moral and refined classes. They say that eventually they will have a score or more of exhibitions (traveling and permanent) in America and Europe, and they intend that their chartered title shall be a guarantee of the merits of whatever they bring before the public. The present season they have but two exhibitions. One is Mr. Barnum's well-known "Museum, Menagerie, Circus and Traveling World's Fair;" the other is simply called "The Great Roman Hippodrome." Mr. Barnum seems to have devoted years to perfecting this great enterprise, and nearly one year of his personal attention was paid to it in Europe. At an expense of several hundred thousand dollars he erected a great hippodrome building in the heart of New York city, and under an outlay of over $5,000 each day he has run his establishment in New York for nearly a year. This Exposition Company are engaged to ship the entire Hippodrome to Europe next autumn; meanwhile they have undertaken the difficult task of transporting it entire to the principal cities in America. Harper's Weekly says:

"The Great Roman Hippodrome will resemble a moving camp. There are 1,200 men, women and children in Mr. Barnum's service, and the stock includes 750 horses and ponies, besides elephants, camels, English stag and stag-hounds, trained ostriches, lions, bears, tigers and other animals. For the exhibition of the menagerie and the various shows, displays and performances connected with the enterprises, two enormous tents, each 500 feet in length and 300 in width, have been provided, one of which will be kept in advance in order that no time may be lost by delaying in making ready. The question of transportation by rail—a very serious one—was solved by the construction of 150 cars twice the usual length, built expressly for this purpose. Among them are a number of 'horse-palace' cars, constructed with commodious stalls, in which the horses can lie down and rest while on the journey and arrive at the place of exhibition quite fresh for the performance. Besides moving the tents, animals and all other material in these Hippodrome cars, berths will be provided in those devoted to the personnel of the company for nearly all the employes. Besides the great exhibition tents, and stable tents for the horses and other animals. There is also attached to the company a large corps of blacksmiths and carpenters and builders, some of whom precede the show several days, to make ready for the exhibition by preparing the ground, erecting seats, etc. The dressing-room tents alone will cover more ground than an ordinary circus.

"To move such an enormous establishment without hitch or delay requires the employment of clear-headed, practical men at the head of each department. Everything is so arranged as to move with the smoothness and precision of clock-work. At the appointed hour the canvas will go up, the street procession will move, the performance will commence. When all is over, and the great tent emptied, everything will be packed up by those detailed for the work, and the caravan, without the loss of a minute, will be on the move toward the next place of exhibition.

"The programme of performance will be varied and attractive. Donaldson will make daily balloon ascensions with a car large enough to contain a company of five or six persons, at a cost of about $500 a day for this feature alone. Then there will be the 'Roman races' in chariots driven by 'Amazons;' the 'liberty races' in which forty wild horses are turned loose in the arena, in exact imitation of the famous carnival races of Rome and Naples; 'standing races,' in which the riders stand on bare-back horses; hurdle races for ladies; flat races by English, French and American jockeys; besides camel, elephant and ostrich and monkey races. Another feature will be the exhibition of Indian life on the plains, in which the actors will be scores of Indians, with their squaws and pappooses. They will put up a genuine Indian encampment, hunt real buffaloes, give war dances, pony races, foot races against horses, exhibitions of daring horsemanship, lasso-throwing. A band of Mexican riders, mounted on famous mustangs, will make a pretended attack on the Indian camp and give a mimic but faithful representation of the wild scenes enacted on the Western frontier. The English stag hunt will be an exact picture of the sport itself, with a company of 150 men and women in full hunting costume, and a large pack of English stag-hounds. There will also be many other interesting and attractive features, the mere mention of which would make a small volume.

"Mr. Barnum certainly deserves great credit for an enterprise which is calculated to afford a vast amount of innocent, popular amusement; and although this gigantic venture involves an enormous outlay of money it will present too many attractions not to be generally sustained."

Amazing as this exhibition seems from the description given by Harper's, we can say, from actual observation, that one feature is to be introduced into the traveling Roman Hippodrome more interesting and instructive than any other. It is the great procession known as "The Congress of Monarchs." The Harper's omitted mentioning this because, probably, they supposed Mr. Barnum would not dare incur the expense of transporting such an enormous affair through the country. But he will do so, and here is a brief description of this dazzling and bewildering exhibition, as given by a New York contemporary:

"Of all the gorgeous pageants the world ever saw the 'Congress of Nations' is the greatest, and how the surpassing genius of even Barnum could produce it is a wonder. The costumes are true to life, and many of them are genuine, having been procured direct from the nationalities which they represent. The individuals employed to personate the historical characters have the most faithful resemblance to the originals in face and physique. Each nation finds its special portraiture in some kind of triumphal car, brilliantly bedecked with appropriate flags, emblems, colors and intricate devices, and all sorts of characteristics in the way of peculiar uniforms, animals, soldiery, attendants and music. Scores of glistening gilded chariots illumine the arena with a halo of luster, as it were, and the display of royal splendor is far more imposing and impressive than words can describe, thrilling the auditor with unspeakable amazement and admiration.

"As the name of the grand Congress implies, it is a stupendous gathering of the Monarchs of the universe, bringing in vivid view the living Kings, Queens, Rulers and Potentates of the past nine centuries, culminating in an affecting finale so touching that it must awaken the emotions of a stoic. Her Majesty, the Queen of England, heads the glittering column, surrounded by her royal court and followed by a long ancestral line, the notability and richly-uniformed "life guardsmen." Then France, in the person of Napoleon the First and his famous Field Marshals; Ireland, Rome, Russia, Germany, Italy, Turkey, India, Japan, China, and so on, until all the Monarchs and Courts of the entire world pass in review, winding up like a jewel-besprinkled coil around the continuous circle. To look upon this beautiful historical procession in all its grandness and greatness is equivalent to sitting in full view of the courts of all the earth, so truthfully realistic are the bewildering pictures revealed in rapid succession. Such a dazzling half mile of solid gold, jewels, silver, precious stones and tinsel could only be produced after years of preparation and the expenditure of half a dozen competencies. Any attempt at imitation on the part of ambitious and unscrupulous showmen for years to come will result in the most inglorious failure. None other than the 'Prince of Showmen' himself would undertake it, and none other than the great and irrepressible Barnum could achieve so signal a triumph."

This entire exhibition is advertised to exhibit in New England in May, New York, etc., in June, Chicago early in July, Ohio, Illinois and Michigan in July and August.

It is due to our readers that we inform them that Mr. Barnum announces that certain imposters in Cincinnati have copied his bills, posters, cuts and advertisements, and with a few broken-down circus horses and wagons will precede his exhibition in the West, and by announcing the Great Roman Hippodrome will attempt to make the public believe that it is his unrivaled establishment. He cautions the public against being thus deceived, and reminds them that it would be impossible with any amount of money to organize and equip even a semblance of his establishment without a preparation of several years. The Cincinnati Daily Enquirer of Feb. 27, 1875, says that this pretended "Hippodrome" is simply the "wreck" of that stupendous fraud known as the Great Eastern and Great Southern Circus and Menagerie combination, which exploded at Selma, Ala., the 16th of last November, a number of horses having to be sold to pay the expenses of shipping the show to this city, where the proprietors left a number of their employes unpaid and penniless, and vamosed. Who the real proprietors of the business were still remains a matter of considerable mystery, but it is generally believed that Andy Haight, one Gibbons and George Weber and others were large stockholders. The defrauded circus men and others connected with the concern finally obtained the aid of the law to compel a settlement of their just claims, and the whole matter ended in the show being attached at Hamilton, and in an auction sale of the circus property at Lebanon yesterday afternoon.

"The best of the joke is that De Haven, Webber, Gibbons and others are about to reorganize a Hippodrome out of the 'wreck' to start out with next summer on another tour.

"The whole show was rather a poor concern, only a few lions being in good condition, and the menagerie including no really rare or valuable animals."

Our readers have only to use ordinary caution to discover which is the real and which is the bogus concern, though we see that Mr. Barnum complains that some shows obtain an employe named Barnum, and then advertise "Barnum's latest enterprise," and resort to other devices wherein they use the name "Barnum" to deceive the public. He says that all exhibitions with which he is connected will give his initials, "P. T.," and also publish his portrait by way of identification. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

As Mr. Barnum's great Hippodrome travels under an expense of nearly $10,000 each day it can exhibit only in large cities. These can be reached by cheap excursion trains. Mr. Barnum says he can easily lose half a million of dollars by this summer's experiment, and that in any event he shall not bring back his Hippodrome from Europe. It is patronized and approved by the clergy and religious classes, as well as by schoolteachers and all heads of refined families who desire their children to improve their minds under this great system of "object-teaching." Beyond all question this is the most extensive and extraordinary exhibition on the face of the earth, and probably this generation will "never see its like again."

Her Vapor Bath.

Says a writer in the St. Louis Republican: "She will not take a vapor bath again very soon, though the one she took recently was by no means lacking in results. One of her friends had been telling her of the beneficial effects of baths of this kind and giving definite advice regarding its preparation, so she resolved to try it. The extemporized bath was arranged by filling a saucer with whiskey, in which was placed some boneset and sassafras. Then she placed the saucer on the floor, and over it placed a cane-bottomed chair, taking a seat in the chair dressed a la Eve, save that a huge blanket enveloped the whole outfit. An attendant then lifted a corner of the blanket and applied a match to the whiskey in order to produce the gentle, soothing vapor which was expected to arise and do worlds of good. Would that a veil could be drawn over the subsequent proceedings, but an ordinary veil wouldn't cover 'em. The gentle, soothing vapor didn't arise, but a red hot, scorching flame did arise, like lightning, to the height of about five feet from the saucer, there was a terrific report, and the bath-taker was lifted off the chair on the wings of a sirocco, and deposited, half grilled, in a corner of the room. And now she is nearly well, but opposed to extempore vapor baths."

MODERN MEDICAL DISCOVERY.—It is claimed that disease, with a few exceptions, has been conquered by the research and intellect of enlightened men; and yet a noted professor of New York admits that "of all sciences, medicine is the most uncertain," and that thousands are annually slaughtered in the sick room." Certain "schools" of medicine are in existence, one of which "makes the patient ill," in order to claim a cure; and another administers "sugar-coated bread pills," relying upon nature to effect her own cures. DR. J. WALKER, of California, an old and respected physician, tried both modes of treatment and both failed. He then appealed to nature's curative—herbs; and now enjoys rugged health. He has given the benefit of his discovery to the world, in the shape of VINEGAR BITTERS, and since its introduction has sold a quantity almost large enough to make a small harbor, or to float the "Great Eastern." Its curative properties are attested by grateful thousands. 31

AUBURN INDIANA, APRIL 22, 1875.

Some crazy fellow at Washington the other day, wanted to play in the role of Brutus to our Cæsar—Grant, by shooting the President on the spot. He was sent to the insane asylum, but the penitentiary was the proper place.

Fred Grant has resigned his colonel's commission, and goes into private life as a real estate speculator, leaving the country practically defenceless in case any of our turbulent neighbors kick up a rumpus.

Deadhead railroad riding is played out on some of the New England railroads. President Grant and party had to purchase tickets on going from New York to Boston the other day. And yet we call this a republic.

There are still two or three of the salary-grab Congressmen out in the cold, but Grant is giving them places as fast as possible. The people refused to vote for them but the policy of the administration seems to be to compel the people to support them in some Federal office.

The Indianapolis Journal says that a year ago there was $259.670 58 in the treasury, and now it is empty. The Sentinel says that two years ago when the present city treasurer went into office he found in the treasury $93583 78, and that there is $90,000 in it now. How these rascally figures do lie.

The Logansport Journal says: "Gen Joe Hawley realizes, perhaps, by this time, that he can't successfully fight his own party and the Democracy, too.

No sir, no man can do that and win. He should have dropped the fight against the latter, and he would have came out ahead like nearly all the rest.

When Old Bill Allen now governor of Ohio, was put upon the track for that office, the Radical press pronounced him a fosilized antediluvian and such endearing names as that. But since "Old Ben Wade," has been talked of for a probable candidate next fall, who is older than Gov Allen, you don't hear a word said about that time anterior to the flood. It makes some differance whose ox is gored. The Indianian says:

He asserts his fealty to the Republican party, and has unalterable belief that upon its continued ascendancy in the councils of the nation "the best interests of the Republic, if not the Republic itself," depend.

That may look well on paper, sound well to those who want office in the Radical camp but let the fair, intelligent reader look from this to the present administration at Washington, and see where the "best interests" comes in. It is to the "best interests" of the Republic that men repudiated by the people, shall be elevated to the highest offices both at home and abroad. But we won't stop to enumerate, we have not the time nor room to give one-tenth the misdeeds for which Gen. Hawly had to apologize for in Connecticut.

The Libels on Cincinnati.

The late city election was a fair one. When we say a fair one, we mean to say that there was no election ever held in Ohio, in any city or town, that was fairer. There was no obstruction at any of the polls. There was no mob in their vicinity. There was no mobs at all. The polls were not taken possession of by any party or any body. Not a single elector who did not vote pretends that it was owing to his inability to get to the polls from coercion The vote polled, although a large one, is many thousand short of what Cincinnati has a right by the census to expect. Therefore, what are we to think of the Cincinnati Gazette, which has given its cue to Republican country papers to represent our late election as a fraud? They say, and they derive their inspiration form the Gazette, that all the polls were taken forcibly possession of by mobs, and that Republicans were not permitted to vote. They say that our lives, liberty and property can not be permitted to be under the control of our own administration. They say that these must be taken away from us, and that the people of Cincinnati must no loger elect their Mayor and other executive and legislative officers. Cincinnati has heretofore had a good reputation among the cities for the honesty of its civic administration. It has been a model. That is not a credit to be rashly and suddenly taken away. It is not to be forfeited by any momentary public excesses.—Enquirer.

Enormous Cost of the Army.

Like every other branch of the public service, the cost of the army under Grant since the close of the civil war has augmented enormously in comparison with the peace establishment previous to that time. Instead of reducing the expenditures in accordance with the charged condition of the country and at once cutting off the excrescences which annually absorb many millions, the Administration and the Republican majorities in Congress have protected and encouraged the abuses which grew up during the rebellion, until they have become a grevious burden on the Treasury and the taxpayers.

It is now ten years since peace was proclaimed, and while not an acre of territory has been acquired in that time, and the number of Indians on the frontier has been largely reduced and necessity for military protection diminished, the expenditures for the army are double what they were and what they ought to be.

The figures of the last annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury present this contract most strikingly, and serve to show how retrenchment on a large scale may be made, without impairing the efficiency of the army or reducing the force below the actual wants of the country.

The five fiscal years preceding the rebellion, which cover Mr. Buchanan's term and the first four months of Mr. Lincoln's give these results:

ARMY—UNDER BUCHANAN.

1857—By Treasury report	$19,159,150 87
1858—By Treasury report	25,679 122 63
1859—By Treasury report	23,154,720 53
1860—By Treasury report	16,472,202 72
1861—By Treasury report	23,001,530 67
Total	$107,466,726 43

With this basis established the comparison of cost is startling:

ARMY—UNDER GRANT.

1870—By Treasury report	$57,655,675 40
1871—By Treasury report	35,799,981 82
1872—By Treasury report	35,372,157 20
1873—By Treasury report	46 323,138 31
1874—By Treasury report	52,313,927 22
Total	$217,464,889 85
Annual average	$43,492,977 99

RECAPITULATION.

Five years under Grant	$217,464,860 95
Five years under Buchanan	107,466,726 42
Excess under Grant	109,998,163 53

Or in the other form:

Annual average under Grant	$43,492,977 99
Annual average under Buchanan	21,493,345 28
Annual excess under Grant	$21,999, 632 71

Both these periods represent a state of peace, and without any disturbing elements which added materially to the regular charges, or affected one more than the other. They may be fairly considered almost parallel in their necessities. Even if measured by the growth of the country, which has been used as a pretext to extinuate these huge expenditures, there is nothing in that fact which can possibly justify the disporportionate increase.

Gen. Grosvenor, a leading Republican member of the Ohio Legislature, is prepared to assert that the session just closed, did an immense amount of work of interest to the state, which was lost sight of in the hurry of the closing hours. He is also free to say that the charges of corruption, dissipation" and all that sort of things," made against the members of the Legislature are either grossly exaggerated or entirely unfounded. He thinks compared with preceding ones, its work is fully up to the average. Opinions of this class from such a source will have weight, and will be of service in the approaching canvass.

There has been a good deal said about the last session of the Legislature of this State, but when facts are considered it seems to have got along much better than that of two years ago. The Legislature of 1872-3, sat 101 days and passed 154 bills which became laws, and three bills which were vetoed. The Legis'ature of 1875 enacted four more laws than the Legislature of 1872-3 in thirty-three days less time and at less expenditures of $7,095 77. In other words it took thirty-three days more time, and cost eight-thousand dollars more money for the Legislature of 1872-3 to pass 154 laws than it required the Legislature of 1875 to pass 158 laws.

Thats not so bad for the people. As to the character of the bills, it passed, we know of one that will be a saving of a million dollars to the tax-payers of the State—the new fee and salary bill That ain't so bad either. True many of the members were crude in the way of legislatvie matters, and like Othello "rude in speech," but they were for the most part honest, and tried to represent their constituents fairly. We speak now of both parties in the House wouldn't vouch for the Senate to the value of a cent.

NO MIDDLE MEN with us: this is the secret of our immense sale. We buy at first hands and sell direct to the consumer; hence, we save our customers the profits of the [illegible] jobber and wholesale merchants. These profits amount to from 10 to [illegible] of them. Take Teas, for instance, the profits on that article are so great that [illegible] doubled values of each has the consumer. Of course [illegible] persuade you that his Teas are worth the money, that they cost him [illegible] the trouble is he has paid too much in the first place and can't help himself. PETIT JURORS—The following is a list of the Petit Jurors drawn for the term of the Circuit Court, to be held in may 1875.

C. F. Mader,	Jonathan Simon,
Jos Walters,	Jeremiah Rhodes,
R. G. Daniels,	John Yard,
Cyrus Bowman,	Joseph McKay,
Wm. Cox,	Freeman Kelly,
W. M. Farrington,	Joseph Sewell.

The social of the Presbyterian church will be entertained by Mrs. Swineford, next Saturday afternoon, Saturday being chosen by Mrs. Swineford, as a more convenient day to entertain the large crowd that is desired and expected. Our citizens have never failed to have a good time at the Swineford house. All are cordially invited.

A number of our citizens are afflicted with the mumps. They are a bad thing to have, but still a fellow looks healthy and how come you so about the "gonzz" We had the mumps on both sides, and we felt toward them now just as Grant does about the third term,—pleas count us out.

Mr Henry Burgess, of Fort Wayne, has made a proposition to build an Opera House in that city costing $100,000, provided certain property fronting on the Court House square is deeded to him—Columbia City Post.

Mr. Burgess would have erected a fine block in this place if he could have secured the real estate at a reasonable figure.

IT is a well known and settled fact that our popular lumber merchants F. N. Wright & Co., are selling more [illegible] lath and shingles, than any other establishment in this part of the State. A large and varied assortment of pine lumber, of every possible description, is now on the ground, and a visit to these yards will convince you that they mean just what they say. This firm can furnish the best Genoa White Lime, taken from the car, at prices that will astonish the citizens of Auburn and surrounding country. Yards on Jackson street, near Berry's Planing Mill.

WITH such men as D. D. Snyder, proprietor of the Excelsior Hardware store in the market, the Opposition will find it pulling hard against the stream. Mr. Snyder is no 'snide,' but a simon pure 'brick,' and that he has a well appointed establishment everybody knows, at least those who have visited it. His motto being excelsior, he aims to live up to that standard. We take pleasure in calling attention to the large and varied stock of goods now in store at this house, which are offered at Bottom prices. Farmers, mechanics, artizans, professionals and all classes, will therefore take notice.

A LIVELY SHOOTING AFFRAY.—We learn that a lively shooting affray occurred at Waterloo last Friday night. It seems that Firm Stough and Skip Barnhart, of that city, between whom there has existed an old "grudge," met upon the streets when an altercation ensued. After a few words Barnhart advanced towards Stough in a threatening manner, when the former "jerked" a six shooter and commenced to bang away at the latter. Stough fired five shots altogether, two of which took effect; one in the shoulder and the other in the hip. Barnhart's wounds are not considered dangerous. No arrest has been made as far as heard from.

LAST Monday night at 12 o'clock was the time set by the Second Adventists for a general bon-fire of this mundane sphere. They had set their hearts on a sure thing this time and some even went so far as to give many of their earthly goods away, firmly believing they would have no further use for them. That particular element by which we were to be made an ash heap, did not put in an appearance, and it had to be postponed on account of the weather. When they want to get up another of those fourth of July celebrations, they want to take warm weather for it. Just now a good sized fire would be appreciated, and would not have that christianizing effect that an occasion like this should have.

THE [illegible] Standard says we were snubbed during the late excursion, from our remarks as to the composition of the party. Thus ascribes to us a faculty we always thought we had, and now we have the above authority that we do really possess it. Some people don't know when they are snubbed, even some editors. But here is the way it was done, and we think Myers receives his full share of the snubbing, but as we said before, don't know 't:

"The country quill-drivers on the recent Indiana editorial excursion South were, "Oh, so charmed!" by the answer of an Indianapolis lady with the party, who, on being asked at New Orleans if the crowd fairly represented the citizens of Indiana, replied: "Oh, no, indeed, sir; I assure you they do not. There are only about a dozen of us, from Indianapolis, who make any pretentions to refinement; all the rest are editors from the "rural" counties, and, of course, sir, do not have the opportunity nor the society that we have."

THE innate depravity of human nature was illustrated the other day by the following incident which fell under our observation. A big boy was walking along the street carrying a large baby crib, having removed a slat or two and placed himself inside the frame, for convenience in managing his awkward burden. A number of small boys saw the situation and improved it. The large boy was assailed with a shower of soul-harrowing remarks, which no self respecting large boy could endure. Down went the crib and out clambered l. b. only to find the s. b.'s scattered and flying. Then l. b. resumed his place again, and his tormentors immediately buzzed around him. This process was repeated again and again until the l. b. at last found sanctuary in his own door-yard, and, wiping his torture-corrugated brow, turned, to find his persecutors disappear in various directions, happy in the consciousness of another piece of mischief successfully accomplished.

Don't Fail to Read This!

That season of the year has arrived when a change of clothing will be necessary, and when purchasing, one should keep in view the new styles to be worn this year. It has been said that one might as well be out of the world as out of fashion, and therefore care should be taken to get the new and reliable styles. In the Millinery and Fancy Goods line, Mr. E Martin & Co., in Ford's building Main st are offering extra inducements to purchasers. Everything that is new and desirable in [illegible] been added to their fine stock until now they have one of the finest assortments in this line in the State. In the department of hats for ladies wear alone they have one hundred and forty different varieties, embracing every possible shape and style imaginable. We don't believe there is a lady in the country but what can be suited in this fine display. And in the department of Fancy Goods they stand unexcelled. It is only necessary to call and convince yourself that the half has not been told. While their stock stands unparalleled, this is not the only feature of this enterprising establishment. They have purchased carefully exercising good judgment with a view to sell at the lowest possible figure. To learn how effectually they have accomplished their object, go and ascertain the very low figures at which they are now offering their goods. They give special attention to making bonnets and other goods to order, cutting and trimming, and furnish patterns of the latest style. It will certainly pay those who need goods in this line to call at this bazaar of fashion before purchasing.

THE [illegible] there has been a change in the management of the Woolen Mills in this place. G. A. Porter, Esq., heretofore the foreman in the mechanical department, is now general manager of the establishment in place of Mr. Gress. His large experience in every department of the business, certainly qualifies him to run the mills with every assurance of success. He wishes to inform the public that he is making new improvements, and completing arrangements to meet the demand of the people during the wool season, which is now near at hand. He will be prepared to turn out custom work in splendid order, as he will make this a special business. Everybody wanting any wool-carding done should not fail to call. He will also keep on hand a fine stock of Jeans, Cassimeres, Satinets, Flannels, etc., which will be exchanged for wool or sold for cash at the lowest figures. Our people should patronize home industry. Here is a chance. Take your wool to the factory, get a good price for it, and buy your goods at the lowest prices at the same place.

OF all the improvements now being made in Auburn, or that are in contemplation, none are more needed than some large manufacturing establishments, and the inducements that would be given by the citizens for any enterprise of that kind would be far greater than in any other locality in this part of the State. DeKalb County is well cleared, the soil very productive, and the climate healthy; its productions are far in excess of consumption and yearly increasing, and Auburn, the County seat, affords ample facilities for cheap-living, as her markets are abundantly furnished with all the necessaries, as well as the luxuries of life. Our town is rapidly increasing in population, buildings of all kinds are springing up in all directions, and the sound of the hammer is heard from early morning till evening hour, life, activity and encouragement greets us on every hand. The high order of our schools, churches, business houses, enterprising citizens, healthy climate, soil, road facilities, all combine to make Auburn a most desirable place of residence. An event has recently occurred in the transfer of real estate, that opens up a location for some manufacturing establishment unsurpassed in the State. One of our most liberal and enterprising citizens has recently purchased forty acres immediately adjoining our city, and only separated from it by a beautiful stream of water, a portion of which will be offered to capitalists on the most reasonable terms. Waterloo and the Commissioners would have located our jail there, had they not feared it would have worked an injury to a locality designed by nature for manufacturing establishments. We invite capitalists to come and see us, assuring them that liberal inducements will be offered.

CORUNNA ITEMS—Our village has commenced summer business and our merchants feel encouraged at the amount of trade already done.

Levi Harding delivered a very able sermon on last Sabbath at the M. E. Church A large crowd was in attendance.

Rosenberry runs a saloon in his cellar which is a good, cool place for beer in summer.

Barney Dearborn has got the hotel painted in grand style, which improves its appearance.

Al. McKee has received an artificial limb and he walks over the sidewalks as natural as if he had never met a misfortune.

Bill Adams says there is a certain lady in town that punches holes in her mother's tinware, so that W. J. Wallace can mend them.

James Toping has been suffering lately with the erysipelas in his face. Count us out.

Our friend Mart Shaffer seems to enjoy married life quite well, always appearing joval and happy.

Dan Pifer has opened his great led mines and great excitement prevails.—Hear ye, hear ye.

The boys here are getting into line for base ball, and will visit Auburn during the summer.

Lafe Miller was on the "mule rampage" again the other day. His right bower saved him.

Al. McKee has started a first-class saloon in rear of George McMillen's meat market.

Adam Conrad is the Township Assessor this year and he is kept very busy at present.

M. Hall has the office of sexton in the U. B. Church. He is just the man for the place, and the boys are fast finding it out.

[illegible] the Indiana editorial Excursion that traversed the South, became infatuated with the genial clime and hospitality of the Southern people, consequently has purchased a fine plantation on the margin of a lake in Leon County, Florida, near Tallahassee, the Capital of the Italy of America. The Gen. will engage in Agricultural, Piscatorial and Alligatorial pursuits. He can raise cotton and corn and, catch fish in the lake near by.

The crop of Alligators will be very satisfactory. It takes quite a number of years for them to mature to render them serviceable to the wants of man—such as eating and furnishing leather for boots and shoes. The young do not require but little attention; they can be let loose to roam wherever they choose. It will be advisable to throw in a few dog puppies, lambs and pigs, at certain seasons of the year. They relish such delicacies with a gusto,—requiring neither salt, pepper, or condiments.—Fort Wayne Sunday Courier.

We were actually driven to it Brother namesake by the long, cold winter that is still so reluctant to leave us. We left home with a cold shiver which clung to us until the Sunny South opened up her resplendent beauties to our enraptured vision. When we beheld instead of the wintry blast, all nature clothed in beauty and loveliness, every breeze laden with the balm of a thousand flowers, and nature's songsters warbling their sweetest notes, that seemed to come from consecrated bowers, loved messengers of innocence and truth; we must confess that our infatuation was complete. The presumptive occupation planned out for us by our facetious neighbor seems rather presumptive, but if we conclude to go into the Alligator business, we shall certainly invite our Sunday editor to make us a visit and give us full instructions on the subject in which he proves himself so familiar and competent. If young Alligators require dog-pups and pigs certain seasons, we would naturally suppose that older ones equally relished garlic and sap-heads; however we leave the tastes and habits of that amphibious animal in the hands of those that have given evidence of experience and familiarity.

We give an extract below from the pen of Dr. Maxwell, of Benton County, who accompanied the excursion. We think it corroborates all we have said about Florida: "Our drive to Lake Jackson was very pleasant. Among the many things of interest we saw, we remember oleander bushes along the roadside, growing wild, four or five inches in diameter, and twenty feet high; and we saw some of these same kind of trees in the public square in the city used as hitching posts; heliotropes in full bloom, growing on stumps and old logs, japonicas, single and double, and jessamines, blooming in profuse abundance, perfuming the atmosphere to an extent that reminded one of some tale of a fairy land. Corn in fields four inches high, blackberries and dewberries as large as beans, and in great abundance. We rode through a sweet orange grove from which the oranges had all been plucked, and in the front yard of the house near by, saw a large stump 15 or 20 feet high, covered with a rank vine of English ivy.

Lake Jackson is a beautiful sheet of water, ten miles long by six wide, full of fine fish. We could see many fish from the shore, but the alligators kept shy of Hoosier eyes. After throwing some stones in the water, gathering some seed canes from under a large magnolia tree and some moss from the branches of an immense live oak that stood on the bank of the lake, and a few leaves from some everglades near by, we started on our return to Tallahassee.

About one mile from the city we turned aside to see the grounds of Mr. Miller, a Northern man, who had been residing there for a couple of years, engaged in gardening and fruit raising He had ten acres in cucumbers last year, from which he realized between three and four thousand dollars profit, besides several acres in sweet potatoes and other truck. His cucumbers were up already, and his gardens looked as ours will in May. He had planted quite largely of scuppernong grapes, lemons, oranges, figs and some peaches and apple trees. We saw figs formed on some fig trees only two years old, but the strangest wonder of all was a peach tree, at least seven feet high, that had bloomed this spring, and upon whose branches were peaches larger than peas; and that tree had been raised from the pit of a peach ripened and eaten the summer of 1873. About sixteen months ago the sprout, then about six inches high had been transplanted, and carefully placed where it now stands. Think of it, ye Hoosiers, a citizen of Florida can eat peaches this summer taken from a tree grown from fruit that was eaten two years previously!

We may have occasion in the future to refer to the climate of northern Florida, and we will only add now that our whole party were delighted with every thing that we saw and learned of the country in and about this delightful city. The beautiful name it bears, Tallahassee, will often, in future years, be repeated by us not only for the sake of the pleasant memoirs it recalls, but also for the poetry and music there is in the name itself.

WHERE in Samhill are all the tramp printers. We haven't seen one since "swift John" was here.

Mrs. Little and Miss Fair have the largest Millinery stock in the city. Goods sold very cheap.

THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 1875.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A telegram from Hoyleton, Pa., dated April 10, says: "A great fire in the Stockton mine is raging furiously, and the flames are steadily creeping into the mines that connect with it. Every hour men who are fighting the flames are dragged out insensible, overcome with noxious gases. This fire is alarming the operators, and they say it is more serious than [illegible] Tweed's property in New York and vicinity has been seized by the city government to make good his stealings....Michael Sullivan was hanged at New Brunswick, N. J., on April 9, for the murder of Daniel Talmage.

DeWitt gave up on the 57th mile.... A fire in New York last Sunday morning destroyed two or three buildings, causing a loss of about $325,000. Several buildings in Millerstown, Pa., were burned last week. Loss, $100,000.

A dispatch of the 12th inst., from Hazleton, Pa., says: "The foes that the mine-owners now have to contend against, together with the turbulent strikers, are water and fire. All through this region, water is playing sad havoc, and, if the miners should surrender to-night, it would require months to place the property in working order. In the Stockton mine, the flames are raging with tremendous fury, and spreading in all directions. Strategy has been exhausted, and the only thing now that can extinguish the fire is water, and, when this mine is flooded, all others that connect with it must be filled. At the lowest calculation, loss by this calamity will amount to half a million."

Chas. D. Thompson, agent for the Cave Foundry and Machine Shop, of Providence, R. I., who was charged with being a defaulter to the extent of $7,000, and who fled to New York, shot himself in the head while officers were endeavoring to arrest him in the latter city, inflicting a fatal wound.

The regular scalping season will open immediately....The Chicago Times, discussing the probabilities of the coming crop of breadstuffs, states that though the fall wheat was badly damaged by the severe winter in many places, and the farmers discouraged by last year's low prices, yet on the whole the growth is thrifty and gives promise of an unusually abundant harvest, and the production in the West may be set down as fully up to the average.

An Indian battle is reported from the Cheyenne Agency. The hostile Indians, to the number of 2,000, became tired of restraint, and broke away from the guard. Four companies in pursuit of the fugitives were repulsed with sixteen killed and wounded.

Last week the Louisiana House of Representatives, by the decisive vote of 89 to 18, accepted the Congressional award according to the terms of the Wheeler compromise as a basis of settlement. A resolution was adopted to the effect that, without approving, the Legislature will not disturb the Kellogg government, nor will any attempt be made to impeach the Governor for his past acts, but he will receive support in enforcing the laws and maintaining the peace of the State; the settlement to remain unchanged until the next general election.

THE TILTON-BEECHER TRIAL.

Sixty-Seventh Day.—Mr. Beecher continued his testimony, which related almost wholly to Mrs. Moulton's sworn statement of her various interviews with him, and in which, upon several occasions, according to her evidence, he confessed and admitted the truth of Tilton's charges. Each and every one of the material points in Mrs. Moulton's evidence were flatly contradicted by Mr. Beecher.

Sixty-eighth Day.—The direct examination of Mr. Beecher was brought to a close. The witness wound up with a solemn and emphatic denial of guilt, and was at once taken in hand by Judge Fullerton, the great cross-examiner.

Sixty-ninth Day.—Judge Fullerton continued the cross-examination of the great defendant. The famous letter of contrition, and several other documents formed the subjects of some sharp questioning.

A Warning to Jokers.—One of those cruel follies termed practical jokes recently met with a sad termination. A young girl having been highly agitated by attending a series of revival meetings, one of her acquaintances dressed in white robes, with muslin wings, and powdered face, and stole into her room at night. The girl awoke, and seeing what she took to be an angel standing by her bedside, screamed with terror. The other girls rushed in expecting to enjoy a good laugh, but the poor girl was literally frightened out of her senses, and had to be taken to an insane asylum.

During his lifetime Horace Greeley lent $16,000 to persons from whom the estate can receive nothing.

INDIANA NEWS.

PERSONAL.

Adolph Lien, a dentist, of Boonville, has struck a vein of unusual good fortune. He invented a new patent rocking-chair, and on Tuesday he received from Washington an offer of $5,000 for the patent. He has refused it, as he thinks it will be worth considerably more.

Louis Shaw, of Indianapolis, is the favorite in the pool selling at the Chicago tournament of Northwestern and Southwestern billiard players.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Father Hamilton, pastor of St. Mary's Catholic Church, at Lafayette, died very suddenly of heart disease, on Friday last.

N. B. Palmer, an old citizen of Indianapolis, once State Treasurer, and President of the first railroad built in Indiana, died Monday night, the result of a fall some days ago—aged 84 years.

An old man named Henry G. Ogden, aged about seventy years, who has lived the life of a hermit for the last twenty years, was found dead in his house, near Liberty, last week. When found he was in a standing position, with a death grip on a table. He is thought to have had money hoarded, but none has been found.

CASUALTIES.

A sad accident occurred on the Kankakee marsh last Friday, the particulars of which are as follows: Myron Mee, youngest son of Mr. George E. Mee, of Lowell, with one or two others, went to the marsh to kill ducks. The marsh being covered with water, they took flour barrels along on which to stand. Endeavoring to get on the barrel young Mee slipped, and the lock of his gun struck against the flour barrel, and its contents were discharged into one of his hands and his face. Two fingers and the thumb of his left hand were blown off, and the shot penetrated one eye, entirely ruining it, and other shot struck him him in the ear, cheek, chin, and forehead.

Paul Beyer, 15 years old, spending vacation at Kendallville, was drowned in Bixler lake last week. With other boys he went out in a boat to spear fish, and by some mishap the boat was capsized. All were rescued except Paul.

A young man named George Lang, while engaged in digging a well on the brick-yard property of Jacob May, east of Lafayette, became overpowered by some kind of poisonous gas, and died before assistance reached him. The body was recovered by means of hooks.

LEGAL.

An important suit has been filed in the Circuit Court at Indianapolis, involving the title to the land upon which the thriving town of Edinburg, Johnston county, is situated. The land in dispute is valued at $100,000.

During a street parade of a circus at Richmond thieves entered Nicholson's book store by the back door, and while the clerks were watching the parade, opened the safe and stole nearly $1,000 in money, checks, and notes.

POLITICAL.

The Indianapolis Journal says: "There is a fair prospect that one of the national political conventions may be held in this city next year. We learn from Senator Morton that the matter has already been somewhat discussed in the National Committee, of which he is a member, and from present indications either Cincinnati or this city will be decided on. Senator Morton will, of course, use what influence he possesses in favor of Indianapolis. It also stated that the Democratic Committee favors holding their convention in a Western city, and this place has been named among others. Between the two we stand a fair chance of getting one."

RAILROADS.

The Indianapolis railways have been doing an excellent passenger business the last week, heavier than in any week for many months.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The receipts of wolf and fox scalps, for which a bounty of $5 is paid, is rapidly depleting the Tippecanoe County Treasury. One individual marched into the Auditor's office the other day and deposited four fine young foxes in that official's lap, demanding $20.

A California Goose.

The season of wonderful fish and bird and snake stories is fairly inaugurated, and, as might have been expected, the Pacific slope, with its big trees and its big vegetables and fruits, produces also the prize zoological romances. The last story which comes is of a wild goose of the past and the present. One Mr. Abe Green, a mighty hunter, went forth to hunt lately on Cache creek, near Yolo, Cal., and saw in the course of his rambles a wild goose sitting at the edge of the water. Mr. Abe Green crept up as close to the bird as he thought prudent, and the thunder of his overloaded shotgun reverberated up and down the creek, but the wild goose didn't budge. Then Mr. Abe Green went up to fathom the mystery, and discovered a wonderful thing. The goose he shot at was a petrified goose, and the load from his gun had only clipped off a tiny fraction of its wing. He lifted the goose from the ground, and as he did so a piece of its breast dropped out, disclosing a hollow inside, from which pure, clear water commenced running. The feathers of the goose, though of stone, were natural in appearance, and the general look of the bird was altogether life-like. Mr. Abe Green took the solid curiosity to his cabin, where it is now undergoing inspection by the curious.

Another illustration of the character of the professional tramp may be found in the following route taken from the pocket of one of them, in Connecticut: "New Haven to Birmingham, 8 miles, ask for supper and breakfast; to Seymour, 5 miles, go to selectman, he will send you to a tavern; to Naugatuck, 8 miles, go to selectman, get crackers and cheese; to Waterbury, 6 miles, police station; to Newtown, 16 miles, selectman; to Danbury, about 10 miles, police station; to Brewster station, State of New York, poormaster; from Brewster make to Newburgh, then to Goshen, then to Milbourn. Take the west track."

Sully, the painter, a man distinguished for refinement of manners as well as success in art, was at a party one evening. Speaking of a belle who was a great favorite, "Ah," said he, "she has a mouth like an elephant." "Oh, Mr. Sully, how can you be so rude!" "Rude, ladies, rude! What do you mean? I say she has got a mouth like an elephant, because it is full of ivory."

FINANCE AND TRADE.

Weekly Review of the Chicago Market.

FINANCIAL.

An active movement of currency from the interior to this city and thence to New York is noted, and but little demand for currency for the country—as farmers are not sending forward any produce to amount to anything, comparatively speaking. Demand for local speculative purposes fair. Interest notes 7@10 per cent., according to securities. Government bonds in demand and firm, as follows:

During the past week the grain markets attracted considerably more attention from speculators than for months past, and at times considerable excitement prevailed. The bull element seemed to have the entire control of the trade, and they used their influence so well that a general advance in values was established on all options, and a more marked advance for immediate delivery. The short interest were alarmed at the evident firmness of the market, and were anxious to provide for their outstanding contracts. The surrounding influences were generally of a favorable tenor, and such as would naturally favor an advance. New York and Liverpool were higher, and the receipts were light, the table published above showing a general excess of shipments for the week, as compared with the receipts, save on oats. There was an increased number of speculative orders received from other markets and from the interior. The opening of navigation is rapidly drawing near, and some activity is shown in shipping circles, there being a fair demand for grain for shipment, with several charters already reported. At times a weaker feeling prevailed, shorts withdrawing after buying. The general market, however, was very firm and closed steady at quotations.

Fashion Notes.

Chatelaine pockets are passe.

Sleeveless basques are still in vogue.

Spring calicoes are made with side pleated waists.

Ladies' boot-heels are higher than ever in Paris.

Velvet spencers are coming into favor.

There is a horrid rumor of the restoration of crinoline.

Long, heavy ear-rings, almost reaching to the shoulder, are the thing.

Worth's novelty is the costume all-in-one, waist, skirt and polonaise. This is really a princesse dress, with long back in Marguerite shape, cut in from English forms sloping outward on the tournure.

Hair, nowadays, the women twist into a knot at the back of the head; no matter if no bigger than a hickory nut, and only takes three hairpins to hold it.

When a woman wears her India shawl wrong side out in order to show that it is real, she wears it not because of its beauty nor because of its warmth, but to display her wealth, and that verges very close on the vulgar.

Deep linen cuffs are now worn outside the dress-sleeve; cut with a deep point on the back, short in front, and closed with three linen buttons on the point.

Handkerchiefs with colored borders, either solid or striped, are allowable for morning and promenade toilets, though never in so good taste as the simple hem-stitched square of linen.

A Paris correspondent tells of a lady in a silk dress flounced to the waist, with a short jacket to match, trimmed round with birds' nests, embedded in a fringe of moss. Another toilet equally extravagant comprised a fourreau of black velvet, fastened down the front with diamond buttons of over a thousand pounds, and a hat all of lolophorle feathers muff to match, and jacket trimmed round with the same.

Dancing Lawyers.

A writer in a London magazine says: "In former times men of the gravest profession did not disdain to dance. Even the Judges, in compliance with ancient custom, long continued to dance annually on Candlemas Day in the hall of Serjeant's Inn, Chancery lane. Lincoln's Inn, too, had its revels—four in each year—with a master duly elected of the society to direct the pastimes. Nor were these 'exercises of dancing,' as Dugdale calls them, merely tolerated; they were held to be 'very necessary, and much conducive to the making of gentlemen more fit for their books at other times.' Indeed, it appears that, by an order made in James I.'s time, the junior bar was severely dealt with for declining to dance; 'the under barristers were by decimation put out of commons for example's sake, because the whole bar offended by not dancing on Candlemas Day preceding, according to the ancient order of this society, when the Judges were present; with this, that if the like fault were committed afterwards they should be fined or disbarred.'"

Facts Worth Remembering.

One thousand shingles laid four inches to the weather will cover over one hundred square feet of surface, and five pounds of shingle-nails will fasten them on.

One-fifth more siding and flooring is needed than the number of square feet of surface to be covered, because of the lap in the siding and matching of the floor.

One thousand laths will cover seventy yards of surface, and eleven pounds of lath-nails will nail them on.

Eight bushels of good lime, sixteen bushels of sand, and one bushel of hair will make enough mortar to plaster one hundred square yards.

A cord of stone, three bushels of lime, and a cubic yard of sand will lay one hundred cubic feet of wall.

Five courses of brick will lay one foot in hight on a chimney, six bricks in a course will make a flue four inches wide and twelve inches long, and eight bricks in a course will make a flue eight inches wide and sixteen inches long.

Teeth and the Phosphates.

In a paper read before the American Dental Society of Europe, Dr. George W. Field showed that healthy blood contained a small percentage of inorganic, bone-making matter, from which the teeth drew support—and as modern economy throws away the phosphate portion of food, the result is that the teeth are starved. In Northern Ireland and Scotland, where oatmeal is a staple dish, the teeth are comparativery sound. For Americans, the right thing to do, for dental reform, would be to return to the old hasty-pudding days—a literary reform too, if there is anything in Sidney Smith's motto, which he claims he proposed for the Edinburgh Review:

"Tenui musam meditamus avena,"

Which may be freely translated:

"We cultivate literature upon a little oat-meal."

Reform in married lives is just as important as reform in marriage laws.

They have a peculiar way of interviewing the managers of the Belgian theatres. During the play a note flutters down from the gallery, and falls on the stage. The audience cry, "Read it! The house of Sylvanus Keller, in Jasper county, Mo., was blown down during the storm of the night of the 30th ult., and Keller, his wife and five children were buried in the ruins. Keller was fastened to the earth by a heavy beam. The ruins took fire, and for a time it seemed that all would be buried alive; but, by a superhuman effort, Keller released himself and rescued his family, excepting one girl, 7 years old, whose head had been crushed by the falling of the house, and whose remains were badly burned.

Moody and Sankey.

There is no hesitation, no beating about the bush; Mr. Moody's earliest request is an eminently hopeful and practical one. "Let us praise God," he exclaims, "for what He is going to do in London;" and forthwith, without more prelude, he gives out the 100th Psalm, the 10,000 people rise together, and, led by the harmonium, sing the grand old lines which all have learnt from their childhood. It may be that "all people that on earth do dwell" are objecting strenuously to comply with the request, the adjuration is none the less determined, and the waves of sound rolls round and round the building, forming a very ocean of melody such as may scarcely be imagined. Preachers and their people alike throw up their heads and shout out the refrain with heart and soul, gallery answers to gallery, the singers on the platform to the chorus below, and when Mr. Sankey calls for renewed expression in the last verse, the audience makes one more grand effort with tremendous effect. A Mr. Billing now offers a short prayer, and with this the "revival" service is inaugurated.—London Daily Telegraph.

A man in Belgium died recently who in Russia had been employed as a diamond searcher in the mines. He managed to secrete a brilliant he had found, of great size and beauty, by cutting a slit in his neck and inserting the stone. When the skin had grown over the incision he applied to be allowed to return home, escaped the searchers, and reached Belgium, where he sold the stone for £12,000. Singularly enough the Emperor of Russia is now the owner of the stone, which he prizes greatly. The fortunate finder was very eccentric, and always dressed in green—bright green, of a light color.

A MAN named Patrick O'Shea was executed at St. Louis, last week, for the murder of his wife. The son of O'Shea, a lad 12 years old, was the principal witness against his father, was most persistent in having him convicted, and walked sixteen miles to witness the execution.

A CRUEL April-fool hoax was perpetrated on nearly all the Hartford (Ct.) clergymen, by sending invitations to them to come to the United States Hotel to unite a couple in marriage. About twenty-four of them came around, to the great delight of the crowd who had assembled to see their discomfiture.

A ROME correspondent of a Paris journal is authority for the statement that the Pope will take up his residence in the United States if it should become impossible to remain in Rome. It is asserted that it was with a view to such a possible emergency that Archbishop McClosky was elevated to the Cardinalate.

TWO HUMAN fiends, Egner and Rufer, were recently sentenced to death at Cincinnati for one of the most atrocious crimes ever perpetrated in this or any other country. They knocked their victim down and threw him into a blazing furnace, thus literally cremating him. Hanging is a light punishment for such a horrid crime.

IMMIGRATION is on the increase. During the first three months of the current year, 17,128 passengers landed at the port of New York, an increase of 1,085 over the corresponding period of 1874. From the registered entries of the destination of passengers who landed at Castle Garden, it seems that 5,000 of these immigrants were going no further than New York; 4,274 to the West, and 367 to the South.

CROWNED heads have a hard time of it these wicked days. Queen Isabella wants to insinuate herself into Spain, but has been pretty bluntly informed that she is not wanted there, and cannot come in. It is not exactly nice to be snubbed by one's own little boy in that way. What is the use of being a Queen and a Bourbon if one cannot be allowed to enter her own palace and see her bairn?

A WASHINGTON correspondent states that the Treasury Department proposes to publish, as a contribution to the Centennial, a statement of the financial transactions of the United States for 100 years. It will embrace the present government and the Continental Congress. This work will show the source of every dollar received and how it was expended; also loans made, the reasons for borrowing the money, and a sketch of the debates in Congress. This statement will clear up many obscure points in American annals, and will form a financial history of the republic for the first century of its existence.

SOME simple folks in West Boylston, Mass., have just been "done" in a very contemptible way. Two well-dressed scamps found out the deaf people in town and then proposed to cure them for from $50 to $100 each, according to their extremity, asking, of course, an advance payment. Some paid from $10 to $20 down, and were ornamented with a wire contrivance which came over the top of the head and down behind the ears, and which they were to wear four hours a day for eight weeks, as it would keep up a current of electricity that would ultimately restore the functions of hearing entirely.

A REMARKABLE snake story comes from Nashville. The State Medical Society of Tennessee met in that city the other day, and listened to the reading of accounts of cases treated by the disciples of Esculapius. One of them, it seems, was rather too tough even for the credulity of men accustomed to reciting and listening to yarns that would cause Munchausen himself to tremble for his laurels as the champion liar. The story was to the effect that the author had removed from the stomach of a young lady patient a snake two feet long and three-quarters of an inch in diameter. The society declined to receive the paper, although the doctor offered to back it by a sworn affidavit.

INFORMATION has been received of the escape of the notorious counterfeiter, Pete McCartney, from the Secret Service officers in Texas, who had him in charge. McCartney is an exceedingly fortunate as well as dangerous counterfeiter. He has been arrested and indicted in four cities in the country, quite recently. In Cincinnati, Louisville and Springfield, he gave a large amount of bail, and forfeited it. He was arrested through the agency of the Secret Service at St. Louis on the 11th of December, 1874. He escaped from the jail in St. Louis, where he was held for trial, by the criminal carelessness of his keeper. He was re-arrested in Waco, Texas, and has again glided from the hands of the officers of the law.

VICE-PRESIDENT WILSON, says a Washington correspondent, has given up his idea of going to Europe. He has carefully considered the matter, and arrived at the conclusion that a Vice-President has no more right to go out of the country than has the President. He finds that, in the history of this country, no President or Vice-President has ever left it during his term of office. In Washington's time there was some talk of sending Mr. Adams to England, to negotiate a treaty; but, upon the advice of Jefferson, he did not go. Jefferson held that the office of Vice-President being a contingent, that he could not safely leave the country, on the ground that the death of the President, in his absence, would leave the government in a very bad way until his return. In the place of his European trip, he now proposes to go to California and swing around the circle until next fall.

SOMEBODY tells in the Troy Times the horrid tale that the three greatest lawyers in the National Senate are so troubled by dyspepsia that they have to be constantly on their guard; that, in consequence of the same, it used to be said that the approach of the dinner hour rendered it unsafe for anybody to dispute with Senator Fessenden; and that one of the most prominent members of the House has been known to drop down in the streets in a dyspeptic swoon.

A BILL passed in Massachusetts provides that vagrants applying to almshouses for food and shelter shall be required to perform a reasonable amount of labor therefor, but shall not be detained beyond 11 o'clock in the forenoon of the day succeeding their application. The penalty for refusal is that the contumacious vagabond shall be deemed a vagrant within the meaning of the statutes, and may be punished according to the laws. Such a law has been tried in England and found to perceptibly diminish the number of lazy tramps who are pests of society.

A Singular Operation.

The Terre Haute Journal says that on Wednesday week Dr. Stevenson removed from the throat of George Wilkins, in the southwestern part of Vigo county, a bean that had been lodged in the trachea for six years. The patient is about 35 years of age. He was toying with a bean in his mouth, and swallowed or attempted to swallow it six years ago, and felt some slight obstruction at the time. Shortly afterward and since that time he has experienced all the symptoms of asthma, and has made use of the usual remedies for that complaint without any success. Dr. Stevenson had some time ago removed a bean from the trachea of a child, and suspected that this was the case with Mr. Wilkins, especially as he had very fine lungs. He found the bean lodged in the trachea, imbedded in a lymph that had formed around it. It was a common white soup bean, and it had been there so long that when taken out it crumbled like soft chalk.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Good Farmer James.

If you had known good Farmer James,
Whose life in ways of labor ran,
You would have known of sterling worth—
The virtues of an honest man.

He never traveled far away;
A foreign shore he ne'er had seen,
And all his life was humbly passed
Where his forefathers' lives had been.

His fields were ample for his wish,
And yielded crops, with some to spare
For those whose lives were sorrowful
With sickness, poverty and care;

For 'twas his pleasure to assist
In every way the worthy poor,
And when the suffering came his way
No bolt was found upon the door.

Yet idleness ne'er found a friend
In Farmer James. Sloth was a vice,
And carelessness and levity
Were wrong and sinful, in his eyes.

His was the ever-constant aim
To help his fellows all he could,
And ne'er was he so happy as
When to his neighbors doing good.

His life was ample, from the first,
And when it ripened to its close,
And he was laid away, for him
No word but that of praise arose;

For he had left a legacy
Richer than gold and jewels prove—
A legacy of honest worth,
Of noble actions, and of love.

Around the Farm.

OIL will remove tar spots. Soap and water will afterward take out the grease stain.

IN judging of the value of a male animal to be used for breeding, it is of less consequence to the breeder of the animal than the offspring; not unfrequently a good shaped male will get very inferior stock because he lacks blood.

HUNGARIAN GRASS.—Sow last week in May; half bushel to acre; cut before seed ripens, to prevent injurious effect on stock. It draws heavily on the fertility of the soil, and should be sown only when a deficiency of other hay is likely to occur.

ORCHARD GRASS.—Sow with oats, or other spring grain crop, full two bushels of seed to acre; must be thick or will grow in tufts; makes good hay, and, for pasture, grows faster than any other grass.

CLOVER ground intended for corn should not be pastured any in the spring before it is broken. When a good growth of green clover is turned under this late the worms go down to feed on it, and don't generally return to injure the corn until it is beyond their reach, or until the weather is too warm for them.

IT has been found by careful experiments that 100 pounds of turnips, 50 pounds of potatoes or carrots, 25 pounds of sweet milk, 9 pounds of oat meal, 7 pounds of barley meal, 9¼ pounds of bread or flour, 4 pounds of lean meat or 3¼ pounds of peas or beans, will produce one pound of flesh. These experiments were made upon animals that were in a suitable condition for laying on flesh.

START THE PLANTS EARLY.—Almost everybody now-a-days sows seeds of early vegetables either in hot-beds or in pots or boxes within doors, long before it can be done in the open ground. The crop, or period of use and ripening, can be hastened one or two months by this forcing process, and this is worth striving for in a cold climate, where the seasons are none too long for producing a satisfactory crop of annual fruits and vegetables. But while we are making preparations to satisfy the stomach, it is well to remember the organs of sight, and put in a few flower seeds at the same time.—Moore's Rural.

MOST farmers (or many, and we would like to say all) keep currycombs, cards, brushes and the like in the horse barn, and use them daily; but how many cows throughout the country ever had a card or brush applied to their dirty sides? The dairy cows come out of the stable in the spring looking more filthy than the swine in the gutter. Does it pay to keep the cattle clean? Ask any intelligent farmer if it pays to use the brush on his horses, and then ask him to point out a reason why it does not pay equally as well to give the cows the same attention and care.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Germantown Telegraph furnishes the following hints, which ought to be good, for he says he follows them himself: It don't pay to reset thin wheel-tires. The chief strength of the wheel lies in the rim. There is great economy in soaking the felloes of business wagon wheels with raw linseed oil; it will preserve the wood and save the necessity of frequent tire-setting, an operation to be avoided. When you buy a new fork or hoe, good farming requires that you oil the handle. It costs but a trifle, and your tool looks better, and will wear longer. Good harness kept soft with neatsfoot oil is a credit to the owner and a comfort to the animal that wears it. Soft harness is stronger than a dry, hard one. It is slightly elastic and bends without breaking. Horse stalls are usually made too narrow. A tired horse needs room to turn over and stretch his limbs; fatal injuries come from confining spirited horses in short, narrow stalls. A friend had the best one of a valuable span kicked by a strange horse in a short stall, which broke a leg. A pair of handsome Western horses were brought to take the place of the bays, and one of them in one year knocked down a hip, perhaps by the narrow stall, and is now of trifling value.

About the House.

GRAY marble hearths can be rubbed with linseed oil and no spots will show.

KEROSENE and powdered lime, whiting, or wood ashes will scour tins with the least labor.

AT this season of colds it may be useful to know that hoarseness is relieved by using the white of an egg, thoroughly beaten, mixed with lemon juice and sugar. A teaspoonful taken occasionally is the dose.

CORN CAKE.—Three cups of Indian meal, scalded with one-half pint of boiling water, one teaspoonful of salt, butter size of an egg, three eggs, two cups of milk, one teaspoonful of sugar; bake in a deep pan three-quarters of an hour.

SUGAR GINGERBREAD.—Four pounds of flour, three pounds of sugar, two pounds of butter, fourteen eggs. Ginger to taste. Beat the whites and yolks of the eggs separately. Rub the butter and sugar to a cream. Add the eggs, ginger, and flour.

SWISS BREAD.—Baker's bread, eggs, milk, flour, butter, salt. Make a batter of the egg, flour, milk, and salt. Cut the bread in slices. Soak them for about three minutes in the batter, then fry them in butter. Cook both sides to a handsome brown. Serve hot. To be eaten with sugar.

WHY is cabbage rendered more wholesome and nutritious by being boiled in two waters? Because (according to Dr. Paris) cabbages contain an essential oil which is apt to produce bad effects, and he recommends that they should be boiled in two successive waters till they are soft and digestible.

TO SOFTEN THE HANDS.—A paste to soften hands made rough by hard work, or for chapped hands, may be made thus: Wash a quarter of a pound of hog's lard in clean soft water, then in rose water; mix it with the yolks of two new-laid eggs and one large spoonful of honey; to this add as much almond paste as will work it into a paste; oatmeal will form a very good paste, if you cannot obtain the latter.

TO CLEANSE THE FEATHERS FOR BEDDING.—Mix well with a gallon of clear water one pound of quick-lime; and when the lime is precipitated in fine powder, pour off the clear lime water for use at the time it is wanted. Put the feathers to be cleaned in a tub, and add to them a sufficient quantity of the clear lime-water, so as to cover them about three inches. The feathers when thoroughly moistened will sink down, and should remain in the lime-water three or four days; after which the foul liquor should be separated from them by laying them on a sieve. Afterwards well wash them in clean water, and dry them on nets, about the same fineness as cabbage-nets. Shake them from time to time on the nets; as they dry they will fall through the meshes, when collect them for use. The admission of air will be servicable in the drying, and the whole process may be completed in about three weeks. The feathers thus prepared want nothing further than beating, to be used either for beds, bolsters, pillows, etc.

Having Moral Courage.

Moral courage is a big thing. All the good papers advise everybody to have moral courage. All the almanacs wind up with a word about moral courage.

"Have the moral courage to discharge a debt while you have the money in your pocket," is one of the moral paragraphs.

Mr. Mower read this once, and determined to act upon it. One day his wife handed him five dollars, which she had been two years saving, and asked him to bring her up a parasol and a pair of gaiters. On the way down he met a creditor and had the courage to pay him. Returning home his wife called him 157,000 pet names, as "fool," "idiot," etc., and then struck him four times in the pit of the stomach with a flat-iron. After that he didn't have as much moral courage as would make a leaning post for a sick grasshopper, and his wife didn't forgive him for thirteen years.

"Have the courage to speak the truth" is a paragraph always in use. I once knew a boy named Peter. One day when he was loafing around he heard some men talking about old Mr. Hangmoney. Their talk made a deep impression on Peter, and he spoke the truth. He said:

"Mr. Hangmoney, when I was up town to-day I heard Baker say you were a regular old hedgehog with a tin ear."

"What?" roared the old gent.

"And Clevis said that you were meaner than a dead hog rolled in tanbark," continued the truthful lad.

"You imp—you little villain," roared the old man.

"And Kingston said that you were a bald-headed, cross-eyed, cheating, lying, stealing old skunk under the hen-coop!" added the boy.

Then old Mr. Hangmoney fell upon the youthful Peter, and he mopped the floor with him, knocked his heels against the wall, tore his collar off, and put his shoulder out of joint, all because the boy had the moral courage to tell the truth.

And there was young Towboy—it was the same way with him. He had the moral courage to go over to an old maid and say:

"Miss Falscair, father says he never saw such a withered up old Hubbard squash as you are, around trying to trap a man!"

"He did, eh!" mused the old maid, rising up from her chair.

"Yes, and mother says it's a burning shame that you call yourself twenty-four when you are forty-seven, and she says your hair-dye costs more than our wood!"

"She said that, did she?" murmured the female.

"Yes, and sister Jane says that if she had such a big mouth, such freckles, such big feet, and such silly ways, she'd want the lightning to strike her!"

And then the old maid picked up the rolling-pin and sought the house in which Towboy resided, and knocked down and dragged out until it was a hospital. Then Towboy's father mauled him, his mother pounded him, and his sister denuded him of hair—all because he had moral courage in his daily life.

A Scared Thief.

All the people in a Paris house were startled one night by a tremendous noise made in an upper apartment. Rushing to the doors they saw a man coming down four steps at a time. He was arrested, half dead with fear. He was a thief, had made his way in with a false key, and feeling his way about the apartments from room to room, to find valuables, and came upon some strange, soft, movable, upright thing in the middle of the room. He felt of it, passed his hand higher and higher, and felt a face, cold as ice. Frightened, eager to escape, he could not find his way to the door, and in his flight upset every article of furniture in the apartment. Then they all went up stairs and found the tenant of the fourth floor hanging in his room.

JOHN MARTIN, member of Parliament for Meath, Ireland, is dead; aged 63. He had been ailing, and became seriously ill in consequence of excitement produced by the death of John Mitchel, his brother-in-law.

Trades of the Past.

Half a century ago bellows-making was a thriving trade. Every house had its pair of bellows, and in every well-furnished mansion there was a pair hung by the side of every fireplace.

But as stoves and grates took the place of open fireplaces, and as coal was substituted for wood, the demand for bellows diminished, and the business, as a separate trade, died out.

The same is true of flint-cutting. Flints were once necessary, not only for tinder-boxes—and a tinder-box was as necessary for every house as a gridiron or a skillet. Every one who looks back to a childhood of forty odd years ago must remember the cold winter mornings when the persistent crack, crack of the flint against the steel sent up from the kitchen an odor of igniting tinder and sulphur which pervaded the house. We have no more idea what became of the flint producers than of the old man of sorrowful memories, who, three or four times a week, called at our store with brimstone matches, for sale at a penny the half-dozen bunches. Both have completely vanished from the country.

Then, again, are gone the pin-makers, who, though they have been in their graves this quarter of a century, still figure in lectures and essays to illustrate the advantages of division of labor. Instead of a pin taking a dozen men or more to cut, grind, point, head, polish and what not, as it used to do, pins are now made by neat little machines at the rate of three hundred a minute, of which machines a single child tends to half a dozen.

Nail-making at the forge is another lost industry. Time was, and that in this nineteenth century, when every nail was made on the anvil. Now, from one hundred to one thousand nails per minute are made by machines. The nailer who works at the forge has but a bad chance of competing with such antagonists, and he would have no chance at all were it not that his nails are tenfold tougher than the former.

The Boy on Labrosse Street.

When a Labrosse street boy is playing "hop-scotch" on the walk and his mother comes to the door and asks him to split some wood, he replies that he will be along in just one minute. At the end of ten minutes she opens the door and says:

"Wilyum, I want that wood!"

"I'm coming right now," he replies, and then goes on hopping here and there on one leg.

Another ten minutes flies away, and she opens the door and says:

"Wilyum, if you don't get that wood you know what your father will do!"

"Just ten seconds!" he calls back, and he enters upon a new game.

The next time she calls she says:

"Young man, its almost noon and I can't cook dinner without that wood!"

"I know it—I'm coming now," he replies, and he stands on one foot and holds a long discussion with the Johnson boy as to whether the game of "hop-scotch" is as good a game as base ball. He has just started to hop when a boy whispers:

"Hi, Bill! there's your old dad!"

"Great Snakes!" whispers Bill, and he goes over the fence like a flash, grabs the ax, and during the next two minutes he strikes two hundred blows per minute. He gets into the house ahead of his father, and as he drops the wood he says:

"Mother, the boys were just a sayin' that I had the handsomest and best and goodest mother on Labrosse street, and I want to kiss you!"—Detroit Free Press.

The Dammed Ice.

There is one preacher in Port Jervis, N. Y., who has been enabled for the last few weeks to indulge in a luxury that generally is denied to men of his profession. He lived in the line of buildings which were demolished by the ice and the flood during the late break up, and of course was greatly excited at the prospect of being rendered homeless when the floods came and the ice gave way. In common with his fellow-citizens, it was the theme of his conversation by day and the subject of his dreams by night; and his friends say he rolled as a sweet morsel under his tongue the expression—"the dammed ice." And it seemed to do him a heap of good, for he was always more cheerful and contented after he had said it a few times, and finally, when the catastrophe came, he was so resigned that he lifted up his voice and said: "Well, brethren, God dammed the ice for some wise purpose, and in his own good time has taken the dammed ice away. Let us be resigned to His will."

How He Explained.

A resident of the Sixth Ward has been missing wood from his pile for several weeks past, and the other night he watched and caught a negro loading up a big armful. Springing out, he cried:

"Ah! hah! I've caught you, have I!"

"Is dat you?" asked the negro as he dropped the wood.

"Yes, this is I, and I want to know what you are doing here?"

"Doin' heah?"

"Yes, sir."

"You see dis yere wood-pile, doesn't you?" inquired the darkey.

"Yes, I do."

"Well, dere's a new family moved into dat shanty over dar, and I don't like dere looks one bit. I believe dey'd steal wood quicker'n lightning, and I cum over to warn ye. If ye miss any wood don't say I didn't tell ye what kind of people dose are!"

And he walked away leaving the man dumbfounded.—Detroit Free Press.

Arctic Exploration.

England is preparing for her Arctic explorations this season in a very thorough manner, and there seems to be a general belief that the British expedition, now almost ready for work, will accomplish more than has any previous one of any nationality, in Northern discoveries. The amount voted by Parliment for fitting out the expedition this year is about $500,000, with the expectancy of adding about $75,000 next spring, and as much more in 1877. There is also mentioned the possibility of $250,000 being required for extra expenses, in case of delay in the return of the expedition, and a relief expedition necessitated. The British government is evidently in earnest in its determination to do thorough work this time in unraveling the mysteries of the great frigid district of the North.

VICES are often habit rather than passions.

Judging by Appearances.

In other years, when Maine was a district of Massachusetts, Ezekiel Whitman was among the chosen to represent the district in the Massachusetts Legislature. He was an eccentric man, and one of the best lawyers of his time. In those days Whitman owned a farm, and did much work upon his land; and it so happened that when the time came for him to set out for Boston his best suit of clothes was a suit of homespun. His wife objected to his going in that garb, but he did not care.

"I will get a nice fashionable suit made as soon as I reach Boston," he said.

Reaching his destination, Whitman found rest at Doolittle's City Tavern. Let it be understood that he was a graduate of Harvard, and at this tavern he was at home.

As he entered the parlor of the house he found that several ladies and gentlemen were there assembled, and he heard a remark from one of them, "Ah, here comes a countryman of the real homespun genus. Here's fun." Whitman stared at the company, and then sat down.

"Say, my friend, you are from the country," remarked one of the gentlemen.

"Ya-as," answered Ezekiel, with a ludicrous twist of the face.

The ladies tittered.

"And what do you think of our city?"

"It's a pooty thick-settled place, anyhow. It's got a sweepin' sight of housin' in it."

"And a good many people, too."

"Ya-as, I should reckon so."

"Many people where you come from?"

"Wal, some."

"Plenty of ladies, I suppose?"

"Ya-as, a fair sprinklin'."

"And I don't doubt you are quite a beau among them."

"Ya-as, I beau 'em home—tew meetin' and singin' schewl."

"Perhaps the gentleman from th country will take a glass of wine?"

"Thank-ee. Don't keer if I do."

The wine was brought.

"You must drink a toast."

"Oh, git eout! I eats toasts—never heard o' sich a thing as drinkin' it. But I kin give ye a sentiment."

The ladies clapped their hands; but what was their surprise when the stranger, rising, spoke calmly and clearly, in tones ornate and dignified, as follows:

"Ladies and gentlemen: Permit me to wish you health and happiness, with every blessing that earth can afford; and may you grow wiser and better with advancing years, bearing in mind that outward appearances are often deceitful. You mistook me from my dress for a country booby, while I, from the same superficial cause, thought you were ladies and gentlemen. The mistake has been mutual."

He had just spoken, when Caleb Strong, the Governor of the State, entered and inquired for Mr. Whitman.

"Ah—here I am, Governor. Glad to see you." Then, turning to the dumbfounded company: "I wish you a very good evening."

And he left them feeling about as small and cheap as it is possible for full grown people to feel.

Take Care of Your China.

The Boston Journal of Chemistry gives the following very excellent practical advice for the treatment of china and glass ware:

In a common dinner service it is a great evil to make the plates too hot, as it invariably cracks the face on the surface, if not the plate itself. We all know the result—it comes apart. "Nobody broke it;" "it was cracked before;" or "cracked for a long time."

The fact is, when the glaze is injured, every time the "things" are washed the water gets to the interior, swells the porous clay, and makes the whole fabric rotten. In this condition they will also absorb grease; and when exposed to further heat the grease makes the dishes brown and discolored.

If the old, ill-used dish be made very hot indeed, a teaspoonful of fat will be seen to exude from the minute fissures on its surface. These remarks apply particularly to common wares.

As a rule, warm water and a soft cloth are all that is required to keep glass in good condition; but water bottles, in order to keep them bright, must be rinsed out with a fine muriatic acid, which is the best substance for removing the "fur" which collects in them. This acid is far better than ashes, sand or shot; for the ashes and sand scratch glass, and if any shot is left in by accident, the lead is poisonous.

Richly cut glass must be cleansed and polished with a soft brush, upon which a very little fine chalk or whiting is put; by this means the lustre and brilliancy is preserved.

AS AN over-loaded horse-car was coming up Sudbury street, a short time since, when the icy condition of the street rendered the ascent of the hill extremely difficult, a gentleman hailed the conductor from the sidewalk, requesting him to stop the car until he got on. This the conductor refused to do until the car reached the summit of the hill. By that time, the gentleman, out of breath and temper also, got upon the car and addressed the conductor as follows: "Sir, I supposed this road was run for the accommodation of the public." "You never was more mistaken in your life," replied the conductor; "it is run in order to fill the stockholders' pockets." "Indeed," said the now irate passenger, "I thought all the conductors on this road were gentlemen." "Worse than before," said the conductor; "do you suppose I would run a horse-car if I was a gentleman?" This seemed unanswerable, and the conversation suddenly ceased.—Boston Advertiser.

"How would you feel, my dear, if you were to meet a wolf?" asked an old lady of her little grandchild, with whom she was walking along a lonely country road. "Oh, grandmamma, I should be so frightened!" was the reply. "But I should stand in front of you and protect you," said the old lady. "Would you, grannie?" cried the child, clapping her hands with delight. "That would be nice! While the wolf was eating you I should have time to run far away."

A gentleman long resident in Mexico, says, that a good way to manage a horse that will not be shod, is to take a cord the size of a common bed-cord put it into the mouth of the horse like a bit and tie in tightly on the animal's head, passing his left ear under the string, not painfully tight, but tight enough to keep the ear down and the cord in its place. This done, pat the horse gently on the side of the head and command him to follow. It subdues any horse and he becomes as gentle and obedient as a dog.

Letter from the South.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.,
April 16th, 1875.

To the Editor of The COURIER.

Owing to my feeble state of health, I have not earlier complied with the request you made of me on your visit here last month, to give you the result of my inquiries and observations in and on the status of internal affairs in this city, and State, and on other matters—but now feeling a partial ability to comply, and the organization of the General Assembly of Louisiana in this city on the 14th inst., in extraordinary session, under the Wheeler adjustment, or "award" made by the Congressional Committee which sat in New York, being of National interest, I make an effort to comply. In the first place I am constrained to say, that the State of Louisiana is unlike any other State of the Union: anomolous in her varied natural advantages of climate, soil and products—anomolous in her prolific antagonisms of race, sectional falacies and disorders, and anomolous in her diversities of race, language and religion. Here in New Orleans religion, as professed by the two opposing creeds, separates the adherents as unmistakably as it did on the continent of Europe two hundred years ago; and that part of the city (the old) below Canal street, impresses the stranger as he walks its narrow streets, (forty feet from house), sees the quaint signs of business, and strange architecture; hears a diversity of language; sees white, black, creoles, mulattoes, quadroons, octoroons, "griffs," French, Spaniard, Mexicans, Italians, Cubans, English, Irish, Scandinavians and Germans. I say these things impresses him with a feeling that he is in a foreign land; and when he goes thro' that part on Sunday, and sees the saloons open, auctioneers hawking their wares, smith's forges blazing, cock-pits full of people witnessing that relic of barbarism, cock-fighting—the French markets four in number—anomolous, great, comprehensive busy, etc., with their flesh, fruits, flowers, fish, poultry, reptiles, dry goods, finance, hardware, crockery and china, hats, caps, boots, shoes, carpets wooden-ware, fancy goods, toilets, confections, stationery, news, literature, periodicals, cafes, "et id omnus genus," with several thousand people attendant, diversified in color and distinguished by race and dialect—these things impress the stranger with a feeling like that inspired in reading of the condition of things on the Asiatic and European continents in the dawn of the christian era before the Sunday or Lord's day was set apart as a day of rest and worship, and banish for the time the consciousness that he is in a land where modern civilization and science has broken the restraint which religion so long imposed on them and which inspired moral responsibility,—emasculated the vigor of mind and instigated broils with civil power. On the upper side of Canal street everything is changed—the stranger wakes up in America. The sun shines seemingly with warmer rays in wider streets, and a new people greets him. They have a Lord's Day up there too, in some parts, and some regard it religously. Louisana from the date of her colonization by France in 1699 to 1769, when it was delivered over to Spain and afterwards back to France, and in 1803 delivered over to the United States, has been checked in her prosperity and the impress then so early given has had a fatal influence over her destinies ever since. Those who first settled here never considered that they had found a home, all the military officers and others employed by the government had only one object in view—to obtain promotion and to make money by fair or foul means in order to return with increased honors and ampler means to their native country—the beautiful France. Of the non-officials, many had been transported by force, and looked on the new country as a prison. Others were deceived in their hopes by exaggerated representation and were disappointed, and only labored to get money to go back. Louisiana was no home, had no associations, no past to the Frenchman. That thing always injured her—and now since the late civil war so many carpet-baggers quarter-masters, captains, lieutenants, colonels, camp-followers have been left in the south, who pay no taxes, own no property, have no homes, no interests in common with the people here, and who are either federal officers or subordinates, or have found their way in public places by fraud or misrepresentations, etc, without qualification, that Louisianians, under such men, and sustained and supported by federal military power as the latter are; rent asunder in feelings of love for the country, and the wing of their spirit so broken by the rule of those who are parasites, are to-day objects of our pity, and that they will turn and sting, is because not yet has all manhood been ground out of them. The wonder is, not that they have resisted the oppression, but that it has not been more determined, and when the fog and smoke of the broil shall have cleared away, and right reason have prevailed over partizan prejudice—then the impartial historian will record the facts, and a dispassionate people then believe the ocean of wrongs which a tyrannical political party, has by federal arms imposed on the people of Louisiana. The ravages of the civil war laid their agriculture low as the hurricane does the golden harvest. Their labor, the slaves, were taken from them and clothed with a power to make the planter a subordinate; and this power directed by a adventurers whom the war had left as the sea its debris, elevated these adventurers to office, and the exchequer of the State was replenished by exhorbitant taxes, but to be embezzled by those who contribute nothing to its support and who besides this have created a State debt now nearing twenty-four millions, and a municipal debt hanging over the city of New Orleans quite as great—the interest on which, including the expenses of the city government, cost of paving, repairing and lighting the streets, "involve," says Gov. Kellogg in his message of yesterday, "an annual outlay larger than any revenue the city is practically able to collect." This debt is on an assessed valuation of property in New Orleans, the total of which is some less than half of the total valuation of the whole State The people of the city cannot pay it; and of the State taxes heretofore levied over $4,000,000 is delinquent and unpaid The population of the State is about 700,000, that of New Orleans 200,000 inhabitants. From the ravages of war, the plunder of officials, and the incalculable loss to planters by the great flood of 1873 and the general feeling of insecurity to property and in business matters arising out of the military domination which has been kept up here by the federal government, the city of New Orleans is a very metropolitan paralytic. Her river and marine commerce are waned to a minimum. Her domestic trade and improvements, and her mechanical industries are but a mere approximation to their former greatness. Thousands of houses are untenanted all over the city, and every square has its many cards, "For Rent," and thousands who once would have scorned it are letting "rooms furnished" and others advertising "Boarders Wanted," just to make something to live on. Planters rely little on negro labor; and from Tennessee to the north of the Mississppi river goes out but complain of the thieving propensities, of the blacks who sleep by day and plunder by night, and as a distinguished gentleman of the State of Arkansas lately a Republican member of the Senate of that State said to me yesterday in frankness 'Our work of philanthropy was well performed in effecting the abolition of slavery, but after all our expectations are not realized, the negro of this generation is little benefited. He is irreliable and irresponsible; and as an element in politics he is used more by Charlatans to carry out base schemes, than by good men to prosper the welfare of the good people."

To give the readers of the COURIER some idea of what it costs to carry on the city government of New Orleans I offered a statement made by a contributor to the New Orleans "Times" in that paper of this date: Let us compare the costs of city officials in St. Louis with those in New Orleans, and the people will see how they are robbed. The population and wealth of St. Louis is more than twice as great as New Orleans.

St. Louis Police cost per year	$456,000
One Sheriff for city and county cost	85,000
One Police Court for city Judges salary	4,000
One Coroner—salary	4,000
Clerk Criminal Court	2,500
District Attorney	6,000
Mayor of City	5,000
City Council	no pay

The cost in New Orleans and what can be saved yearly:

	EXPENSES.	SAVED.
Police force	$800,000	$250,000
Criminal Sheriff	100,000	40,000
Coroners	12,000	6,000
Clerks' Criminal Court	25,000	10,000
District Attorney	7,000	2,000
Police and Justice Courts	45,000	25,000
Abolish city administrators.	42,000	42,000
For costs in city suits	50,000	50,000
To be realized from Civil Sheriff's office and civil cr's		150,000
Suspend Park tax	162,000	162,000
Give tax collector a salary	150,000	150,000
Abolish port charges	....	....
	$1,195,000	$887,000

This police force is a military body created by a Republican Legislat'e some time ago to keep the Democartic City Council from making and controlling it and is called the Metropolitan Police, paid by the city, but in no way amenable to the city council, and is of the dead beat kind. The democrats however are not without much blame in their management of the city—wrong being now an epidemic.

It may be well to say something more concerning this Metropolitan Police, now a military force of over 400. Prior to 1868 the police of the city had been used for questionable purposes by men who, in the distracted state of social and political affairs, exceeded the bounds of right reason, and to prevent a recurrence of such things, the Legislature of that year took the creative power out of the hands of the City Council, of New Orleans, and gave it into the hands of a Commissioner to be appointed by the Governor. This Commissioner appoints the police, and holds them responsible for their good conduct. It is not fair to condemn the system entirely, but since there, perhaps, no longer exists the reason for its being in the hands of the Gov who may also use it for political ends, and since it is so very expensive it is thought well to relegate the subject matter to the City Council, to be re-organized, reformed and lessened in number and expense according to the wants of the citizens, who pay the expense and who are to be protected by such police force.

THE LEGISLATURE.

Early in March last I visited the Hahn Legislature—that is the House of Representatives—composed mostly of negroes, the same which federal soldiers organized by unseating Wiltz, the Democrat Speaker, and several white members, so as to give it a Republican majority, and in which conservative members refused to sit. It was a boisterous and ill-governed body, and I only saw 7 or 8 white members on the floor, the others were negroes who did nearly all the talking, such as it was. I visited the same on its assembling in extraordinary session on the 10th inst. Hahn, the white speaker in the chair, Vigers, Clerk and the other officials black. Twenty-six conservatives who stood out before, came in and took the oath and were seated. The 13 contested seats and which were awarded by the adjusting committee of Congress were referred to the committee on elections and qualifications. That Committee reported in their favor on Thursday and they, twelve whites and one negro were reported entitled to their seats. The report having been concured in, 13 were sworn in, and the old 13, mostly negroes, withdrew and gave place to their successors. Thus the house was organized yesterday with 109 members, 110 being the quota, but one, a black, had been expelled. Of these 26 are blacks of various shades—83 whites. The Senate is presided over by Leut. Gov. Antoine, a negro of pure blood, a native, a Creole, and most of the officers are black. This body is composed of 36 members of whom 16 are blacks, and presents itself as to intelligence in no favorable light. The House is Democratic, the Senate Republican.

In the House, after its organization with the 13 members under the award had been effected, the following resolution was offered:

"RESOLVED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF LOUISIANA, That said Assembly, without approving the same, will not disturb the present State government, claiming to have been elected in 1872, known as the Kellogg government, or seek to impeach the Governor for any past official acts, and that henceforth it will accord to said Government all necessary and legitimate support in maintaining the laws and in advancing the peace and prosperity of this State, and that the House of Representatives as to its members, as constituted under the award of Geo. F. Hoar, Wm. A. Wheeler, W. W. Phelps, Clarkson N. Potter, Wm. P. Frye and Sam'l, S. Marshall, shall remain without change except by resignation or death of members until a new general election; and the Senate as herein recognized shall also remain unchanged, except so far as that body may itself make changes on contests."

This was a bitter pill to the Republicans because it recognized 12 Democratic members, and to the Democrats because it recognized Kellogg, the usurper put in office by Judge Durrell and maintained, fully maintained, by the President of the U. S. committed then to uphold Kellogg and pledged them not to impeach him nor to disturb any of the offices of the State government. However, after much talking, farce-making and shoulder-shrugging, the resolution went through its various readings, was put on its passage and carried, yeas 89, noes 18—two out, not voting, the rest were compelled to vote and without explanation, and with a view of giving the subject a final rest—a motion was then made to re-consider, and this motion laid on the table so it cannot be called up again. The "adjustment" is proper and the conservatives had to accept it or do worse. The arm of federal power was raised over them and the sword in hand, federal gun boats were at anchor in the river off the city, and their morning and evening guns told the stranger that they were ready for use to subjugate a free people and subordinate them to usurpation and fraud in case they dared take up arms to end evils almost unbearable. Had the conservative party of this State and of the South accepted when adopted, the late amendments to the constitution of the U. S., as things adjudicated and which they could not successfully countervail, they would have killed the Radical party with the self same poison that it prepared for them and thus strife, woe and misery had been avoided, but resistance and reluctance afford a pretext for federal interference and that sufficed to keep it up until now, and was and is just the stock in trade the administration wanted, and which has been used to keep a footing in all the south for purposes if the presidential election of 1876. However, the shape that affairs are now in, and with tempers on both sides softened by time, necessity and experience, the people hope for better times, and it may be they will be gratified. To an extent they will be, and at the next general election be able to elect and inaugurate men of their own choice. This state is so far away from the north—the field so rich in spoils, that adventurers love it; and the federal administration knowing how well all stories of outrages on the negro can be supplemented on paper to appear as unmitigated and diabolical, and how the testimony of witnesses can be manufactured and magnified before investigating committees organized to confirm canards is quick to avail itself of opportunities to crush out any true expression of the people—foster false election returns, sustain usurpers in places of trust and honor and in a word, by force of bayonets, maintain a government in which the majority have had no controlling voice. The American colonies, before war of the revolution had not a tithe of the cause for complaint against the Northern country, that these people have to complain of federal military domination over state sovereignty.

In the House of Reps. to-day Mr. Estilette, of St. Landry, Paris, was elected speaker. The Republicans united on him against Wiltz and their vote with some conservatives elected him by a handsome majority. He is conceded to be an excellent choice—a conservative of old whig, antecedents. Pinchback, who was elected U. S. Senator by the Legislature, this State two years ago, but who has not as yet been admitted to a seat, will, I think, be admitted next December, the concession, which the conservatives made in recognizing the Kellog government, will be used then in the Senate as an answer to the objections which till this time have kept him out of his seat. The "adjustment" will prove to have consequences not contemplated by the conservatives. The General Assembly cannot elect a Senator now, for Pinchback holds a certificate of election under the same Kellog government, hence there is no vacancy and therefore can be no election till a vacancy shall transpire.

CONFLICT OF RACES.

The conflict between the races cannot be arrested; it may be tempered to a condition wherein violence will not be used except when aggression on the part of the blacks shall become unbearable, but the dignity of the white race will assert itself at all times, and the negro, by force of that sentiment higher and mightier than the arms of law, will have to take his place in subordination to that sentiment. Laws may define the civil rights of the negro, and courts enforce remedies for violations of this, but no law will be efficacious which impinges the domain of social intercourse and polity and attempts to make a white man minimize his race to the standard of negro equality. The negro will not be allowed to elevate himself by lowering the white man. He must rise by merit and be satisfied to abide distinctions which society imposes in his case, as in cases where the aristocracy of mind and money makes insuperable distinct in the societies of white people, and to which inexorability they must ever yield, and no legislation can ever help them. Enough of politics, at least enough for this time and for me who for many years have taken no part in such.

It may be regarded as true in social and political disorders as it is philosophy that no matter how much the various social forces of a country may be disturbed, they will, if left to themselves, "in a certain tolerable manner, settle down equilibrium," just as water will find its common level. And as the true independence of a State depends on the regulation of its own internal affairs, in its own way, it will promptly re-act against the influence of any power not having its seat within its own territorial limits, and this re-action will prolong, discord and commotion as long as that foreign influence shall be excited. Therefore, in this view, I assert, that true policy and statesmanship concur in demanding no further congressional legislation as to the civil rights of the colored race, south and north. Let the equilibrium come "sua motu," that is, inspired by sentiments peculiar to those who are living in the disturbed States, by concessions which each party may make for the greater good of the whole.

The season is backward, warm days and cool nights and much rain, gardens blossomed and flowered, weeks ago, and the city has been redolent therefrom—shade trees and forests are attired in their purest green, strawberries have been in market for several weeks and now delicious dewberries, but the price 80c per quart, for the former and but little less for the latter. Cotton and cane are late. Corn is up and out and a greater crop is put in than ever before. The river is high, many crevasses are letting in water, but no danger is now feared.

Having fully complied with request, I hope this will prove satisfactory to you and the readers of the COURIER.

The centennial celebrations at Concord and Lexington of the first shots fired in the war of American Independence took place on April 19, on which occasion the patriotism of the old Bay State seems to have been aroused to the utmost pitch. The day was ushered in with the firing of cannon, and then followed civic and military processions, orations, songs, etc. The President and Vice President of the United States, members of the Cabinet, United States Senators, members of Congress, Governors of States, Judges, Generals, poets, orators, and eminent men of the republic, lent their presence to the patriotic occasion, while mighty crowds, only limited in size by their ability to reach the historic scenes, participated in the memorable celebration. The extreme cold weather had the effect to interfere somewhat with the complete fulfillment of the contemplated order of procedure; but nevertheless the joint centennial was a magnificent success.

Owing to inadequate railroad facilities at the Concord and Lexington celebration, some 3,000 people were forced to camp out over night in the latter place, sleeping in barns, churches, etc. All night long the road to Boston was crowded with pedestrians.

THE TILTON-BEECHER TRIAL.

Seventieth Day.—After an interruption of several days, caused by the illness of Mr. Fullerton, the great scandal trial was resumed with the defendant on the stand for cross-examination. The testimony was explanatory of the letters in the case, in the midst of which Mr. Fullerton charged the witness with evasion of direct questions, for which he was promptly rebuked by Judge Neilson.

Seventy-first Day.—The passages between the defendant and his cross-examiner were unusually sharp, and the latter was rewarded with some measure of success in his attempts to worm out damaging admissions. It transpired that Mr. Beecher adopted the theory of blackmail at the instigation of his lawyers, who, he says, drilled him up to the point of making an allegation which he did not then, and does not now, believe to be true.

Seventy-second Day.—An interesting part of the cross-examination was in reference to Beecher's health, and what he meant by his letter to Mrs. Tilton, in 1873, that when he last saw her he did not expect to live three days. He acknowledged his general health was good that year, but he had what he thought were symptoms of apoplexy in 1856, which he afterward found to be mere results of nervous exhaustion. The cross-examination ended, and after a short re-direct examination the witness left the stand. But few "points" were made by counsel on either side.

Seventy-third Day.—The court was not more than half full. H. O. Armour, a merchant, of Brooklyn, testified that Moulton threatened to "make it hotter than hell" for any one who would testify against him. H. M. Cleveland, a member of the Plymouth investigating committee, testified that Beecher could not have confessed to Mrs. Moulton on June 2, 1873.

POLITICAL.

In the Louisiana House of Representatives, on the 20th, the majority report of the Committee on Elections, seating four Conservatives who had been declared elected by the Returning Board, and unseating four Republican members, was adopted by a majority of 61 to 32. This gives the Democrats a majority on joint ballot. A committee which had been appointed to examine the books of the Auditor of State, made a report recommending that that officer be impeached.

A Washington special to a Western paper states that Secretary Delano's resignation has been in the hands of the President ever since last December, "and whenever he is satisfied that he can insist upon his resignation being accepted without incurring the imputation that the President has requested him to resign, he will do so."....The Lincoln Club, of New York, last week gave a reception to Congressman Lawson, who, in a speech, urged the Republican party to nominate Senator Conkling for President.

An investigation of the condition of the winter wheat by the statistical division of the Department of Agriculture at Washington shows the crop as a whole to be much below the status of that of last year in April. There is an apparent increase of about 7 per cent. in the areas of winter wheat, amounting in round numbers to 1,500,000 acres, though that portion of winter killed and to be replanted in other crops may be equal in the West to the enlargement of the planted area. This increase is small in the Middle States, considerable in Illinois and Missouri, and proportionately largest in the Gulf States and in Kansas, reaching 30 per cent. in the Southwest.

There was less interest shown in the grain markets during the past week, and, although a fair speculative business was transacted, the markets were comparatively quiet. The firmness and advancing tendency gave place to a weak feeling, and, with the exception of Thursday and Friday, the daily tendency of values was to a lower range. The May option was the chief center of attraction, the longer futures ruling comparitively dull, while but a limited business was transacted for immediate delivery. The recent liberal advance in values left a good margin for operators on the long side of the trade, and a satisfactory profit to speculators who had been carrying the grain for an advance, and then were not at all slow in taking advantage of the profit in their favor to sell out and take in their differences. The condition of the Liverpool and New York markets was not particularly favorable for the maintainance of prices, the advices being unfavorable in their tenor. The receipts are still light but operators anticipate increased arrivals before the close of the month. The May shorts had made ample prepartion for their contracts, and were therefore less anxious to buy. Numerous selling orders were received from the interior and from other markets. In making calculations on the current prices and the market for the week, cash grain should not be taken into consideration, as the daily changes in the storage of receipts made very irregular prices. There was really no actual change in storage, but the transfer from winter to summer storage rates necessitated frequent changes in values. Wheat has declined about 3@4c per bushel. Corn shared in the weakness, ruling 3½c lower. "New" will be dropped in the inspection of corn. April 20th and straight No. 2 will be the only No. 2 grades. We may then look for large receipts. Oats were 2c lower. Rye and barley firm and higher all around.

PROVISIONS.

This market was rather unsettled during the past week, and the fluctuations in prices were quite severe. Cranberries were unchanged; choice cultivated sold at $11.00@12.00 per brl for choice. Dried peas were slow sale at $2.00@2.10 for choice green and $1.60@1.65 for marrowfat. Feathers were quiet at 48@52c for prime live geese; 4@5c for chicken, and 30@35c for choice turkey tail feathers. Hides were quiet but steady at 5@5½c for grubby, 8@8½c for green salted, and 14@14½c for calf. Hops remain dull at 30@38c for good to choice new from first hands. Poultry was scarce and in good demand. Turkeys at 16@17c for live and 17@18c for dressed; chickens sold at $3.50@5.50 per doz and 11@13c per pound, according to quality. Potatoes were offered more freely and prices were easier, closing at $1.03@1.05 for Eastern peachblows in car lots, and $1.15 in small lots from store; early rose about 95c@$1.00 in car lots; Western peachblows quotable at about $1.00, and mixed sold at 75c@80c. Tallow quiet at 8½c for solid and 8½c for cake. Vegetables were slow sale. Onions quotable at $3.25@3.50 for yellow in barrels. Turnips 40@80c and cabbage 90c@$1.10. Veal was in moderate request at 4@9c for common to choice carcasses.

Trade was fair in the lumber market and prices remain steady and unchanged. A Lost Cause.

E. A. Howe, an attorney of the San Francisco police court, blushes and hangs his head to think himself a man. He was going to a religious revival at night and his attention was attracted by a man making rapid tracks, and another following crying: "Stop thief." The race was taking place on his side of the street, and directly in his path. It was coming toward him with a rush. Howe had a splendid opportunity to distinguish himself before he went to meeting, besides doing something neat to benefit his business—as a police lawyer. He let the chance go by. The man who was ahead in the race drew something large and round from his pocket and threatened to blow the roof off Howe's brains if he dared lay hands on him or impede his progress. Howe stepped aside and carried off his brains in triumph. And the cry of "stop thief" ran along the street from a hundred fellows who joined in the chase. Howe went to meeting and told how he had been mercifully preserved from a violent death. His story was that a desperado had presented a big pistol close to his head, and that an overruling Providence had prevented it from going off. Farther down the street the course of the fugitive was stopped by a man who had a strong arm and Providence on his side. He knocked down the thief, grappled with and arrested him. The fellow was armed only with a big bologna sausage, and the mercifully-preserved Mr. Howe does not tell his story of miraculous escape from death any more, either at meeting or in the precincts of the police court. He lost a clear case of arresting and then defending his own thief.

A horse raised in Oregon, but owned San Francisco, has six perfectly formed feet. The two extra feet grow out of the fetlocks of the two forelegs, and, though small, are fully developed. The animal is stylish, works in single or double harness, and is about five years old.

The Senses of Bees.

The lenses of the bees' eyes are not adjustable; and, though they can see accurately at great distances, they, like some men, seem blind to objects close by. They dart down to the door of their hives with unerring precision; but, if from any cause they miss the opening, they are obliged to rise in the air and take another look. A bee's sense of taste is also imperfect, foul ditch-water and ill-smelling plants being often preferred. Bees haven't any ears to speak of, but their sense of smell—which, by the way, according to Huber, is in the mouth—is very keen. Honey-bees often, in scarce seasons, attack the bumble-bees on their return from the fields laden with honey, and force them to disgorge all they have collected. Its presence in the honey-bag must have been detected by the sense of smell. The sense, however, which is the most perfect is the touch, and that seems to be wholly in their antennæ. When one bee meets another, greetings are made by crossing their antennæ. Huber says it constructs its comb in darkness; it pours its honey into the magazines, feeds its young, judges of their age and necessities, recognizes its queen, all by aid of its antennæ, which are much less adapted for becoming acquainted with objects than our hands. Therefore, shall we not grant to this sense modifications and perfections unknown to the touch of man?

Was Obliging.

The other evening a kind-looking old man was escorted to a room on the third floor of a hotel to pass the night, and it wasn't five minutes before the bell indicated that he wanted to see a waiter. A colored boy ran up, stuck his head into the room, and asked what was wanted. The old man said he didn't want any thing, but the waiter was hardly down stairs before the bell rang again.

"Did you want suffin?" he inquired, as he reached the room again.

"Nothing," replied the old man, as he opened the door.

In about two minutes the bell rang again, and this time the waiter exclaimed:

"If you don't want nuffin, what ar' ye pullin' de bell fur?"

"I want to oblige the waiter," replied the old man.

"De waitah! Oblige de waitah?"

"Yes; it says here, 'Please ring the bell for the waiter,' and if he wants it rung I'm willing to oblige him, though I'm tired and sleepy, and shan't pull it more 'n four times more, unless I know that some of his family are sick."

A Pigeon Hunter.

A man about thirty years old, having a shot-gun on his shoulder and two pigeons in his hand, was yesterday standing on a street corner telling a crowd that he had been out and killed five hundred pigeons since sunrise.

"You're a liar!" shouted a man at the edge of the crowd.

The stranger looked at him long and earnestly, and then inquired:

"Where did you get acquainted with me?"

Lazy persons die young. It is the active in body and brain who live to extreme old age, as a rule. It is abundantly proven that exercise of the mind invigorates its bodily receptacle, even when that exercise is carried to an apparently extreme point. The brain, the reservoir of nervous energy to the rest of the system, increases in volume and vigor by use, just as the arm of the blacksmith or the leg of the dancer gains in muscular development. The general system benefits by the enhanced brain-power, and greater vitality and longevity is the result. Work by method and on system, even when severe, is not only quite compatible with long life, but is actually conducive to it, while the torpor of idleness or the excitements of fitful effort are the sure precursors of mental and physical degeneration. This is a useful doctrine to preach, and still more useful to practice.—Dr. Hall.

He Was the One.—Seven or eight boys were rushing around the postoffice Saturday, headed by a yellow-haired youth who was saying:

"All I want in this world is to lay my hands on him!"

He presently came upon a boy weighing about ten pounds more than himself, and rushing at him he exclaimed:

"Did you lick my brother Ben?"

"Yes, I did," replied the boy, dropping his bundle and spitting on his hands.

"Well," continued the other lad, backing slowly away, "he needs a licking once a week to teach him to be civil!"—Detroit Free Press.

Big Guns.—It is thought by nautical men that small vessels mounting heavy guns are the most effective in naval warfare, and that these gigantic pieces, properly served, will hereafter decide the fate of naval battles. A single shot from a monster gun with a long range may cripple the largest and finest line-of-battle-ship that was ever launched.

How Pat Stopped a Train.

The Quincy Herald tells how a conductor on the Toledo, Wabash and Western railroad, on his way with a heavy freight train, behind time, and with a full head of steam, saw a man frantically waving a monstrous umbrella to hail the train. The brakes went down, and with a mighty effort the heavy train was brought to a stop. The individual with the umbrella turned out to be Irish, and the following dialogue ensued: Son of Erin—"Can I see the conductor?" O'Neil—"You can; that's me." Son of Erin—"Is your name Charles O'Neil?" O'Neil—"It is." Son of Erin—"Are you from Ireland?" O'Neil—"I am." Son of Erin—"And are you from the county Kilkenny?" O'Neil—"I am not." GOSSIP OF THE DAY.

There are fifty-seven Cardinals in all. In the event of the Pope's death, a two-thirds vote of the body will be required to elect a new man, who must be from among their own number.

A young lady the other day performed the remarkable feat of walking from Nashua, N. H., to Lowell, a distance of fifteen miles, while in a somnambulistic fit. She was clad in her night-clothes.

After leaving the witness stand the other day, Mr. Beecher was jocosely asked by a friend how he liked it. "Oh well," he replied, laughing, "eels don't mind being skinned after they get used to it."

The jurors in the Beecher case get but $10 a week for their services, and naturally begin to feel that, however funny the trial may be to the spectators and principals and well-fed lawyers, it is martyrdom to them.

Gentlemen, let us again join and sing the praises of reopening spring in Tennysonian verse. Here goes for a starter:

In the spring the blithe street-sprinkler 'gins to rotu-

In the spring the landlord's fancy turns to thoughts

The modern Damon and Pythias are living at South Abingdon, Mass. They are the two oldest living graduates of Brown University, it is said, and are both over 90 years old. They were born in the town, are members of the same church, were partners in practicing law, served together as Representatives in the Legislature, and are connected by family ties. They are both in good health.

Two important marine experiments are announced from England—one, a trial trip across the English channel by the newly-constructed seasick-proof Bessemer steamer; the other, the attempt of a man to float across the English channel—over twenty miles—by means of a new life-preserving apparatus. The steamer trial trip is pronounced entirely satisfactory, and the floating experiment almost equally so.

In the Lynchburg (Va.) News there is an obituary notice of Mr. Charles Henry Lynch, who, it is stated, was the grandson of Charles Lynch, the originator of the famous "Lynch law." The old tree is still standing in the yard of the family homestead from which Judge Lynch's victims were suspended. This statement is confirmed by the authority of Webster, who says "the term is derived from a Virginia farmer named Lynch, who thus took the law into his own hands."

The era of civil and religious liberty which the youthful King of Spain intimated was to begin with his accession to the throne has probably been postponed until a more convenient season. The right of petitioning for redress of wrongs is one of the fundamental principles of that constitutional system in England which he pretends to admire. Yet two prominent professors of the Madrid University have been arrested for exercising this right, and numerous others are also to be prosecuted.

The Washington National Monument Association have issued an appeal to the United States, in which they state that the monument has stood in its present condition for more than twenty years without the means to carry on the work. It will cost $500,000 to finish it. The centennial year of American Independence is fast approaching, and the Association feel that the shaft should be completed as soon as possible. They, therefore, ask all of the various orders, lodges, societies, granges, brotherhoods, military organizations, etc., to give something so that the work may be resumed and the cap-stone placed on the highest structure ever erected to man, during the most joyous year in the world's history—the year of American Jubilee.

It does seem as if people of intelligence rush to greater extremes than all others. After sentence of death had been pronounced upon Ruloff, the philologist and Binghamton murderer, doctors of medicine and theology and men distinguished in other professions begged that his life might either be saved by the executive or lengthened sufficiently to permit the elucidation of some interesting ideas then under investigation. He was hanged, though, on time. Now the doctors of Boston and vicinity regard Jesse Pomeroy, the boy murderer, as the subject of a wonderful mental disease, one in fact that should be carefully studied for future recognition and treatment. But this poor boy finds none but a company of ladies to raise a voice to the Governor in his behalf, while the doctors, professors, and "many other prominent citizens," have urged his immediate execution, because it would be dangerous to have him running loose. Before he committed the last murder Jesse begged to be placed where he could do no harm. His request was unheeded then, but it will be now, in a few months.

POLITICAL MEMORANDA.

The New York Graphic nominates Samuel J. Tilden for President.

Ben. Wade says "if this glorious government is ever ruined it will be by office-seekers."

Two elections, to be held in Mississippi and California next fall, will complete the roll of members elect to the Forty-Fourth Congress.

Gen. Coburn, of Indiana, thinks that an ex-Congressman who seeks office thereby declares his inability to earn a livelihood in any other way.

Gov. Leslie, of Kentucky, is a very prominent candidate for the United States Senator ship from that State. The Hon. James B. Beck is his most formidable rival.

In the course of the recent Senate debate on the Civil Rights bill, Senator Morton said: "I am one of those who believe in the right of women to vote, and I have always believed in that."

Gov. Hartranft, of Pennsylvania, refused to veto the bill repealing the Local-Option law, although he was strongly urged to do so. He said the popular will on the subject was clearly enough expressed last fall.

California holds her quadrennial election for Governor and associate officers, and her biennial election of a Legislature in September. There are three parties in that State, Independent or Reformers, Democrats and Republicans, and there will probably be three corresponding tickets.

Gen. Burnside is said to be a striking contrast to his predecessor, Senator Sprague, who gave one the idea of a not-very-precocious boy. There is a sort of a full-dress-parade air about the General, who spoils his otherwise faultless and rather exquisite dress by wearing a snuff-colored vest buttoned up to the throat closely. His very striking face is much the best in full view, and his almost bald head looms up like a promontory of white chalk, bleak and bare.—Philadelphia Press.

The London Spectator, with the dazed air of a man who has just stepped out of the sunlight into a very dark and unknown room, says: "It is stated that one result of the last session of Congress has been to raise Mr. J. G. Blaine, a Pennsylvanian, who, however, resides in Maine, to the first position as the next Republican candidate for the Presidency. Mr. Blaine has been Speaker of the House of Representatives for the session, and his impartiality, firmness and vigor of mind have greatly struck the leaders of the party, who see that the traditionary dislike of the third term will be too strong for General Grant. The Democrats have not decided on their candidate yet, but it is not impossible that Mr. Andrew Johnson, the ex-President, and now Senator from Tennessee, may ultimately be adopted. He is a 'war Democrat' in opinion, is a Western man, made many friends at the White House, and has the same kind of attraction for the masses as General Jackson had. If he can maintain his present attitude for eighteen months, which is doubtful, he may prove the favorite of the party."

Judge Poland wrote a private letter recently concerning his action in Southern affairs, and of course it has got into print. Its most interesting portion is the following in reference to Arkansas politics: "The President was made to think otherwise, and there of course I differed with the President. But our action was wholly in harmony with his first action, and, as I believe, in entire harmony with the general sentiment of the Republican party. I think the President was entirely deceived in regard to the facts of the Arkansas case. Washington was full of Arkansas refugees all winter, and it was a matter of political life or death with them, and they were by no means scrupulous as to what they said. My action in the matter was, I think, required by the plainest principles of constitutional law and by the principles of the Republican party. So far as the President held different views, I think they were caused by an erroneous view of the facts, and that most unwearied and persistent and wicked efforts were used to deceive him. As soon as the opinion of even one House of Congress was expressed, he acquiesced at once, and directed the departments to recognize Garland as Governor."

INDIANA NEWS.

The Rush county farmers are rushing things this spring.

Wm. Hogan died on Monday at Fort Wayne, aged 102 years.

The Brazil Miner folks talk about their county-seat war, "which has been in the courts for thirty years." It promises to last as much longer.

At an adjourned term of the Circuit Court, Judge Franklin presiding, the relocation of the county seat was tried, and decided in favor of Brazil once more.

Abram J. Buckles, Auditor of Delaware county, has been declared a defaulter to the amount of $15,000, for which suit has been instituted against him.

The Courier states that the spring trade of Evansville is in the line of the marvelous. No such receipts were ever reported during the flush times of the war period.

A fishing-smack capsized last Saturday afternoon while trying to make the pier at Michigan City, and three of its men drowned. They were from Chicago, but their names have not yet been ascertained.

A supposed incendiary fire at Anderson, last week, destroyed the heading and stave factory of Henry Alford, with a large amount of stock. Building and machinery entirely destroyed. Loss about $5,000; no insurance.

Patents on inventions and improvements have recently been issued to citizens of this State as follows: Fracture splints, G. H. Brown, Indianapolis; draft equalizers, W. H. Brown, Lafayette; drive well points, D. A. Danford, Elkhart; rotary blowers, J. McClosky, Connersville.

A barn owned by James McCloud, near Milford, Kosciusko county, was struck by lightning, last week, and entirely destroyed, together with 300 bushels of corn, sixty tons of hay, two carriages, and other farming implements. Mr. McCloud was injured by try to get his stock out of the flames, but not seriously. Loss, $4,000.

A sad accident occurred at Lafayette on Monday, by which an old man named Conroy and his wife were killed while walking on the track of the Toledo, Wabash and Western railroad. They were both very old and feeble, and were caught by a switching train before they were aware of its approach. The engineer did not see them, as he was with his engine at the further end of the train.

Among its fishing notes the Terre Haute Express has the following: "Last week Mr. James Foster caught 18,000 pounds of fish at one time. It was done by stretching a large seine across the mouth of Mill creek, just above York, when the river was at its highest, and the fish were up in the creek, and as the river began to fall the fish moved back toward the river, and were stopped by the large seine. With a smaller seine he kept seining them out, and caught the above immense amount."

The Boonville Enquirer says: "The farmers throughout the country are busily engaged preparing for huge crops the coming season. A greater number of acres will be seeded this year than any former one, especially corn and potatoes. The average of wheat exceeds that of last season, and the prospects are equally as flattering. Almost every farmer is preparing for an increased crop of tobacco. The meadows look exceedingly well, and with a favorable season, the crop will exceed last year's in quantity."

Recent postal changes in Indiana: Discontinued—Bear Creek, Jay county; Cookerby, Vigo county. Established—Blair, DeKalb county, Jacob D. Leighty, Postmaster; Pleasant Plain, Huntington county, E. J. Scott, Postmaster. Postmasters Appointed—Sunman, Ripley county, James M. Torrence; Versailles, Ripley county, William Will; Boston Store, Montgomery county, George H. Crider; Cortland, Jackson county, Allen A. Shepard; Kewannee, Fulton county, Rufus Blair; Oakland, Spencer county, Frederick Polk; Reno, Hendricks county, R. F. Hall.

As an illustration of the increasing value of walnut lumber, the Indianapolis Journal notes that the standing walnut trees on a half section of land in Miami county were sold recently for $17,000. There is a large amount of other timber on the tract, which is not included, only the walnut timber being sold. Walnut lumber is coming more and more into use throughout this country and Europe, and at present a very large business is done in preparing and shipping it from Indiana.

For some months past an organized gang of car thieves have been plying their vocation in the vicinity of Logansport, the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and St. Louis railway being the principal sufferers. The company has had detectives at work for some weeks past, and, everything being in readiness, they made arrests, capturing nine of the robbers and recovering a large quantity of the stolen freight, consisting of trunks, valices, boots, shoes, tobacco, liquors, dress goods, clothing, and various other articles, which were found concealed at the houses of the thieves. The ringleaders were three brothers named Wright, and a man named Evans Baker.

A young lady named Nora Wagner, a daughter of Lycurgus Wagner, of Franklin, was shot in the leg under singular circumstances, a few days ago, near that place. A youth named Robinson, the son of the Rev. L. D. Robinson, was sportively flourishing a pistol at a picnic, when a girl came up and playfully tapped the trigger with a stick. The pistol was by this means discharged, and the bullet buried itself in the limb of Miss Wagner, who was standing near. The bullet has not yet been found by the surgeons, though Miss Wagner suffers no great inconvenience from the wound. It is some satisfaction to know that the young idiot who carried the pistol was taken before the Mayor and fined for carrying concealed weapons.

The Chicago Tribune, of April 22, has a report of the condition of the crops in Northern Indiana, telegraphed from South Bend, which says: "Parties who have been well over that section of Northern Indiana where winter wheat is usually a large crop, concur in the report that wheat on the numerous small prairies is almost a total failure. Many farmers are already drilling in spring wheat on the fields that were sown last fall with winter wheat. In the cleared timber section, where there was protection from timber, wheat looks well, and will average about a two-third yield. It is estimated that this county will give about half a crop, which is better than the adjoining counties will do. Owing to the low prices last fall, not more than three-fourths the average was sown, as compared with the year before. Corn commanding good prices will cause a larger planting this season than ever before."

German Gymnastic Drill.

In a private letter to a gentleman in New York, the contents of which are furnished to the Cincinnati Gazette by a correspondent, the secret of the success attending the German arms in recent struggles is partially unfolded by a description of the drill under which the soldiers have to pass. The writer witnessed some portions of it while strolling near the barracks outside of Madgeburg. For raw recruits a lot of gun boxes were piled up to a height of four or five feet, and over these the men were required to make handsprings, each one on failing being required to try it again and again until successful. Another squad was practicing a leap over a four foot high pile, touching only with the right hand. Others were springing with the help of the left hand only, and others still without touching either hand. At one side of the drill ground were horizontal bars, and other appliances of the gymnasium, at all of which squads were at exercise, every squad being under the supervision of an officer. In another place was a wall breast high, over which soldiers in full-marching order with muskets and knapsacks were leaping, with only the assistance of their left hands. With bayonets fixed they marched to the front of the wall, and halted at the word of command. Then, at another order, each man rested his left hand on the wall, and at another he leaped over, without touching feet or hitting the butt of his musket against the stone. Several times they did thus, and then, from a distance of twelve or fifteen yards, went over it at a run in the same way, by the use of only the left hand. Such exercise as all this gives a man must necessarily make him, in a measure, insensible to the ordinary fatigue of an active campaign, and has also the double effect of keeping the men under strict discipline while improving their physique.

The Seven Wise Men of Greece.

These men are supposed to have lived in the fifth century before Christ. Their names were Pittacus, Bias, Solon, Thales, Chilon, Cleobulus, and Periander. The reason of their being called "wise" is given differently by different authors, but the most approved account states that as some Coans were fishing, certain strangers from Miletus bought whatever should be in the nets without seeing it. When the nets were drawn in, they were found to contain a golden tripod, which Helen, as she sailed from Troy, is supposed to have thrown in there.

A dispute arose between the fishermen and the strangers as to whom it belonged, and as they could not agree they took it to the Temple of Apollo, and consulted the priestess as to what should be done with it.

She said it must be given to the wisest man in Greece, and it was accordingly sent to Thales, who declared that Bias was wiser, and sent it to him.

Bias sent it to another one, and so on until it had passed through the hands of all the men, afterwards distinguished by the title of the "Seven Wise Men," and as each one claimed that some one was wiser than he, it finally was sent to the Temple of Apollo, where, according to some writers, it still remains to teach the lesson that the wisest are the most distrustful of their own wisdom.—Methodist.

The champion lifter, Mr. L. Barr, is an employee in one of the rolling mills in Indianapolis. He is said to be one of the most powerful men west of the Alleghanies. He often picks up a couple of rails weighing 1,120 pounds for small wagers, and can handle a 560 pound rail easier than most men can handle a fair-sized stick of wood. He is credited with having lifted 1,475 pounds not long since. This modern Samson wears his hair short, is six feet in hight, magnificently proportioned, and has very bright, black eyes.

"At Vienna," writes a musical correspondent, "we saw a little tenor struggling to carry off a fat soprano, to the amusement of the house, which she made stentorian mirth by turning around, whipping up the tenor and making her exit with him kicking under her arm."

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC

The Old Farm-House.

O, dear the old farm-house to me!
  The homely ways, the ample cheer,
The refuge at my mother's knee
  From childhood's every grief and fear.
And dear the memory of those days
  Bathed in love's amber atmosphere,
When all our voices rose in praise,
  When sire and child were bowed in prayer.
    But where are they,
    The fond, the gay,
  Who filled the great white house in May?

Gone like the birds from last year's nest!
  Gone as the leaves in autumn fly!
Some to the cities of the West;
  Some toil beneath an Indian sky;
Some, other prairies sow and reap;
  One sank beneath the moaning sea;
Some in the churchyard lie asleep,
  And, quivering in the old roof-tree,
    One homesick waits
    The swing of gates
  To waft her to heaven's bright estates!

Around the Farm.

An ill-bred thoroughbred is the worst animal a farmer can breed from.

Examine branches of fruit trees within reach, and remove everything containing eggs or insects.

To Save Plums from the Curculio.—The branches of the elderberry bush, hung among the branches of the plum tree, are said to effectually prevent the ravages of the curculio. They also drive away the striped bug from cucumber plants.

It is a good plan to keep a small field near the barn for growing roots. Even one acre heavily manured and thoroughly tilled would be found very profitable. After two years' thorough culture the expense is greatly lessened. Grow mangolds for cattle and carrots for horses.

Farm out-buildings are not complete until there is room for not only all the products of the farm, but also all the implements and vehicles necessary are provided for, and also a shop where tools can be kept for doing repairs and such jobs in bad weather as the farmer and his help may be able to do.

Dr. Sylvester, of Lyons, planted his orchard twenty-eight years ago, and from less than ten acres had 1,000 barrels this year. He does not keep stirring the surface because he believes it wastes the fertility. Does not believe in using large quantities of stable manure in the pear orchards, for it would cause blight. If his trees make three inches of wood yearly, he is satisfied.

For potatoes and corn, hog manure which contains plenty of well rotted corn cobs is one of the best things I ever used. Cobs contain a great deal of potash, and are extremely useful on soils which are deficient in that material. On almost all kinds of land, and for all farm crops, they are much more valuable than is usually thought, and ought to be carefully saved and used for manure.

In raising tomatoes for profit plant in rows four feet apart, alternating with rows of peas. The peas protect the tomatoes. The rows should be east and west. When the peas are picked remove the vines and take a light plow and turn a furrow away from the tomatoes. Raise the tomato plants in a seed bed, then set them in a cold bed and let them get stocky and finally take them to the soil.

The following table of periods which some of the most common seeds require in germinating is given in the Michigan Farmer:

	Days.		Days.
Wheat	1	Beet	6
Millet	1	Purslane	9
Hungarian grass	1	Cabbage	10
Barley	7	Parsley	40 to 50
Spinach	3	Hyssop	30
Beans	3		Years.
Mustard	3	Almond	1
Lettuce	3	Chestnut	1
Aniseed	4	Peach	1
Melon	4	Rose	2
Cress	5	Filbert	2
Cucumber	5	Hawthorn	2

The Dressed Weight of Animals.—Farmers, who have had but little experience in feeding animals for the market, are often disappointed because their beef and pork does not weigh as much as they thought it would. They are likely to overlook certain points which ought always to be taken into account when estimating the dress weight of animals. 1. Age. An old animal will not dress as much in proportion to its looks as a young and growing one. (!) 2. The degree of fatness. A creature well fattened will weigh a great deal more than one equally as large, but which has not been well fattened. 3. Amount of grain which has been fed. An animal which has had twenty or thirty bushels of meal will dress much heavier than one which was in equally good order when the fattening was commenced, and which may look equally well when it is finished, but which has been fed only half as much meal. 4. Length of time in which grain has been fed. A creature which has been mealed for five or six months will weigh more than one which has had about the same quantity of meal, but which has been fed only about half as long. In all cases liberal and long continued feeding is essential to the attainment of any great success in fattening animals of any kind. —New England Homestead.

About the House.

Brown paper is an excellent thing to polish tin with.

If you are buying a carpet for durability, you must choose small figures.

Wash-boilers that are inclined to rust, may be washed with sweet milk.

Vinegar Whey.—Take of milk one pint, vinegar half an ounce; boil for a few minutes, and separate the curd. Excellent for the sick.

Hop Yeast.—One handful of hops, three pints warm water, one cup brown sugar, one cup and a half of flour, one tablespoonful salt, two-thirds cup yeast.

Gum Arabic mucilage may be prevented from molding or fermenting by the addition of a few drops of sulphuric acid, or better still, of a small portion of quinine.

Cure for a Felon.—Take a tablespoonful of fine salt, a tablespoonful of black pepper, a tablespoonful of vinegar, and the the yolk of an egg, simmer together and bind on. Renew twice a day. A never-failing remedy.

To Cement Brass to Glass.—Boil three parts of colophony with one of caustic soda and five of water. The soap or emulsion produced is mixed with half its weight of plaster-paris, zinc white, white lead, or prepared chalk.—Journal of Applied Chemistry.

Children's Pudding.—Children like sweet things, and a nice and simple little pudding can be made for them by taking a pint of sirup and a large lump of butter, let them warm over the fire. Take some slices of baker's bread, let them simmer a few minutes in the sirup, and send to the table warm.

Moths in Carpets.—Moths will work in carpets in rooms that are kept warm in the winter as well as in the summer. A sure method of removing the pests is to pour strong alum water on the floor to the distance of half a yard around the edges before laying the carpets. Then once or twice during the season sprinkle dry salt over the carpet before sweeping. Insects do not like salt, and sufficient adheres to the carpet to prevent their alighting upon it.

Match Mats.—These can be made of ordinary sand paper cut in circular and octagonal shapes, fastened upon pasteboard and bound with bright-colored braids, a ring attached to each and the whole hung near the match-safe for use whenever a match is lighted. The unsightly marks that disfigure many walls may by this inexpensive and simple arrangement be entirely prevented. There should be one in every room in the house.

Give Us a Change.

Give us now a dash of etymology, syntax, or prosody. There has been something too much of this orthography. The spelling match has been productive of no good save to the peddlers of unabridged dictionaries. It has filled the victor with vainglory and the vanquished with consuming envy. There may have been in it fun for the boys, but the fatality among brags has been fearful. People who spelled along in blind confidence now fear to spell at all lest they be caught tripping. What right, anyway, has Noah Webster to set himself up as an authority for the spelling of words? Why may not every man, otherwise entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, be permitted to spell according to the dictates of his own conscience? We agree heartily with Gen. Jackson, who hated the spelling book with an intensity only equaled by Andrew Johnson's love of the constitution without a k. Said the General to a coxcomb critic, "If e-x-t-r-e-a-m doesn't spell extreme what in h— does it spell?" It was the General who originated the cabalistic sign O. K., his abbreviation (are there two b's in abbreviation?) of "oll korrect." We would be glad to enter most cordially upon a defense of the old man's peculiar orthography if Randolph had not already done so, even at the expense of the scholarly Adams. Said Randolph long ago: "It is true Jackson cannot spell. The reason is, he was fighting the British while Webster was making spelling books. Jackson cannot write, because he was not taught. Nor can Adams, either, write well. The reason is, that he was not teachable. Jackson is ignorant, but he could have got over it if he had only had a chance. Adams had a chance, but he was a natural born fool, and he never could get over it."—Chicago Times.

Cold Sleeping Rooms.

Hall's Journal of Health says that cold bed-chambers always imperil health and invite fatal diseases. Robust persons may safely sleep in a temperature of forty or under, but the old, the infant, and the frail, should never sleep in a room where the atmosphere is much under fifty degrees Fahrenheit. All know the danger of going directly into the cold from a very warm room. Very few rooms, churches, theaters and the like, are ever warmer than seventy degrees. If it is freezing out of doors it is thirty degrees—the difference being forty degrees more. Persons will be chilled by such a change in ten minutes, although they may be actively walking. But to lie still in bed, nothing to promote circulation, and breathe for hours an atmosphere of forty and even fifty degrees when the lungs are always at ninety-eight, is too great a change. Many persons wake up in the morning with inflammation of the lungs who went to bed well, and are surprised that this should be the case. The cause may often be found in sleeping in a room the window of which has been foolishly hoisted for ventilation. The water-cure journals of the country have done an incalculable injury by the blind and indiscriminate advice of hoisting the windows at night.

Tunneling the Hudson.

The Hudson Tunnel Railroad Company, that propose to construct a tunnel twenty-six feet in width and twenty-four feet in height under the Hudson river, have organized under the general railroad laws of New Jersey, have raised their own capital, and have gone to work with a vigor that seems to mean business: No subsidy has been asked for, though it is estimated that $10,000,000 will be required for the completion of the work. When it is open for travel, it is expected that, in addition to its ordinary traffic as a public road, 400 trains of cars will be enabled to cross the river daily. Of course various obstacles have been placed in the way of the company, but they urge that their work is necessary to the commerce of New York, and they avow their determination to push ahead. Certainly they have discovered the secret of success so far as all plans for rapid transit are concerned. They rely upon private capital to build the road, and this must be the future of all such schemes. State and city aid for this purpose are things of the past.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The Roll of the Lords.

There are 26 spiritual and 465 temporal Lords upon the roll of the Lords. The total number (491) is one less than the number on the roll of last session. The name of Prince Arthur as Duke of Connaught and Strathearn appears on the roll for the first time. The names of Lord Kildare (now Duke of Leinster) and Lord Panmure disappear. The other changes are but substitutions. The Earl of Clonmell and Lord Castlemaine take the places of the two Irish representative peers deceased; the Bishop of Ely comes into the house on the retirement of the Bishop of St. David's, and Baron Ravensworth is advanced to a place among the Earls. The House of Lords consists of five Princes of the Blood, 28 Dukes, 33 Marquises, 171 Earls, 37 Viscounts, 26 Prelates, and 192 Barons. John Wilson Patton (Lord Winmaleigh) is still the junior Lord.—London Times.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, APRIL 29, 1875.

The Washington correspondent of the Graphic announces that Grant never was a candidate for the third term. As the president is not in Washington, it is not easy to see how the correspondent of the Graphic can know anything on the subject. The Graphic is one of the few papers that have shown a disposition to favor the third term project.

The "King of the Bohemians" is dead. Henry Clapp was a cynical, unique, brilliant wit, without a checkered story. He had been a temperance lecturer and a drunkard. He had been an Abolitionist preacher and an office-holder in the city government of New York. He had been a reformer in England and had bathed in the dissipation of Paris. A brilliant conversationist, he became the center and the justly-named King of a little Bohemian circle in New York in which wit and culture were not lacking, though Presbyterian proprieties were not observed.

The wholesale swindling of colored people revealed by the investigation of the affairs of the defunct Freedman's bank, at Washington, has alienated the affections of nearly all of that class from the republican party, and the managers of that tottering concern are becoming extremely solicitous to regain the ground they have lost. To do this the administration has hit upon an expedient rather more ingenious than honest. It is proposed to buy the bank building, on the pretense that it is needed for department purposes, for an amount sufficient to cover the accounts of the defrauded depositors. It is believed, and with good grounds, that this would restore the confidence of the Coopo voters in the republican party as their saviors and natural and only protectors.

Set orations are sometimes a little ridiculous in their minor effects.—George William Curtis opened his speech at Concord with a flowery description of "the heaven's bending condignly" over the scene, and the "earth blossoming with renewed life." The day, however, turned out to be a cold and stormy one. Still more ridiculous was the effect of the peroration which was directed to Grant as follows:

Sir, it is the signal felicity of this occasion, that on the one hundredth anniversary of the first battle in the war of American independence, I may salute you, who led to victory the citizen soldiers of American liberty, as the first elected president of the free republic of the United States. Fortunate man! to whom God has given the priceless boon of associating your name with that triumph of freedom, which will presently bind the East and the West, the North and the South, in a closer and more perfect union for the establishment of justice and the security of the blessings of liberty than these states have ever known.

In the meanwhile the president had taken himself off to enjoy a smoke and a drive, and left the orator alone with his eloquence. When the direct address came, it was directed to an empty seat. This was rough on Curtis.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The New York Sun says: We receive a great many letters from Southern subscribers to the Sun upon the subject of the relations between the whites and the negro race in that part of the country; and the burden of a large porportion of them is that people who live in the North cannot understand the conditions which now govern these relations. That the great mass of former slaveholders have come to the conclusion that emancipation will eventually prove a benefit to the people of the Southern States is undoubtedly true, and we do not suppose that any person of ordinary intelligence in the South has the most remote idea that this result of the war can ever be changed. One correspondent writes: "We are all abolitionists down here, but not radicals. We think the war, in cutting us loose from slavery, has been, or will be, of service to the white man, but how much it will benefit the negro, time alone will show." The majority of the freedmen are improvident, while they lack the intelligence, the application and the skill to make their labor as profitable as it should be. What is worse according to the testimony of innumerable witnesses, the rules of morality fail to exercise much influence over them, and their habits of pilfering render them in the most cases undesirable neighbors. A Federal office-holder in Georgia, writing of the negro, says:

"Having no forethought to prompt him to provide for his own necessities at the proper time, when hunger overtakes him, he will sally forth under cover of darkness, having in his bosom no conscientious scruples to restrain him; and if a neighbor, black, or white, has a hen roost, a pig sty, potato field, or corn patch well supplied, the next morning will exhibit signs of depletion." The depredations of worthless negroes upon the property of the whites and on the industrious and prudent of their own race form the subject of general complaint in every part of the South. One reason for the loose morals of the fredmen may perhaps be found in the character of their religious teachings. While the Southern negro, religion is usually entirely an emotion. At their meetings they will indulge in the most fervid shouts and prayers, which will not have the least effect in preventing immoral actions immediately afterwards; and the preachers of their own race are popular in porportion to their power to induce in their congregations a condition of ecstary, rather than for the excellence of their precepts and the uprightness of their example. An intelligent correspondent, writing from Kentucky, says that the negroes are inclined to be religious, but their ministers in too many cases are utterly unprincipled knaves and sensualists. Almost all the women, without regard to habits of life, belonging to the church and the light regard in which chastity is held, both by the shepherds and their flocks, have led to gross immoralities among the negro clergy, which have the effect of disgusting the better class of colored people with the very name of religion. All this servise to show that the opposition to familiar social intercourse between the two races in the South which the passage of the Civil Rights Bill has done so much to intensify, arises not so much from a prejustice against color as against certain characteristics of the newly enfranchised freedmen, which it is to be hoped will disappear in time. It also explains the intense antipathy to the establishment of mixed schools which is so generally felt throughout the reconstructed States.

Let the Whole Cabinet Resign.

In the House of Representatives which meets in December, there will be a Democratic majority of about seventy. Nobody doubts that the House will, through the agency of investigating committees, very thoroughly overhaul the leading departments of Grants Administration, and institute a searching inquiry into the public conduct of Grant himself. To fail to do this would be to shun the performance of a plain duty, and seriously disappoint public expectation. We take it for granted, therefore, that this important work will be done, and that the knife, so to speak, will be thrust into the foul ulcer of Grantism without pity and without fear.

In this view of the course which the next House will pursue, it is very easy to account for the resignation of Attorney-General Williams, and to credit the rumor that other members of the Cabinet will soon follow his example, and step down and out. They see the storm coming, and would fain hide themselves from its fury.

Perhaps the frightened officials imagine that if they throw up their seals a few months previous to the meeting of Congress they will be forgot on by the time it assembles.—Doubtless the whole of them ought to be covered with the contempt of every high-minded person; but the people have in store for these corrupt and infamous officeholders something more intolerable for them to bear than the scorn of upright citizens. They will demand that Congress shall not only expose their misdeeds, but punish the malefactors; or, at all events, leave it to the Republican majority in the Senate to brave public odium by acquitting them, if it pleases so to do after the House shall have arranged them at its bar for high crimes and misdemeanors.

However, perhaps they had all better follow in the footsteps of Williams. It could do no harm; and their voluntary disappearance from public view might be accepted as a plea of guilty and throwing themselves upon the mercy of the court in advance. We therefore advise the rest of the Cabinet to resign in a body, and not stand upon the order of their going, but go all at once.

As to Grant, the people themselves will settle his case at the polls if any convention can be brought to nominate him for a third term.

We are under obligations to Hon. W. Williams, member of Congress, for a set of records of the 43d Congress.

The first accident in the erection of the new jail, occurred yesterday morning. An Irishman fell and put a shoulder out of joint.

There is a great deal of filth and rubbish lying around loose on some of our streets; let it be gathered together and burnt.

Issac Roth, Esq., has hands at work, moving his residence in the rear end of his lot, to make room for the new dwelling to be erected at once.

Don't forget to try Simmons' Liver Invigorator. We have every reason to believe it will give those suffering from disease of this organ immediate relief.

It don't take a pocket-book full of "spondulicks" to paper your best room if you go to Davenport's after the paper That's boss.

Gen. Reub Williams, of the Indianian has in view the purchase of the Fort Wayne Gazette. We hope he will conclude to purchase, as we would like to see a good morning paper there, and believe Reub could furnish it.

There will be a supper and festival, for the benefit of Rev. J. E. Fisher, at Ensley's hall next Friday evening to which the people of Auburn and vicinity are all cordially invited. Tableaux, Music, and a good time generally.

Frank Davenport is the worst fellow to sell things cheap we ever saw. He is selling Wall Paper so cheap that it would pay our citizens to paper their barns and woodhouses, just for the looks of the thing. Go and learn his prices.

The tick of the telegraph instrument is now heard next door to the Courier office, and we now have direct communication with the whole world including Garret City. No well regulated telegraph office can be happy without a printing office next door.

We can help you spend your money wisely, we can convince you, that you can save money this spring and summer, if you will buy your boots and shoes at J. E. Woodford's, sign of the big boot, East side of Main street, Auburn, Ind.

Two gentlemen from Fort Wayne have leased the brickyard of Mr. Ensley, and will go to work immediately to get out a million or more brick to meet the great local demand. They are practical workmen, and we believe they will find a good investment here.

T. H. Clayton, of Garrett, was practising with the festive revolver, and by a simple twist of the wrist, a shot therefrom perforated a finger, and rendered one joint boneless in the twinkling of an eye. He discovered his mistake soon after.

Ladies' and Gents' remember that you can always find a complete assortment of the best and latest styles of ladies', gents', misses' and children's Shoes and Slippers. Remember that our store is headquarters for varieties and styles, as well as low prices. J. E. Woodford, sign of the Big Boot.

An item appeared in the Courier of week before last stating that the brick already delivered on the ground for the new jail, had been condemned. Such is not the case. The brick were bought of Mr. Groscop, and they have been adjudged good material, and payed for. We make this correction in justice to Mr. G.

We call attention to the Letter from the South, from the able pen of our old and esteemed friend, Hon. John W. Dawson. He makes a careful review and gives the result of his observations on Louisiana affairs, after a sojourn of nearly two months in that State. It will be read with interest. See 1st page

We learn that a Marble Shop will be established in Auburn in a few days. The vacant space west of the ice house has been leased, and the new establishment will be in running order in a short time. We have often wondered why this branch of trade has not been represented here before, perhaps because of the healthy condition of our people, but then they have realized a moderate trade from other localities.

Though the Bryan Band is a crack one, our Auburn boys played alongside of them without suffering any depreciation by the proximity. We have a good band, a gentlemanly set of fellows who never fail to honor and reflect our good name abroad. We suggest that the boys get up a grand musical festival of about two days in June, offer prizes and have a regular jubilee of bands.

The Town and school Board, has decided to purchase several lots of Dr. Ford next to his residence, for the erection of a school house some day, for the accommodation of that part of town. Our place is getting too large for one central school house, and, we believe this will be a wise provision. Now the next thing is, to look after a new school edifice.

Hicksville is building up quite substantially. A large number of new buildings are in course of erection. We noticed a fine new church on Main street, opposite Mr. Edgerton's residence. The Auburn folks were loud in their praise of the fine school building now in use, which goes to show that our citizens would appreciate a good edifice of this kind if they had one. We hope soon to have one.

The Odd Fellows' celebration at Hicksville last Monday, proved to be a greater affair than was anticipated by our enterprising neighbors. Delegations from Bryan, Defiance, Maysville and this place, were in attendance, aggregating three bands, and the air was full of music. The exercises were neatly conducted, though somewhat brief on account of Bob Patterson, of Bryan, failing to put in an appearance as speaker.

We are now told that the fact of the construction of Mr. Williams' "cottage by the sea" on south Jackson street was not duly chronicled at the time last summer. That house must be noticed, for we think it one of the best in town. It is built with some degree of taste, which we cannot say characterizes all the buildings going up in this town. It is commodious and airy, and entirely comfortable within.

Peters' Household Melodies is issued every month at $4 per year. It contains songs, duetts, choruses, etc, all new and original. The last number contains "Alone, and at Home," "When Silver Locks replace the Gold," "The Shores are fading Robin," "Never say die," "The Strain I heard in Happier Days," "Where is my loved one To-Night," "Gane Awa'," "Sun of my Soul." Address J. L. Peters, 599 Broadway, New York.

If you want a pair of easy fitting boots or shoes, that will surround those painful corns, or bunyons, and make you think there is something in this world to live for, besides trials, troubles, vexations, pains, misery; and tribulations, go and let W. W. Humes, at J. E. Woodford's, fit you with a pair of understandings, that will produce the happiest effect; sign of the big boot, East side of Main street, Auburn Ind.

Some smart young men were stoning the billiard room, last Friday night known as five points. This business will not always last, and the gang, who have for some time been carrying it along, will feel sore over the effects of a cartridge ball. It speaks bad for the town, and looks to the eye of a well raised citizen, especially a stranger, as though the town was destitute of Sunday schools and Bibles. Watch for them and the law will "cook their dish."

Coming.—We are glad to announce that the Albion Dramatic Company will render the "Ticket-of-Leave Man," at Ensley Hall on Saturday evening, May 8th, being a week from next Saturday. Several of our citizens went over to Albion last Saturday night and saw them play this charming drama, and they accredit the troupe as being first-class. We want to see the hall crowded, not only as a compliment to our neighbors, but to reciprocate the courtesy extended to our troupe a few weeks ago at that place.

Messrs. Cy. Lock, of Waterloo, and Mace Long, of Fort Wayne, were in town Monday looking up a location for a new billiard parlor, to contain six tables. They propose building a room and buying property for this purpose. These gentlemen are of the kind that push ahead in everything they undertake, and the lovers of the billiard game may rest assured of a quiet and orderly room to while away their idle moments. If they can secure a lot at reasonable figures, immediate steps will be taken to erect the building.

One of the most beautiful and convenient additions to the city of Auburn, is now being laid out by Mr. John Sommers, East of cedar creek. The most desirable building lots in the immediate vicinity of Auburn will soon be in the market. Mr. Sommers in connection with Mr. Baker, intend to continue seventh street on a straight line east to Ford street, thence South connecting with the Spencerville road. We are pleased to see Mr. Baker enter into the spirit of enterprise that seems to prevail among all our citizens.

Business Men's Union.

W. H. Whitaker is in this county representing the firm of Fouse, Hershberger & Co., 285 Broadway, New York, managers of the above named Union. The object of the Union is for the collection of outstanding and abandoned claims, and by its system of reports to protect business men from a class of men that systematically obtain credit, and never pay. This is the best method of adjusting such claims that has ever been introduced, and every business man in DeKalb County should take an interest in the enterprise, as it will be a great advantage to them. We have examined the system and freely endorse it. We see by examining Mr. Whitaker's books that he has a majority of the principal firms at this place. He will call on all the business men in the county within a few days and give them an opportunity to avail themselves of the benefits of the Union.

The game of croquet is a beautiful game—and how the young bucks improve the shining hours, may be seen by gazing out on the Court House Square!

Is Friday an Unlucky Day.

I answer this question in the following satisfactory manner: On Friday, August 21st, 1492, Christopher Columbus sailed on his great voyage of discovery. On Friday, October 12th, 1492, he first landed. On Friday, January 4th, 1493, he sailed on his return to Spain, which, if he had not reached in safety, the happy result would never have been known, which led to the settlement of this continent. On Friday, March 15th, 1493 he arrived at Palos in safety; on Friday, November 22, 1493, he arrived at Hispanola on his second voyage to America; on Friday, June 13th, 1494 he thought, unknown to himself, that he discovered the continent of America; on Friday, March 5th, 1496, Henry VIII, of England gave to John Cabot his Commission, which led to the discovery of North America. This is the first American State paper in England. On Friday, September 7th, Melendez founded St. Augustine, the oldest town in the United States by more than forty years; on Friday, November 10th, 1620, the Mayflower with the pilgrims made the harbor of Provincetown, and on the same day they signed that august compact, the forerunner of our present glorious Constitution. On Friday, December 22, 1620, the Pilgrims made their final landing at Plymouth rock. On Friday, February 22, 1720, George Warhington, the father of American freedom was born; on Friday, June 16th, 1777 Bunker Hill was seized and fortified, and on Friday, October 7th, 1777 the surrender of Saratoga was made, which had such power and influence inducing france to declare for our cause; on Friday, September 22d, 1780, the treason of Arnold was laid bare which saved us from destruction; on Friday, October 18th, 1781, the surrender at Yorktown, the crowning glory of the American arms, occurred. On Friday, July 6th, 1776, the motion in Congress was made by John Adams and seconded by Richard Henry Lee, that the United States Colonies were, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Thus by numerous examples, we see that however it may be with foreign nations, Americans need never dread to begin on Friday, any undertaking however momentous it may be.

Important Suggestions to School Officers

In seating a school room always avoid placing a small desk in front of a larger one. A scholar can neither sit nor write with ease when desks are so arranged. Desks of the same size should be placed in the same row, placing the large desks in the outside rows, and the smaller ones in the inside. If necessary at any time to place a small desk in front of a larger one, a back seat should be placed between them, corresponding in size with the smaller desk.

As a matter of justice to the people, we would advise all trustees to require a "warranty," to be attached under the seat of every desk they purchase. We are convinced that this is the only way by which a warranty will amount to much Our reasons are, that a trustee usually loses a guarantee, even if one be given him, and it is very seldom that his successor ever sees it, consequently when desks break, the usual result is that the trustee not knowing whether the desks were warranted or not, buys new ones, as many have done the past year. Furthermore, require a warranty to be written as follows and be sure the words "ordinary or fair use," do not appear in it:

FORM OF WARRANTY.

"This desk is warranted for five years from the time of delivery. If it breaks in use in that time, or becomes rickety, will upon notification, replace it with a new desk, complete, not the casting only free of all charges.

(Signed)———Manufacturers."

Require the above "warranty" to be given in all cases by a responsible manufacturer. We propose to warrant every Bent Wood Desk in the above manner, and if one breaks or gets rickety it is sure to be seen by the teacher or director that it belongs to us to replace it free of all charges. If trustees allow themselves to be pursuaded to purchase any manufacture of school furniture without such a warranty they should be held strictly accountable by the people for gross carelessness. So much school furniture is breaking in the country districts especially, that it cannot longer be overlooked and passed by as an insignificant matter. We have, during the past year, had trustees to pay us fifty dollars and upwards for repairing broken cast iron desks with "bent wood."

All we ask of you is to purchase whatever desk you think best, but when you purchase any desk in the future, protect yourselves and your people as we suggest in the way of practical "warranty."

We clip the above from a circular issued by the Higgens Bent Wood School Furniture Company, of Indianapolis. There is so much sound sense in it, we feel called upon to give it the benefit of our circulation and to call upon the people to see that more care be taken in the selection of good school furniture. Trustees should not at any price purchase furniture which the manufacturers cannot afford to and will not warrant as above. School furniture properly made and of durable material should last twenty years, and if the manufacturers will not fully warrant it for five years, by attaching the warranty to each and every desk they sell they should not expect the people to encourage them in the manufacture of a worthless article. We hope there are no trustees in this State who will allow agents to persuade them at the expense of the people to purchase school furniture which will have to be replaced by the township for at least ten or fifteen years. We would further suggest that trustees at their May meeting pass a resolution not to purchase any desk unless every one has a warranty attached similar to the above.

From Corunna.

Nothing of especial interest has transpired at "high Corunna" since your last issue. In our rounds we note the following:

William Kline has located in our village. Also William Heist.

Rev. Mr. Mott, for the past three years pastor of the M. E. Church, preached his farewell sermon on last Sabbath.

We trust that brother Fried did not "pizen" neighbor Rosenberry's faithful dog "Shep."

On Monday last the summer term of the Corunna School commenced, with Miss Crosby as principal and Miss M. Harding as assistant.

Rev. Mr. Bacon has been assigned the pastorate of the M. E. Church, and will preach his introductory sermon on next Sabbath.

There is an odd character about town. He is known by the euphonious cognomen of "Chicago Joe," and he works for "Slocum."

If we must have saloons, such a man as Oliver Rosenberry is the right man in the right place. His purpose is not to abuse his privelege as a saloonist.

It is rumored that an attempt to suicide occurred a few miles from town last week. The case is a young girl—it is a sad case, and—

"Points a moral to adorn a tale."

The dog-killer came around the other day, and several of the canine tribe have gone under. The manner in which some fiend is distributing sudden death around loose is not pleasant.

W. B. Adams, the hardware merchant, with a full stock for the summer campaign, is certainly an enterprising citizen. He spares no pains or expense to improve and beautify his property, which has been extensively overhauled and brightened up lately. The example of Mr. A. is worthy of emulation by our villagers.

Some scallawag boy "shied" a rock at an eastern bound passenger train recently, which perforated a window of one of the coaches and bounced from off the head of a dozing passenger. As the railroad Company want that boy, and as they have set a fabulous price upon the body of the wretch, perhaps it would be just as well not to tell, as "it might injure the feelings of his parents," you know. Thereby hangs a tale.

Gordon.

The New Eldorado.

We paid a brief visit to Garrett City last Thursday, and found everybody speculating as to its future greatness. It is beautifully located in the midst of a large tract of land, handsomly surrounded by a large variety of swamps and other exotics. Its climate is not quite so genial, perhaps, as that of Florida, and yet its lovely tammarack groves, reminds one of the pine forests of the Sunny South. It is that "sequestered spot" that so many novelists write about and by whose artistic touches it is made so beautiful. In fact it is so unusually attractive at this time of the year, that our Waterloo friends visit it in large delegations, and peacefully gaze on the transporting scene. Even Charley Baxter has been there, and who could remain away after the knowledge of the fact. There is no getting along without it; children cry to go there; the women must see it. It is the mecca of our hope, the crowning of our desires. Well, we visited this fertile city and found it as tranquil as a porker in a mud hole. A ifew buildings here and there indicate the exact spot where the city is to be located. Several large frames for boarding houses are going up, and one or two store rooms. But little work is being done by the railroad, yet lots are selling rapidly at from $300 to $500 each. Parties from abroad are rushing there to secure eligible locations. Now is the time to invest; nearly one hundred lots have been sold already. Mr. Cowan informed us that he gave a guarantee that the shops would be located there, or a forfeiture of $500 would be made, together with the lot purchased.

The boarding house, restaurant and saloon business, seem to be about the best at the present. The hotel de Clark and cafe de Butts, are flourishing under a fine patronage, one of a permanent, the other of a transient character.

Our friend John A. Marvin is doing splendidly with a neat little restaurant, and will erect a house in which to locate permanently.

Orrin C. Clark is building a large store room on the south side, wherein to engage in merchandise.

The most popular resort is the Tammarack house, in the west end, where the agreeable Messrs. Mernsch & Moore hold forth. It was here we met the second most celebrated character in the place, "Wild Dick, the Printer," Hermit Long being the first. Who has been where Dick has not. The breezes of the tropics have fanned his classic brow, his brawny arm has reached forth and grasped icicles from the north pole; the beauties of the Indies have stretched out in panoramic view before him, and the monster grisly of the rocky mountains has snarled at his approach. A good judge of human nature, an excellent memory, and withal a keen wit, Dick is no slouch, and those who pick him up for a fool will let him drop quick. Hermit Long still clings to his ducal palace with a tenacity that ought to be appreciated, but isn't. There is an alabaster whiteness, a purity of complexion, about him that astonishes the beholder, and with his fine silk hat set jauntily on one side, his ample cloak thrown carelessly around him, a la Hamlet, he looks the king indeed. We attempted to interview him, but he gently put us off by picking up a small fence rail and jocosely requested us not to call again. He spoke largely of his landed estates, and seemed to have an undue affection for several railroad officials, who wanted to buy him out. He did not ask us into his studio to partake of his choice old Burgundy, doubtless aware that we could not spare the time. Visitors from abroad will receive a brief but hearty welcome, and will miss the greatest feature of the city if they fail to give him a call.

What Others Say.

Bro. Staley of the Frankfort "Crescent," writing up the Southern excursion, says of Florida:

When we landed from the steamer, and the train from the capitol of Florida came to receive us, lo, I beheld a large number of the foremost citizens of Tallahassee, the officers and members of the Board of Trade, and other dignitaries were there to welcome us. Ex-Governor Walker, who came very near being elected United States Senator from Florida, instead of Jones; ex-Judge Dupont, of the Supreme Court of the State, and other eminent men were there; the silver cornet band had been sent, and we were received in great style. Our distinguished hosts accompanied us to the State Capitol, and when we arrived at the depot a short address of welcome was made, carriages were provided to carry us to the hotel. Several of us were taken in carriages and buggies over the city to see the sights, and after supper in the evening, we were all taken to a large hall, where a choice selection of fruits, vegetables and flowers now to be had in abundance here, were on exibition. There were oranges, bananas, winter plums, fresh ripe strawberries, large lettice, cabbage just pulled weighing twenty pounds, beets, raddishes, turnips etc., etc. It looked like an enchanted scene. Flowers were there in rich profusion; beautiful large roses and many flowers not common to us. Bunches of wheat and oats two feet high were there, showing that those two cereals could be raised in Florida.

We are charmed with the mild, genial climate, the flowers and early vegetables A fine sea breeze comes wafted from the gulf only thirty miles away, the country here is gently rolling and undulating, varied by hill and dale, and with all a rich fertile soil, capable of producing anything. Oysters in abundance brought up from the bay. Good society and all things that render life desirable and pleasant. The pepole welcome all persons from the north; they want us to come and settle here, and grow up with them.

All day Thursday, the 25th, was spent in visiting the delightful country around Tallahassee. This is the prettiest district of country we have yet seen in all the South. Much of Florida is a low barren waste, but here in Central Florida, the land is diversified with hill and dale, lowland and upland. Here you find some of the best soil to be found in the South. Though this is not strictly an orange country, yet some of the most delicious oranges it was our pleasure to find we plucked with our own hands in Captain Houston's plantation, one mile from Tallahassee. Let me here say, that up in the north we do not know what a sweet orange is. The fruit sent up to us is all inferior, insipid. For a genuine sweet delicious article you must come to Florida and pull them—eat them fresh from the trees.

Not only oranges, but the great staples cotton and sugar-cane, as well as corn, wheat and oats, are here grown. They have a species of grape, known as the Scuppernong, which yields very abundantly and produces a delicious, harmless wine which "Exhilarates but not intoxicates."

For early gardening this portion of Florida is unsurpassed. They now have green peas, raddishes, etc., corn is up three or four inches, they have new potatoes and beans are coming on. To all persons looking to the South, we would say Central Florida is the place.

MENSCH & MOORE.

THE OLD HOMESTEAD.

One day in the early autumn
Of a bright and happy year,
I wandered home to the homestead,
To the homestead old and dear;
A ruin it stood before me—
A ruin, with moss o'ergrown,
With the door on broken hinges,
And falling chimney stone.

As I wander'd around and around it,
And in, through each dusty room,
With only the lonely echo
Of my feet a-through the gloom,
I thought how they sometimes told me
That away from the shining shore,
The dead come back in the silence
To the homes they have loved before.

And I said, does he—the master,
The father, who loved so well
The homestead amid the meadows,
The brook in the winding dell—
Does he ever come in the silence
Of the night's clear, starry hours,
With his voice of silvery laughter
Through the tangled weeds and flowers?

[illegible] in the twilight
Does he come to the open door,
And sit in the peach-tree's shadow
As he sat in the days of yore?
And over the foot-worn pathway
Does he go to the wicket gate,
And stand and wait for the children
As he used to stand and wait?

Does he look adown the roadside,
And under the shadowy oaks,
And hear the lake-waves murmur,
And the oarsman's gentle strokes,
'Till he sees the children's faces
So bright, and young, and fair,
With the moonlight's golden brightness
On the black and the auburn hair?

And when, with their gleeful singing,
They follow him through the gate,
To the hearthstone, where the mother
Doth patiently watch and wait—
Does he—as he used to say it—
With a face so cheery and bright,
"Bless God, oh mother, our darlings,
Our children are safe to-night!"

Is it thus that he sees he homestead,
In the beauty of early years?
Or it's mildew, and blight, and ruin,
And the children's struggles and tears?
Does he come in the purple gloaming,
And wander through chamber and hall,
And yearn for the dear old faces,
And the love that brightened all?

MARK SHELTON'S WIFE.

One cold morning in December, Mark Shelton, Esq., and his wife sat down to breakfast in one of the coziest of dining-rooms; Mark with a cloud on his usually pleasant face, and his wife's placid countenance wearing a puzzled and sorrowful look, for when had he been angry with her before?

He had scarcely spoken to her the previous evening, and he looked sullen and gloomy still. What had she done? She had pondered the thought over and over, yet she had not dared to ask him.

The morning sunlight streamed into the room as they silently drank their coffee and abstractedly nibbled their muffins; and broad stripes of yellow gold lay on the sea-green ground of the carpet, mingling softly with the bright tints of the autumn leaves that sprinkled it; and lighting up the pictures on the varnished walls, until they stood out vivified into life-like perfection in the mellow light. The fire burned cheerfully in the polished grate; the canary chirruped blithely in his gilded cage, while the trailing vines that festooned the recesses of every window turned each delicate tendril to the warm sunlight, as if thankful for the warmth and comfort and hallowed glow that filled that pleasant room.

Mr. Shelton finished his breakfast and took up his morning paper. Mrs. Shelton, a pale little woman, whose chief beauty lay in her eyes, which were so blue and trustful one could not help loving their owner, watched his moody face uneasily. Her smooth, purplish black hair was coiled up in a loose double twist, with here and there a tiny curl peeping out, giving her a girlish look that Mark had often admired. Her morning dress was navy blue cashmere, with snowy lace at the throat and wrists, and simply elegance itself; and, better than all, was the work of the slim fingers that were nervously twirling the silver teaspoon in her dainty coffee cup.

But Mark was too much engrossed in his own moody thoughts to find any interest in wife or paper, for, after a vain attempt at reading, he laid the latter down, and sat silently staring into the fire.

"Mark," burst out his wife, who felt as if she were under the influence of a night-mare, "what on earth is the matter with you?"

And Mark answered her with that sensible masculine evasion, "Nothing."

"I know there is something wrong somewhere," went on Mrs. Shelton, desperately. "Are you angry with me, Mark?"

"No, Alice, I'm not angry with you."

"Then tell me your trouble. I never saw you so depressed before, and we are married five years to-day, Mark."

"Bless me! So we are! I had entirely forgotten it." Mr. Shelton looked up for the first time, and glanced across the table at the little woman in blue, whose cheeks had lost the peachy bloom they had worn that day five years ago. But the dear face was as fresh as ever in his partial eyes, and his heart ached more for her than himself, for he knew she would suffer keenly in the crisis he was dreading so much. "If the children had been spared to us," he said, mentally, thinking of the two little graves in Greenwood, "they would have been a comfort to her." But he kept his thoughts to himself, and said, instead:

"Will you attend Mrs. Austin's party, Alice?"

"On the 20th? Yes." The uneasy light left Alice Shelton's loving eyes, for, since he was not angry with her, she did not care to pry into his secrets. And yet if he only would confide in her, she would feel so relieved. "Will you go, Mark?"

"I think not." A curious smile parted his lips.

"Why?" in a tone of surprise.

"I shall be otherwise engaged."

"Nonsense, Mark. You must not be such a slave to business. Few men are as prosperous in the world."

"I have been prosperous," dreamily, "but"—he never finished the sentence.

"And the panic never affected you in the least," innocently remarked Mrs. Shelton, who knew as much about the subtle workings of the financial world as she did about the mythical inhabitants of the moon.

Mr. Shelton jumped up, slightly flushed in the face.

"What idiots women are!" was the complimentary exclamation that met his wife's ears, as he went hurriedly from the room, heedless of her excited "Mark——"

But Mark was out in the cold, sunlit street, before the little woman had recovered from her astonishment; his white, even teeth clenched tightly together, as he hurried down to the dim, musty office, where so many arduous duties demanded his attention.

Many of his business friends who met or passed him on the streets looked curiously at his down cast face; for his mind was too much preoccupied to take any interest in passing occurrences. He heard nothing, saw nothing but the blue, numb hands of the street beggars, who seemed to beset his path every few rods, for his characteristic charity was well known, and few were the palms that did not close on the coveted penny.

For Mark was a good man, humane, charitable and generous in all things, and until a year back the world had gone well with him. But the panic swamped dozens of his debtors, his business was [illegible] his creditors were clamorous for bills he could not meet. He had never been careless, unwise or extravagant in filling or discharging contracts, and his business difficulties had come upon him so swiftly and imperceptibly that the blow fell heavier than if he had been expecting some such catastrophe.

But Alice Shelton knew nothing of all this. The mental turmoil going on in her husband's breast never found vent in a dissatisfied word or look, and until the previous day he had kept his face and manner free from all traces of anxiety. But the constant excitement and worry had been too hard for him, and the dunning of a creditor, who demanded the punctual payment of a note of $4,000 that fell due on the 21st of December, together with other unforeseen debts, had so upset him that he could not cover his mental distress with the mask of carelessness he had worn for weeks past.

His greatest trouble was for Alice. Never very strong—and he had often underrated her strength—he had endeavored to surround her with every comfort and had carefully kept all harrassing business details or cares from her ears. He had given her money without stint, and he supposed she spent it like other women, for she was always well dressed, and his home was a model of order and good taste. Be that as it may, he never thought of tracing the cause of his failure to home extravagance. For no woman was more thoroughly economical, without being miserly, than Mrs. Shelton. Her party toilets were always in exceptional taste, and her dress for Mrs. Austin's party was not designed for any unusual display of elegance, although the gathering was to be one of unusual brilliancy.

The night of the 20th came—a dark, stormy December night, the air filled with snowflakes and the sky gray and overcast with heavy clouds.

"It is going to be a terrible night, Mark," Mrs. Shelton said to her husband, who sat before the library fire, evidently absorbed in the contents of the evening paper. "I have thought once or twice since I commenced dressing that I would not go out to-night."

"Go, by all means, Alice; the carriage is close," her husband replied, glancing up at the trim little figure arrayed in a dark silk, retrimmed, with a pale blush rose in her purplish-black hair, and at the white throat, half-veiled with a flimsy lace. He smiled bitterly as he saw her going out in her happy, childlike innocence, as she might never go again, among people who had no sympathy for failing merchants, and who would not give his wife a thought if she were not rich in the world's goods.

"I wish you would go," she said, beseechingly, lingering at the door to adjust her cloak, "Mr. Austin will be expecting you."

Mr. Shelton smiled, thinking, perhaps, of the forbidding face of a man of whom he had begged a loan that afternoon, whose curt "cannot spare a dollar, sir," rang in his ears yet. He arose from his seat by the fire, and going over to his wife's side, fastened the warm wraps closer about her throat.

"Be careful of yourself, little woman," he said with a forced attempt at gayety, "and enjoy yourself, for it is utterly impossible for me to go."

He accompanied her to the carriage, and as he closed the door on the placid little face he inwardly anathematized the weakness that prompted him to withhold the story of his difficulties from her, when she daily ran the risk of hearing it from lips less liable to soften its details. Yet he still hoped that the morrow would bring some chance of redeeming his lost credit; although his efforts to raise the $4,000 due on the 21st were still unsuccessful. He was almost worn out with physical and mental labor, yet he put on his hat and overcoat, and dragged wearily down town through the fast-falling snow and murky darkness, to spend the dreary hours of his wife's absence, poring over ledgers in his counting-room.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Mark Shelton, not quite satisfied with Mark's "strange freak," as she called her husband's refusal to attend the party, was zealously trying to feel at ease among Mrs. Austin's stylish guests. For, somehow, she felt depressed and ill at ease among the fashionables who had hitherto welcomed her as the wife of a prominent young merchant who was steadily rising to eminence in the commercial world. There was an undercurrent of coldness in their greeting that her sensitive nature detected instantly, and an angry flush rose to her cheek when she overheard a remark relating to "Mrs. Shelton's old silk."

"I suppose my dress is not up to their standard in point of elegance," she muttered, bitterly; "but I'll never ruin Mark with my extravagance in dress—never!"

She slipped out of the gay, overcrowded parlors into the library, where she found refuge behind the heavy hangings of a bay window. She dropped into a low seat, and sat watching the streams of gas-light flickering across the street, now ankle deep with snow, wishing that Mark would remember her orders and send the carriage early. The heavy sensuous odors of tropical plants filled the room with a fragrance that almost took her breath away, and in the distance the music of a popular waltz rose and fell, the soft, voluptuous cadences soothing her disturbed mind into a calmness that was soon broken by the entrance of two ladies, whose first words chained Mrs. Shelton to her seat, and held her in the questionable light of an eaves-dropper.

"I was astonished to see Mrs. Mark Shelton out to-night," exclaimed the elder of the two ladies, whose diamonds flashed in the gas-light.

"Why?"

"Have you not heard? Why, Mrs. Lamer! Shelton is on the verge of bankruptcy."

"Mark Shelton? Impossible! Why, he is considered one of the staunchest merchants in the city."

"He was. But he has lost credit somehow. He has been on the streets for days trying to raise money to cancel most of his urgent debts; and I wouldn't be surprised if his wife did have to give up her stylish home before the winter is over."

"She is a nobody anyway. Her father was only a soap chandler and I have often wondered at Mark Shelton's taste in choosing her for a wife," remarked Mrs. Lamer, who had once a decided fancy for Mark [illegible].

"Soap chandlers are as good as other men, provided they are sober, and respectable," returned the lady with the diamonds, whose father had once been a peanut vender, while Mrs. Lamer's ancestors were famous for blue blood and reckless dissipation.

"I don't pity Mrs. Shelton, though," went on Mrs. Lamer, politely ignoring the elder lady's home thrust; "for I expect she is just like other women in the same situation; Mark made oceans of money, and she spent it."

"Doubtless. Just give any woman that never had anything some money to splurge on, and see how fast she'll go through it," laughed the elder lady, as she glided out of the library, her rich silks sweeping after her like purple billows, while Mrs. Lamer followed her like a shadow, in her pale tarletan robes.

Poor Alice Shelton had heard every word, and sat perfectly still, with her slim, white fingers clasped tightly together. Every faculty of her nature seemed paralyzed by the intensity of her emotions. Her honest, conscientious heart was shocked at the hypocrisy of two of her most intimate society friends, and with the bitterness was mingled a feeling of intense pity for Mark, who had kept all this from her ears that she might hear it from so uncharitable lips. Verily, she thought, the world is a vain show, and those who love it but moths, fluttering about its dazzling pleasures, only to have their wings singed by the cruel tongues of flame that leap up from envy, malice and deceit.

"Mark shall not fail," she said, rising up, with a white, determined face. "I will show them his wife is worthy of him."

Heedless of the gayety and warmth around her, of the blinding snow-storm that was raging without, or the long, snow-bound walk that lay between the Austin mansion and her husband's warehouse, she hurried up to the dressing-room, and, wrapping herself up in cloak and furs, went out into the storm and bravely faced the blinding sheets of snow that the wind dashed into her face—a face almost as ghastly as the snow that fell so swiftly and silently on the half-deserted pavements. The gas flared out through murky gas lamps with a dull, sickly glare; hacks and carriages went whirling by like sheeted ghosts, and once in a while some belated pedestrian almost walked over her; but still Mrs. Shelton walked on, her heart too hard and anxious to think of fear or fatigue.

When she reached the warehouse the clock on a distant steeple was just chiming 11, and Mark was standing in the dimly-lit office, putting on his overcoat. The porter dozed in a chair before the stove in the outer room, and Alice stole softly past him and stood before her husband.

"Alice!"

His eyes dilated in astonishment. Alice dropped into a seat and looked up at him with a glitter in her blue eyes that held him spellbound.

"Mark, do you think I'm a fool?"

Her voice had a raspy ring that startled Mark. He glanced at her snow-covered wraps, and then made a dash for the soaked boots peeping out from under the edge of her bedraggled silken skirts.

"Alice?"—one boot came off with a jerk—"what insane whim drove you out on the streets such a night as this?"—he flung its mate to the furthest end of the room.

"O Mark," Mrs. Shelton's temporary strength and courage was swiftly vanishing, "are you going to fail?"

Mark instantly comprehended the situation. She had heard the story of his financial troubles, probably in some distorted form, and the knowledge had almost crazed her. He blamed himself severely for keeping her in ignorance of the truth. He always had a repugnance to womanly interference in business matters, but felt, in justice to his wife's general worthiness, he should have trusted her in this emergency.

"Hush, Alice!"—for she was beginning to sob hysterically—"you must not be alarmed. If I can raise the money to pay off a note that falls due to-morrow, I may weather the panic yet."

"How much will you need?"

Her little face was uplifted eagerly.

"Four thousand dollars."

"Is that all?" with a little hysterical laugh. "Then you won't fail; for I have five thousand, all my own, saved out of the money you gave me to spend on the house and myself. Ah, Mark, you thought I spent it!"

"Alice!"—Mark took the little shivering form in his arms—"you are worth your weight in gold!"

"I know it," slyly retorted Alice; "but it has taken you five years to find it out. And, Mark, if you cannot cancel the rest of your debt, we'll sell the house and furniture and live in a room or two until the panic is over; for you shall not fail."

Mark sent for a carriage, and they went home through the white, noiseless streets, Alice recounting, as she went, the story she heard in Mr. Austin's perfumed library. At its conclusion she said:

"It was cruel of you to keep me in the dark so long, Mark. And never, never treat me like a fool or a child again. For if I am a soap-chandler's daughter, I have sense, and feeling, and judgment, and discretion enough to save something for 'rainy days.'"

It is needless to say that Mark redeemed his note, to the chagrin of some of his business rivals, who had secretly gloated over his difficulties; and, although his affection for his wife was never demonstrative, the care he took of her was wonderful, for he found that the price of a good wife is "above rubies."

The History of Zero.

"Zero," on the common thermometer, like the fanciful names of the constellations, is a curious instance of the way wise men's errors are made immortal by becoming popular. It may be worth while to say that the word itself (zero) comes to us through the Spanish from the Arabic, and means empty, hence nothing. In expressions like "90 deg. Fahr.," the abbreviation, Fahr., stands for Fahrenheit, a Prussian merchant of Dantzic, on the shores of the Baltic Sea. His full name was Gabriel Daniel Fahrenheit.

From a boy he was a close observer of nature, and when only nineteen years old, in the remarkably cold winter of 1709, he experimented by putting snow and salt together, and noticed that it produced a degree of cold equal to the coldest day of that year. As that day was the coldest that the oldest inhabitant could remember, Gabriel was the more struck with the coincidence of his little scientific discovery, and hastily concluded that he had found the lowest degree of temperature known in the world, either natural or artificial. He called that degree zero, and constructed a thermometer, or a rude weather glass, with a scale graduated up from the zero to a boiling-point, which he numbered 212, and the freezing-point thirty-two. Because, as he thought, mercury contracted the thirty-second of its volume on being cooled down from the temperature of freezing water to zero; and expanded 180th on being heated from the freezing to the boiling point.

Time showed that this arrangement, instead of being truly scientific, was as arbitrary as the division of the Bible into verses and chapters, and that these two points no more represented the real extremes of temperature, than "from Dan to Beersheba" expressed the exact extremes of Palestine.

But Farenheit's thermometer had been largely adopted, with its inconvenient scale; and none thought of any better until his name became an authority, for Fahrenheit finally abandoned trade and gave himself to science. Then habit made people cling to the established scale, as habit makes the English cling to their old system of cumbrous fractional money.

Our nation began to use Fahrenheit's thermometer about the middle of the last century, or not far from the time when Old Style was exchanged for New Style in the writing of dates.

The three countries which use Fahrenheit are Holland, England and America. Russia and Germany use Reaumer's thermometer, in which the boiling point is counted 80 degrees above freezing point. France uses the centigrade thermometer, so called because it marks the boiling point 100 degrees from freezing point.

On many accounts the centigrade system is the best, and the triumph of convenience will be attained, when zero is made the freezing point, and when the boiling point is put 100 or 1,000 degrees from it, and all the subdivisions are fixed decimally.

If Fahrenheit had done this at first, or even if he had made it one of his many improvements, after the public adopted his error, the luck of opportunity, which was really his, would have secured to his invention the patronage of the world.—North Christian Advocate.

How a Maine Printer Was Made a Man of.

Several years ago, a slab-sided, awkward printer boy, from Maine, found his way to Washington in search of an "easy place." Tom Ewing was then Secretary of the Interior. He was also uncle of our gawky place-hunter. To him the youngster naturally applied for assistance in getting the desired situation.

This was the encouraging answer he received from Ewing.

"I will not get you a place in any of the departments. Moreover, if you find a place and go to work, I will use all my influence to have you dismissed. I am not going to have you made into a limp and helpless nonentity, if I can help it. I want you to get out of Washington. Go anywhere; go to the devil, if you like, you shan't stay in Washington."

This inspiriting counsel drove the printer youth back to Maine again.

Had Ewing found him the desired place, he would to-day be tying tape around bundled documents, or sticking official stamps on somebody else's letters, in one of the departments, an inert human routine machine. But the uncle's sensible brusqueness was the nephew's salvation. The name of that discouraged young applicant was James G. Blaine, present Speaker of the House of Representatives.—*Wash. Cor. Eggs a Healthy Food.—An English paper earnestly recommends an increased consumption of eggs as an important article of daily food. It asserts that this ingredient of diet is an unmistakable promoter of longevity, and that practical advocates of the system will live to be eighty or ninety years old. It gives a still higher incentive to aliberal consumption of eggs, for it advises their use for all those persons who are deficient in brains, as the phosphorous forming a large constituent in the egg will strengthen and develop the brain [illegible]. The same authority gives excellent advice as to the different ways in which this desirable article of food may be made palatable. Hard boiled eggs and brown bread and butter make excellent sandwiches; eggs spread on toast make an appetizing dish; and poached eggs, or those dropped from the shell into hot water, form a delicate morsel for an invalid.

A Terrific Problem.

A recent number of a scientific journal, speaking of the relative proportion of the sexes in the human race, declares that for every one hundred and fifty men that come into the world, one hundred and seventy-two one-hundredths (100 72-100) women are born. I do not dispute those figures. I only ask for light. It appears, according to this, that there are some women who are only seventy-two one-hundredths of a woman. What the remaining twenty-eight one-hundredths are I cannot imagine.

Now, what I want to know is this: If a woman of this kind marries a one-hundred man and has a daughter, will the daughter be an eighty-four one-hundredths woman, or a ninety-six one-hundredths woman? And what will be the exact relationship between such a daughter and a seventy-six one-hundredths aunt and her eighty-seven one-hundredths daughters, especially if the eighty-seven one-hundredth girls marry the brothers of the ninety-six one-hundred girl, and so become not only her ninety-eight one-hundredth first cousins, but also her ninety-five one-hundredth sisters-in-law, the aforesaid seventy-six one-hundredth aunt becoming also the eighty-nine one hundredths mother-in-law of her eighty-eight one-hundredth nephews, will the—the—. Let me see; where am I? It is an awful subject to grapple with. Oh yes! I say if the seventy-six one-hundredths aunt ——. But no. The question can't be solved in any such way as this. I give it up. The only way to get at it will be to do the sum in algebra somehow, making the daughter x, the aunt y, the first cousin a, and the mother-in-law b. Then, it seems to me, if you multiply the aunt by the daughter and divide the first cousin by the mother-in-law, in some way or other, or else extract the square root of the cousins and subtract the result from the aunt, keeping the daughter as a common denominator, and at the same time make a decimal fraction of the mother-in-law, perhaps the result might be satisfactory. But I am not certain. I am poor at mathematics. I wish the lightning-calculator would get at this, or that Professor Tyndall would subject it to chemical analysis.—Max Adeler.

Disgusted with Law.

Many a man who has lost a just suit in court will talk in strong terms about the uncertainty of law. But few have such a good reason for their distrust as Dr. Lyman Beecher. He used to tell the following incident with a flashing eye and strong emphasis, even in his old age:

He woke one night when a young man in college, and saw his clothes slowly disappearing through a broken pane in his window. His room was on the ground floor. Without hesitation he leaped from the bed, and opening the window, sprang out of it in his night-dress and gave chase. The frightened thief dropped the clothes, and thought only of escaping. But Beecher's blood was up, and he held on in the chase till he grabbed the thief by the collar. When the latter attempted to strike, he knocked him down and choked him till he begged for mercy. The thief then tried to get a knife out of his pocket, but Beecher took it away, and marched him back to college in triumph, and made him quiet on the floor till morning. Then he took him before a Justice, told the story with an honest pride at his own prowess, and waited to see the law do its duty. To his unspeakable disgust the Justice released the culprit because, in the chase, Beecher had lost sight of him once round a corner. Beecher was disgusted, and inclined to speak sarcastically of the technicalities of law after that experience.

A Man Without a Single Hair.

In the County House, at the present time, is a man who bears the name of George Greenwood, born in Malden, Mass., in 1826, where he resided for several years. He subsequently emigrated to Texas, where he followed the occupation of a herder, and afterward was a large stock-raiser. Greenwood is entirely hairless, not having a single hair about his head and body. He is even void of eyebrows and eyelashes. While in Texas he acquired a great fancy for athletics, and on leaving that State, traveled with Barnum, and afterward with Rice's circus. He at one time earned about $5,000 per annum. He was never married, but has lived a fast life. He failed in health some time ago, and was placed in the hospital at Albany, from which place he was removed to this city by a stranger and left at one of the Congress street hotels, and, owing to his being without friends, he was sent to the County House. No reason has been assigned by the medical fraternity as to the cause of his being entirely without hair.—Troy Budget.

Our Coal Territory.

The coal area of the United States is sectioned off in square miles about as follows: Illinois (largest of all) 36,600, or about two-thirds of the whole area; Missouri basin, 26,687; Iowa, 18,000; Kansas, 17,900; West Virginia section, 16,000; Ohio section, 10,000; East Kentucky section, 8,983; Pennsylvania section, 12,502; Pennsylvania anthracite, 472; New England basin, 500; Maryland section, 550; Tennessee, 5,100; Alabama, 5,330; Indiana, 6,440; West Kentucky, 9,888; Texas, 4,500; Michigan basin, 6,700; Nebraska, 3,000; Arkansas, 9,043; Virginia, 185, and North Carolina, 310. The great bulk of the general coal deposit in the common soft or bituminous coal the exception being the semi-bituminous, the anthracite and the cannel coal found largely in the Kanawha coal fields of West Virginia.—Illinois Journal.

By a table published in the New York Times it is shown that only seventeen per cent. of the inhabitants of that city are native born of native born parents—that is having two generations of American blood in their veins, while nearly eighty per cent. are foreigners and the children of foreigners. In the country at large these figures are almost reversed.

"Enough! enough! Oh, let us part,"
Said Tabby, moved to tears;
"I'm sure you'll break my bleeding heart,

Or shall I scratch your ugly eyes?"
And here her spine began to rise.

"No, no," said Tray, "You eat the rat,

A Funny Ice Adventure

Last Saturday a man residing near Cohoes was trying to move a large cake of ice which was on the point of being cast out on the road by the current in the river. He stepped upon the ice with the intention of breaking it, when it began to move off, taking him with it. The ice moved out into the center of the river and rapidly toward the dam. The man was in a fever of excitement, expecting his last moment to appear when he would reach the dam. The water being very high, the fall at the dam was unusually low, and the ice with the man on it passed over in safety, and drifted in the direction of the gas house. When nearing the gas house the ice landed on top of a little shanty which was nearly covered with water. The man got off the ice and stood on top of the house, but immediately fell through a skylight in the roof, falling on some girls who had gone to the top floor to escape the water. A scene immediately ensued, the girls roaring "Burglar!" and "Murder!" Their father appeared from the next room and an explanation followed.—Troy Press.

The doctor who made the post mortem examination pronounces the cause of death to be opium poisoning, and, in answer to a question, stated that laudanum was sometimes mixed with treacle as a substitute for spirit of poppies.

Fashion Notes.

THERE is a noticeable absence of lace on hats, this season.

THE old-fashioned black and white checks are to be worn again.

ALL the looping of, over-dresses is in the back. The front must be perfectly straight and plain.

MOST of the spring hats have three or four colors in the trimming, and these in great contrast.

CHILDREN'S hats are mostly of chip and leghorn, and simplicity is the rule which guides their trimming.

THE new summer fan is called the "Pistolet." It is shaped like a pistol, and "goes off" when opened.

YOUNG ladies, from twelve to sixteen, who are in the habit of chewing gum, must be told the painful news that that practice is going out of fashion.

SOME of the country hats are marvels of beauty and jauntiness. They have very wide brims turned up in front and dented at the sides, and are trimmed with scarfs of flowers.

WALKING skirts consists of a front gore, a straight back breadth and two gores on each side. About half way down the skirt, on the second side seams, strings should be fastened, in order to tie the dress back, and make all the fullness come behind.

A VERY pretty every-day dress for a little girl of ten years is of brown plaid, made with overdress and basque. The underskirt is trimmed with a knife plaiting about eight inches wide, headed with a bias fold piped with red. The little round overskirt, looped on the side and in the back, has the same trimming made narrower. The basque has only the fold and piping around the bottom, and the sleeves have a plaiting eight inches wide, with a fold and piping running through the center. The arm-holes are also piped.

IT may be well to suggest to young ladies who wish to have something quite pretty and dressy without much expense, that a sleeveless jacket of lace and muslin puffs or insertion is extremely pretty to wear over a black silk to an informal entertainment where full dress is out of the question, and a plain black silk is a little too sober. A jacket of this kind may be made at home, and with not very much work. After a perfect pattern is made, the lace must be carefully basted on the paper, bringing selvedge to selvedge, so that it may be overhanded. When the seams are nicely put together, it should have a lace edge an inch and a half or two inches wide all around the garment and around the arm-holes.

A New "Rape of the Lock."

The Pall Mall Gazette reports that a "Rape of the Lock" is reported from Gorlitz, in Silesia. A young Baroness residing in that town had struck up a close friendship with the daughter of a tradesman there, who boasted of a magnificent head of hair, terminating in two black locks behind, while the Baroness had but little hair that was not supplied by the hairdresser. Her friend the other day made an offensive allusion to this circumstance, and the Baroness determined to be avenged. Taking advantage of an unguarded moment, she cut off the two objectionable locks; but her punishment has been much more severe than that inflicted by Pope's Belinda. The tradesman's daughter applied to the Crown Prosecutor for redress, upon which a prosecution was instituted against the Baroness in due form before a jury, though the law officers were in great doubt as to whether the offense should be regarded as an "infliction of bodily harm," an insult, or a theft. Ultimately the jury decided that it was a case of bodily harm, and the Baroness was sentenced to five days' imprisonment.

A Pet Lobster.

A French journalist met with a strange pet the other day when paying a visit. While he was talking he noticed something moving on the carpet which was neither a cat nor a dog. On looking again he saw that it was a fine lobster, dark gray, spotted with red, and thought that it must have escaped from the kitchen. The lady of the house smiled, and said: "I must tell you the history of my pet. Some months ago I bought a lobster, and as it was not wanted for dinner, my cook left it in the water in the kitchen. I was going to a ball that night, and being ready, I sat in an easy chair and fell fast asleep. Suddenly I sprang up from the pain of a sharp bite in my foot, and I saw the lobster biting it. I started up and ran to the kitchen. No one was there, and a cloth in front of the fire had caught fire. It was soon extinguished, but I have kept the lobster ever since out of gratitude." It has its basin of cold water, and seems to recognize its mistress, and is so fond of music that it is always drawn toward the piano whenever she plays.

A NEAT THING IN JAILS.—Out in Churchill county, Col., they had a prisoner, but no jail in which to confine him. The authorities finally resolved upon a magnificent residence. There was an old unused mining shaft in the neighborhood, and into this shaft the prisoner was lowered. Three times a day he was raised to the surface, fed, and then lowered back again. As the shaft was 200 feet deep there was little chance for an escape from jail by climbing out, and tunnelling out would scarcely be attempted. The plan of the Colorado Sheriff is recommended further east. It is almost impossible to procure the honest erection of a public building, but a hole in the ground might be dug which would not be a sham. The new plan for jails has its merits, though it would be bad for prisoners in the event of a sudden flood.

THE recent birth of the quadruplets in Baltimore is paralleled in a similar event in Brattleboro, Vt. The parents' name is Hahn, and the family are very poor. Hundreds of people visit the infants every day. An admission fee is charged, and the little ones are already earning from $50 to $100 a week each. They continue healthy, and are likely to live. They were christened Sarah, Mary, Katie and Jennie.

A Perplexed Duellist.

The most notorious of living duellists is just now under a cloud, and the worst of it for him is that he cannot, as usual, get into the sunshine again by killing or wounding somebody. A certain Madame Olga in Paris recently sent around to the office of the Pays newspaper a notice of a concert, which notice failed to appear in the journal named. A friend of Madame Olga called on the editor of the Pays, M. Paul Cassagnac, and asked the reason of this neglect. M. Cassagnac, the editor, responded curtly, and supplemented his response by a reflection upon the character of the lady interested. Madame Olga, hearing of this scandalous aspersion, failed to throw herself into the Seine, or adopt any of the modes of [illegible] women in the French capital. She took quite a different course. In short, Madame Olga dressed herself in man's attire, purchased a small cane, and went upon the war-path. She found that famous duellist and editor, M. Paul Cassagnac, sipping his absinthe grandly in the fashionable Cafe de la Paix, and addressed him briefly but pointedly in the way a furious woman talks. Then the little cane in Madame Olga's hand cut the air and curled about M. Cassagnac's back, then across the face, and then the gentle creature left the room. The duellist is enraged, but, apparently, without resort. He cannot call a woman out and shoot her; he cannot pink her with his sword, which is for men alone. It is a distressing situation for the editor of the Pays, and his Frenchman's wit will be tested in devising a revenge.

Some New French Apherisms.

It is right to despise fools; it is wrong not to fear them.

Love descends to friendship; friendship never soars to love.

People who injure us always say they do so for our good.

Women do not like to remember; men do not like to foresee.

Nothing shows happiness more than tears. Tears are the extreme smile.

An honest man never abandons a woman, but he knows how to make himself forsaken.

By their fickleness women escape much misery. Birds save themselves only with their wings.

A women never is deceived by the love she inspires, but she deceives herself through that which she experiences.

PATENT MEDICINES.—That there are some good patent medicines no intelligent man dare for a moment deny; and preeminent is the great California hero medicine, VINEGAR BITTERS, discovered by DR. J. WALKER, a prominent physician of San Francisco. This medicine, although called Bitters, is not to be classed among the vile "fancy drinks" recommended and sold over the bar by rumvenders, but is a combination of pure herbalistic extracts, known to possess sterling medicinal qualities, and is compounded without the use in any shape of spirits. Its action upon the internal system is not stimulating to the extent that alcoholic poison is, but it at once attacks blood-impurities, and by removing the original cause destroys the germs of disease and invites returning health. Its action upon the stomach and liver render it an almost certain specific in the most stubborn cases of dyspepsia, and in truth imparts new life and vigor to the whole system. It is one of the best medicines ever invented.

THE STATURE OF PRIMITIVE MAN.—The indications are that the primeval man of Europe and his nearer, descendants were of short stature. The popular notion that the present generation is physically weaker and smaller than the primitive or ancient is not only utterly unfounded, but there is abundant evidence that the reverse is true. Most of us would be amazed if not shocked at a true and life-sized portrait of the real Eve, "mother of all living." We often hear, indeed, of giants' bones here and there dug up, but intelligent examination invariably proves them to have belonged to the mammoth or other animal.

THE most eminent organists of Paris and London, as well as Warren, Morgan, Zundel, of Trinity, Grace, and other principal churches in New York, have given to the Mason & Hamlin Organ Co. written testimonials to the superiority of their cabinet organs, which they declare to have excellencies not found in others.

THE QUEEN OF ALL SEWING MACHINES.—In speaking of the merits of the Wilson shuttle sewing machine, it is sufficient for us to say that we think the invention of this machine marks one of the most important eras in the history of this country; and when we consider the influence it has upon the social well-being of the masses, it is difficult to conceive of an invention of more importance. It has a beautiful, noiseless movement; it makes the genuine "lock-stitch" alike on both sides, and does to perfection all kinds of plain and fine sewing; it needs no commendation; its rapid sales, the increasing demand, and the many flattering testimonials from those who have used it, is sufficient proof of its merits. The want of a sewing machine is deeply felt in every household, and as the Wilson shuttle sewing machine, on account of its extreme simplicity and less cost of manufacture, is sold at a much lower price than all other first-class machines, it is meeting with the extensive patronage that it so justly deserves. Machines will be delivered at any railroad station in this county, free of transportation charges, if ordered through the company's branch house at 197 State street, Chicago. They send an elegant catalogue and chromo circular free on application. This company want a few more good agents.

DAVIS' PAIN KILLER.—This article needs no comments from us, but the real worth of so valuable a compound compels us to give publicity to it. The Pain Killer we keep constantly at hand, and have done so for a number of years, and have administered it for ails of all descriptions, both external and internal, and have ever found it to be the best remedy extant. We well recollect its first introduction for public patronage; it was then sold in a few shops in the city; look at it now—the world are its patrons. Sold everywhere.

"HORSE-MEN," and others who pretend to know, say that the following directions had better be observed in using Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders: Give a horse a tablespoonful every night for a week; the same every other night for 4 or 6 nights; the same for a milch cow, and twice as much for an ox. The addition of a little fine salt will be an advantage.

WE have heard recently of several severe cases of spinal disease cured by Johnson's Anodyne Liniment; one case of a man forty-five years old, who had not done a day's work for four years. The back should be washed, then rubbed with a coarse towel. Apply the Liniment cold, and rub in well with the hand.

THE Elastic Truss of Pomeroy & Co., 744 Broadway, N. Y., is by far the best in use.

A $4.00 Book for $1.50.

The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, in plain English, or Medicine Simplified; By R. V. Pierce, M. D., Counselor-in-Chief of the Board of Physicians and Surgeons, at the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y. The above work—a book of about nine hundred large pages, profusely illustrated with wood engravings and colored plates, and well and strongly bound—will be sent, post paid, to any address, for One Dollar and Fifty Cents—making it the cheapest book ever offered to the American People. Other books treating of domestic medicine, of like size and style of binding, and not nearly as well illustrated, with no colored plates, and some of them containing no prescriptions and making known no means of self-cure for the diseases which they discuss, sell for from three dollars and a half to five dollars. Were Dr. Pierce's Work not published by the author, printed and bound with his own machinery, and were it sold through agents, as other like works are, the price of it would have to be not less than four dollars. For when the publisher pays the author a fair price for his production, then adds a profit to his investment large enough to satisfy himself and compensate him, not only for his labor, but also for the risk of pecuniary loss which he assumes in taking the chances of the enterprise proving a success, and when the State, county and canvassing agent has each received his profit, they have added to the expense of a book, that originally cost about $1.25, so much that the people have to pay not less than $4.00 for it. The People's Medical Adviser, on the contrary, is placed within the pecuniary reach of all classes by the author, who adopts the plan of the Grangers, dispensing with middle men and giving the benefit of their profits to the people, offering his book at a price little above actual cost of publication. That those desiring the book may run no risk of losing their money in sending it through the mails, the author advertises that money addressed to him at Buffalo, N. Y., and inclosed in registered letters, may be at his risk of loss. The author's large correspondence with the people upon medical matters, which we are credibly informed frequently exceeds three hundred letters a day, and requires several trained and skillful medical assistants and short-hand reporters to enable him to entertain and answer them, as well as his large daily dealings with disease at the World's Dispensary, appear to have peculiarly fitted him for writing the Work, by rendering him very familiar with the every day medical needs of the people. He endeavors in this Work to answer all the numerous questions relating to health and disease that have been addressed to him by the people from all parts of the land, and hence it contains important information for the young and old, male and female, single and married, nowhere else to be found. All the most prevalent diseases of both sexes are also plainly and fully considered, and means of self-cure made known. Unlike other works on Domestic Medicine, it includes the subjects of Biology, Cerebral Physiology, Hygiene, Temperaments, Marriage, Reproduction, etc., all of which are treated in an original and interesting manner. It is a compendium of Anatomical, Physiological and Medical Science, and embodies the latest discoveries in each department.

A Remarkable Book.

In 1868 P. T. Barnum wrote his Autobiography for Burr & Co., the celebrated publishers in Hartford, Conn., for which they paid him $15,000. It made a book of 800 pages, was profusely illustrated, gave a particular account of Barnum's eventful life in all parts of the world, and included his celebrated lecture on "The Art of Money Getting." Horace Greeley pronounced the book "worth a hundred dollar greenback to many a beginner in life." The publishers sold 90,000 copies of the book by subscription, at three dollars and a half a copy. In 1871, when Mr. Barnum started his great traveling shows, he bought back the copyright and stereotype plates of his book for $10,000, added an Appendix bringing the account of his life up to that date, printed an edition of 100,000 copies, sent them with his traveling shows, and sold the whole of them at cost, one dollar each. He has added an Appendix each year, which has now increased the volume to a thousand pages. It averages a sale of 100,000 copies each year. They are neatly bound in muslin, gilt, and sold in all his traveling shows. As his patrons emerge from his great show tent with his books under their arm, they look as if coming from a circulating library! No book in this country ever had such an enormous sale, or so abounds in curious incidents of real life and valuable experiences.—Buffalo Courier.

THE ELASTIC TRUSS AND SUPPORTER is now superseding all others, being adopted everywhere by the leading physicians, surgeons, druggists, army and navy, hospitals, gymnasiums, etc., etc. The success and universal satisfaction they have given, as well as the great number of radical cures they have effected, has demonstrated the fact that rupture can be surely cured without suffering or annoyance, and without the danger of incurring Spinal Disease or Paralysis, often caused by the severe pressure of Metal Trusses and Supporters. It is the only sure cure for Hernia, as it is the only Truss in use that will hold the rupture securely in all positions in which the body can be placed. It will perform radical cures when all others fail. It can be worn with ease and comfort when no spring truss can be used. When once adjusted, no motion of the body or accident can displace it. These instruments have the unqualified approval of the most eminent practitioners in the profession. From the numerous testimonials in our possession we append the following: "After the experience of months, patients testify strongly to its efficacy, as well as to the ease and freedom from inconvenience with which the instrument is worn. With superior advantages, the Elastic Truss possesses in a high degree ALL requisites and qualifications claimed for other inventions. I have no hesitation in regarding it as an important means for the relief and cure of Hernia." J. M. CARNOCHAN, M. D., "Ex-Health Officer of the Port of New York, Surgeon in-Chief of New York State Hospital," etc., etc. GEO. V. HOUSE, M.D., Superintendent Elastic Truss Co.: Dear Sir: After suffering for thirty years, in my own person, from the use of every form of Metallic Truss procurable in this country and in Europe, I, two years ago, applied your Elastic Truss, and since that time I have experienced comfort and satisfaction, and been taught the truth, that the Elastic Truss is the only instrument that should be used for the relief and cure of Hernia; and now, after more than thirty years' continuous practice, and having adjusted many hundreds of Trusses (and for the last twenty months yours exclusively), I gratefully declare it to be my deliberate opinion that your Elastic Truss is the only one entitled to the confidence of the public; that elasticity is the only power at all adapted to the requirements of a Truss or Supporter, and am convinced that your Elastic Truss actually cures a large proportion of all cases to which it is applied, not only among children, but in numerous cases within my own knowledge of patients from 50 to 75 years of age. H. BURNHAM, M. D., Prof. of Anatomy and Surgery, N. Y. E. Medical College. Beware of cheap and worthless imitation Elastic Trusses, which some parties advertise and sell, fraudulently representing that they are manufactured by the Elastic Truss Co. These Trusses are sent by mail to all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed in all cases. Before purchasing any other, write for Descriptive Circular (free) to the ELASTIC TRUSS CO. 683 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

VINEGAR BITTERS. DR. J. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS. PURELY VEGETABLE. FREE FROM ALCOHOL. EUREKA.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Granger Headquarters!

NO MIDDLE MEN with us; this is the secret of our immense trade. We buy at first hands and sell direct to the consumer; hence, we save our customers the profits of the speculator, jobber and wholesale merchants. These profits amount to from 10 to 20 per cent. Our customers get the benefit of them. Take Teas, for instance, the profits on that article are so great that the price is often doubled before it reaches the consumer. Every time it changes hands there is 10 to 20c. per pound added to it. This, of course, the consumer has to pay. Of course the retailer will endeavor to persuade you that his Teas are werth the money, that they cost him so and so. Well, this is all true, but the trouble is he has paid too much in the first place and can't help himself. He purchases from the wholesale grocer, and the wholesale grocer has to add his 20c. All these extra profits our customers get the benefit of, and it is just the same as Coffees, Sugars, Spices, Canned Goods, Oysters, &c., as on Teas. No Middle Men with us. They would starve to death if they had to live on the profits they make of us.

For my part I don't approve of any one purchasing them that can do without them, but it is an admitted fact that there is more money used in the United States for Liquors than for Flour, and for the benefit of those who wish to indulge in the luxury, we will guarantee them a saving of at least 50c on the dollar, and for the sick and invalid our wines and old '76 whiskey cannot be beat.

Letter from the South.

New Orleans, La.,
April 16th, 1875.

To the Editor of The Courier.

Owing to my feeble state of health, I have not earlier complied with the request you made of me on your visit here last month, to give you the result of my inquiries and observations in and on the status of internal affairs in this city, and State, and on other matters—but now feeling a partial ability to comply, and the organization of the General Assembly of Louisiana in this city on the 14th inst., in extraordinary session, under the Wheeler adjustment, or "award" made by the Congressional Committee which sat in New York, being of National interest, I make an effort to comply. In the first place I am constrained to say, that the State of Louisiana is unlike any other State of the Union: anomolous in her varied natural advantages of climate, soil and products—anomolous in her prolific antagonisms of race, sectional falacies and disorders, and anomolous in her diversities of race, language and religion. Here in New Orleans religion, as professed by the two opposing creeds, separates the adherents as unmistakably as it did on the continent of Europe two hundred years ago; and that part of the city (the old) below Canal street, impresses the stranger as he walks its narrow streets, (forty feet from house), sees the quaint signs of business, and strange architecture; hears a diversity of language; sees white, black, creoles, mulattoes, quadroons, octoroons, "griffs," French, Spaniard, Mexicans, Italians, Cubans, English, Irish, Scandinavians and Germans. I say these things impresses him with a feeling that he is in a foreign land; and when he goes thro' that part on Sunday, and sees the saloons open, auctioneers hawking their wares, smith's forges blazing, cock-pits full of people witnessing that relic of barbarism, cock-fighting—the French markets four in number—anomolous, great, comprehensive busy, etc., with their flesh, fruits, flowers, fish, poultry, reptiles, dry goods, finance, hardware, crockery and china, hats, caps, boots, shoes, carpets wooden-ware, fancy goods toilets, confections, stationery, news, literature, periodicals, cafes, "et id omnus genus," with several thousand people attendant, diversified in color and distinguished by race and dialect—these things impress the stranger with a feeling like that inspired in reading of the condition of things on the Asiatic and European continents in the dawn of the christian era before the Sunday or Lord's day was set apart as a day of rest and worship, and banish for the time the consciousness that he is in a land where modern civilization and science has broken the restraint which religion so long imposed on them and which inspired moral responsibility,—emasculated the vigor of mind and instigated broils with civil power. On the upper side of Canal street everything is changed—the stranger wakes up in America. The sun shines seemingly with warmer rays in wider streets, and a new people greets him. They have a Lord's Day up there too, in some parts, and some regard it religously. Louisana from the date of her colonization by France in 1699 to 1769, when it was delivered over to Spain and afterwards back to France, and in 1803 delivered over to the United States, has been checked in her prosperity and the impress then so early given has had a fatal influence over her destinies ever since. Those who first settled here never considered that they had found a home, all the military officers and others employed by the government had only one object in view—to obtain promotion and to make money by fair or foul means in order to return with increased honors and ampler means to their native country—the beautiful France. Of the non-officials, many had been transported by force, and looked on the new country as a prison. Others were deceived in their hopes by exaggerated representation and were disappointed, and only labored to get money to go back. Louisiana was no home, had no associations, no past to the Frenchman. That thing always injured her—and now since the late civil war so many carpet-baggers quarter-masters, captains, lieutenants, colonels, camp-followers have been left in the south, who pay no taxes, own no property, have no homes, no interests in common with the people here, and who are either federal officers or subordinates, or have found their way in public places by fraud or misrepresentations, etc, without qualification, that Louisianians, under such men, and sustained and supported by federal military power as the latter are; rent asunder in feelings of love for the country, and the wing of their spirit so broken by the rule of those who are parasites, are to-day objects of our pity, and that they will turn and sting, is because not yet has all manhood been ground out of them. The wonder is, not that they have resisted the oppression, but that it has not been more determined, and when the fog and smoke of the war shall have cleared away, and right reason have prevailed over partisan prejudice—then the impartial historian will record the facts, and a dispassionate people then believe the ocean of wrongs which a tyrannical political party, has by federal arms imposed on the people of Louisiana. The ravages of the civil war laid their agriculture low as the hurricane does the golden harvest. Their labor, the slaves, were taken from them and clothed with a power to make the planter a subordinate; and this power directed by a adventurers whom the war had left as the sea its debris, elevated these adventurers to office, and the exchequer of the State was replenished by exhorbitant taxes, but to be embezzled by those who contribute nothing to its support and who besides this have created a State debt now nearing twenty-four millions, and a municipal debt hanging over the city of New Orleans quite as great—the interest on which, including the expenses of the city government, cost of paving, repairing and lighting the streets, "involve," says Gov. Kellogg in his message of yesterday, "an annual outlay larger than any revenue the city is practically able to collect." This debt is on an assessed valuation of property in New Orleans, the total of which is some less than half of the total valuation of the whole State The people of the city cannot pay it; and of the State taxes heretofore levied over $4,000,000 is delinquent and unpaid The population of the State is about 700,000, that of New Orleans 200,000 inhabitants. From the ravages of war, the plunder of officials, and the incalculable loss to planters by the great flood of 1875 and the general feeling of insecurity to property and in business matters arising out of the military domination which has been kept up here by the federal government, the city of New Orleans is a very metropolitan paralytic. Her river and marine commerce are waned to a minimum. Her domestic trade and improvements, and her mechanical industries are but a mere approximation to their former greatness. Thousands of houses are untenanted all over the city, and every square has its many cards, "For Rent," and thousands who once would have scorned it are letting "rooms furnished" and others advertising "Boarders Wanted," just to make something to live on. Planters rely little on negro labor; and from Tennessee to the north of the Mississppi river goes out but complain of the thieving propensities, of the blacks who sleep by day and plunder by night, and as a distinguished gentleman of the State of Arkansas lately a Republican member of the Senate of that State said to me yesterday in frankness 'Our work of philanthropy was well performed in effecting the abolition of slavery, but after all our expectations are not realized, the negro of this generation is little benefited. He is irreliable and irresponsible; and as an element in politics he is used more by Charlatans to carry out base schemes, than by good men to prosper the welfare of the good people."

To give the readers of the COURIER some idea of what it costs to carry on the city government of New Orleans I offered a statement made by a contributor to the New Orleans "Times" in that paper of this date: Let us compare the costs of city officials in St. Louis with those in New Orleans, and the people will see how they are robbed. The population and wealth of St. Louis is more than twice as great as New Orleans.

This police force is a military body created by a Republican Legislat'e some time ago to keep the Democartic City Council from making and controlling it and is called the Metropolitan Police, paid by the city, but in no way amenable to the city council, and is of the dead beat kind. The democrats however are not without much blame in their management of the city—wrong being now an epidemic.

It may be well to say something more concerning this Metropolitan Police, now a military force of over 400. Prior to 1868 the police of the city had been used for questionable purposes by men who, in the distracted state of social and political affairs, exceeded the bounds of right reason, and to prevent a recurrence of such things, the Legislature of that year took the creative power out of the hands of the City Council, of New Orleans, and gave it into the hands of a Commissioner to be appointed by the Governor. This Commissioner appoints the police, and holds them responsible for their good conduct. It is not fair to condemn the system entirely, but since there, perhaps, no longer exists the reason for its being in the hands of the Gov who may also use it for political ends, and since it is so very expensive it is thought well to relegate the subject matter to the City Council, to be re-organized, reformed and lessened in number and expense according to the wants of the citizens, who pay the expense and who are to be protected by such police force.

THE LEGISLATURE.

Early in March last I visited the Hahn Legislature—that is the House of Representatives—composed mostly of negroes, the same which federal soldiers organized by unseating Wiltz, the Democrat Speaker, and several white members, so as to give it a Republican majority, and in which conservative members refused to sit. It was a boisterous and ill-governed body, and I only saw 7 or 8 white members on the floor, the others were negroes who did nearly all the talking, such as it was. I visited the same on its assembling in extraordinary session on the 16th inst. Hahn, the white speaker in the chair, Vigers, Clerk and the other officials black. Twenty-six conservatives who stood out before, came in and took the oath and were seated. The 13 contested seats and which were awarded by the adjusting committee of Congress were referred to the committee on elections and qualifications. That Committee reported in their favor on Thursday and they, twelve whites and one negro were reported entitled to their seats. The report having been concured in, 13 were sworn in, and the old 13, mostly negroes, withdrew and gave place to their successors. Thus the house was organized yesterday with 109 members, 110 being the quota, but one, a black, had been expelled. Of these 26 are blacks of various shades—83 whites. The Senate is presided over by Leut. Gov. Antoine, a negro of pure blood, a native, a Creole, and most of the officers are black. This body is composed of 36 members of whom 16 are blacks, and presents itself as to intelligence in no favorable light. The House is Democratic, the Senate Republican.

In the House, after its organization with the 13 members under the award had been effected, the following resolution was offered:

"RESOLVED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF LOUISIANA, That said Assembly, without approving the same, will not disturb the present State government, claiming to have been elected in 1872, known as the Kellogg government, or seek to impeach the Governor for any past official acts, and that henceforth it will accord to said Government all necessary and legitimate support in maintaining the laws and in advancing the peace and prosperity of this State, and that the House of Representatives as to its members, as constituted under the award of Geo. F. Hoar, Wm. A. Wheeler, W. W. Phelps, Clarkson N. Potter, Wm. P. Frye and Sam'l. S. Marshall, shall remain without change except by resignation or death of members until a new general election; and the Senate as herein recognized shall also remain unchanged, except so far as that body may itself make changes on contests."

This was a bitter pill to the Republicans because it recognized 19 Democratic members, and to the Democrats because it recognized Kellogg, the usurper put in office by Judge Durrell and maintained, fully maintained, by the President of the U. S. committed then to uphold Kellogg and pledged them not to impeach him nor to disturb any of the offices of the State government. However, after much talking, farce-making and shoulder-shrugging, the resolution went through its various readings, was put on its passage and carried, yeas 89, noes 18—two out, not voting, the rest were compelled to vote and without explanation, and with a view of giving the subject a final rest—a motion was then made to re-consider, and this motion laid on the table so it cannot be called up again. The "adjustment" is proper and the conservatives had to accept it or do worse. The arm of federal power was raised over them and the sword in hand, federal gun boats were at anchor in the river off the city, and their morning and evening guns told the stranger that they were ready for use to subjugate a free people and subordinate them to usurpation and fraud in case they dared take up arms to end evils almost unbearable. Had the conservative party of this State and of the South accepted when adopted, the late amendments to the constitution of the U. S., as things adjudicated and which they could not successfully countervail, they would have killed the Radical party with the self same poison that it prepared for them and thus strife, woe and misery had been avoided, but resistance and reluctance afford a pretext for federal interference and that suffices to keep it up until now, and was and is just the stock in trade the administration wanted, and which has been used to keep a footing in all the south for purposes if the presidential election of 1876. However, the shape that affairs are now in, and with tempers on both sides softened by time, necessity and experience, the people hope for better times, and it may be they will be gratified. To an extent they will be, and at the next general election be able to elect and inaugurate men of their own choice. This state is so far away from the north—the field so rich in spoils, that adventurers love it; and the federal administration knowing how well all stories of outrages on the negro can be supplemented on paper to appear as unmitigated and diabolical, and how the testimony of witnesses can be manufactured and magnified before investigating committees organized to confirm canards is quick to avail itself of opportunities to crush out any true expression of the people—foster false election returns, sustain usurpers in places of trust and honor and in a word, by force of bayonets, maintain a government in which the majority have had no controlling voice. The American colonies, before war of the revolution had not a tithe of the cause for complaint against the Northern country, that these people have to complain of federal military domination over state sovereignty.

In the House of Reps. to-day Mr. Estilette, of St. Landry, Paris, was elected speaker. The Republicans united on him against Wiltz and their vote with some conservatives elected him by a handsome majority. He is conceded to be an excellent choice—a conservative of old whig, antecedents. Pinchback, who was elected U. S. Senator by the Legislature, this State two years ago, but who has not as yet been admitted to a seat, will, I think, be admitted next December, the concession, which the conservatives made in recogizing the Kellog government, will be used then in the Senate as an answer to the objections which till this time have kept him out of his seat. The "adjustment" will prove to have consequences not contemplated by the conservatives. The General Assembly cannot elect a Senator now, for Pinchback holds a certificate of election under the same Kellog government, hence there is no vacancy and therefore can be no election till a vacancy shall transpire.

CONFLICT OF RACES.

The conflict between the races cannot be arrested; it may be tempered to a condition wherein violence will not be used except when aggression on the part of the blacks shall become unbearable, but the dignity of the white race will assert itself at all times, and the negro, by force of that sentiment higher and mightier than the arms of law, will have to take his place in subordination to that sentiment. Laws may define the civil rights of the negro, and courts enforce remedies for violations of this, but no law will be efficacious which impinges the domain of social intercourse and polity and attempts to make a white man minimize his race to the standard of negro equality. The negro will not be allowed to elevate himself by lowering the white man. He must rise by merit and be satisfied to abide distinctions which society imposes in his case, as in cases where the aristocracy of mind and money makes insuperable distinct in the societies of white people, and to which inexorability they must ever yield, and no legislation can ever help them. Enough of politics, at least enough for this time and for me who for many years have taken no part in such.

It may be regarded as true in social and political disorders as it is philosophy that no matter how much the various social forces of a country may be disturbed, they will, if left to themselves, "in a certain tolerable manner, settle down equilibrium," just as water will find its common level. And as the true independence of a State depends on the regulation of its own internal affairs, in its own way, it will promptly re-act against the influence of any power not having its seat within its own territorial limits, and this re-action will prolong, discord and commotion as long as that foreign influence shall be excited. Therefore, in this view, I assert, that true policy and statesmanship concur in demanding no further congressional legislation as to the civil rights of the colored race, south and north. Let the equilibrium come "sua motu," that is, inspired by sentiments peculiar to those who are living in the disturbed States, by concessions which each party may make for the greater good of the whole.

The season is backward, warm days and cool nights and much rain, gardens blossomed and flowered, weeks ago, and the city has been redolent therefrom—shade trees and forests are attired in their purest green, strawberries have been in market for several weeks and now delicious dewberries, but the price 80c per quart, for the former and but little less for the latter. Cotton and cane are late. Corn is up and out and a greater crop is put in than ever before. The river is high, many crevasses are letting in water, but no danger is now feared.

Having fully complied with request, I hope this will prove satisfactory to you and the readers of the COURIER.

THE OLD HOMESTEAD.

One day in the early autumn
Of a bright and happy year,
I wandered away to the homestead,
To the homestead old and dear;
[illegible]
A ruin, with moss o'ergrown,
With the door on broken hinges,
And falling chimney stone.

As I wander'd around and around it,
And in, through each dusty room,
With only the lonely echoes
Of my feet a-through the gloom,
I thought how they sometimes told us
That away from the shining shore,
The dead come back in the silence
To the homes they have loved before.

And I said, does he—the master,
The father, who loved so well
The homestead amid the meadows,
The brook in the winding dell—
Does he ever come in the silence
Of the night's clear, starry hours,
With his voice of silvery laughter
Through the tangled weeds and flowers?

Does he come, I asked, in the twilight—
Does he come to the open door,
And sit in the peach-tree's shadow
As he sat in the days of Yore?
And over the foot-worn pathway
Does he go to the wicket gate,
And stand and wait for the children
As he used to stand and wait?

Does he look adown the roadside,
And under the shadowy oaks,
And hear the lake-waves murmur,
And the oarsman's gentle strokes,
'Till he sees the children's faces
So bright, and young, and fair,
With the moonlight's golden brightness
On the black and the auburn hair?

And when, with their gleeful singing,
They follow him through the gate,
To the hearthstone, where the mother
Doth patiently watch and wait—
Does he—as he used to say it—
With a face so cheery and bright,
"Bless God, oh mother, our darlings,
Our children are safe to-night!"

Is it thus that he sees he homestead,
In the beauty of early years?
Or it's mildew, and blight, and ruin,
And the children's struggles and tears?
Does he come in the purple gloaming,
And wander through chamber and hall,
And yearn for the dear old faces,
and the love that brightened all?

MARK SHELTON'S WIFE.

One cold morning in December, Mark Shelton, Esq., and his wife sat down to breakfast in one of the coziest of dining-rooms; Mark with a cloud on his usually pleasant face, and his wife's placid countenance wearing a puzzled and sorrowful look, for when had he been angry with her before?

He had scarcely spoken to her the previous evening, and he looked sullen and gloomy still. What had she done? She had pondered the thought over and over, yet she had not dared to ask him.

The morning sunlight streamed into the room as they silently drank their coffee and abstractedly nibbled their muffins; and broad stripes of yellow gold lay on the sea-green ground of the carpet, mingling softly with the bright tints of the autumn leaves that sprinkled it; and lighting up the pictures on the varnished walls, until they stood out vivified into life-like perfection in the mellow light. The fire burned cheerfully in the polished grate; the canary chirruped blithely in his gilded cage, while the trailing vines that festooned the recesses of every window turned each delicate tendril to the warm sunlight, as if thankful for the warmth and comfort and hallowed glow that filled that pleasant room.

Mr. Shelton finished his breakfast and took up his morning paper. Mrs. Shelton, a pale little woman, whose chief beauty lay in her eyes, which were so blue and trustful one could not help loving their owner, watched his moody face uneasily. Her smooth, purplish black hair was coiled up in a loose, double twist, with here and there a tiny curl peeping out, giving her a girlish look that Mark had often admired. Her morning dress was navy blue cashmere, with snowy lace at the throat and wrists, and simply elegance itself; and, better than all, was the work of the slim fingers that were nervously twirling the silver teaspoon in her dainty coffee cup.

But Mark was too much engrossed in his own moody thoughts to find any interest in wife or paper, for, after a vain attempt at reading, he laid the latter down, and sat silently staring into the fire.

"Mark," burst out his wife, who felt as if she were under the influence of a night-mare, "what on earth is the matter with you?"

And Mark answered her with that sensible masculine evasion, "Nothing."

"I know there is something wrong somewhere," went on Mrs. Shelton, desperately. "Are you angry with me, Mark?"

"No, Alice, I'm not angry with you."

"Then tell me your trouble. I never saw you so depressed before, and we are married five years to-day, Mark."

"Bless me! So we are! I had entirely forgotten it." Mr. Shelton looked up for the first time, and glanced across the table at the little woman in blue, whose cheeks had lost the peachy bloom they had worn that day five years ago. But the dear face was as fresh as ever in his partial eyes, and his heart ached more for her than himself, for he knew she would suffer keenly in the crisis he was dreading so much. "If the children had been spared to us," he said, mentally, thinking of the two little graves in Greenwood, "they would have been a comfort to her." But he kept his thoughts to himself, and said, instead:

"Will you attend Mrs. Austin's party, Alice?"

"On the 20th? Yes." The uneasy light left Alice Shelton's loving eyes, for, since he was not angry with her, she did not care to pry into his secrets. And yet if he only would confide in her, she would feel so relieved. "Will you go, Mark?"

"I think not." A curious smile parted his lips.

"Why?" in a tone of surprise.

"I shall be otherwise engaged."

"Nonsense, Mark. You must not be such a slave to business. Few men are as prosperous in the world."

"I have been prosperous," dreamily, "but"——he never finished the sentence.

"And the panic never affected you in the least," innocently remarked Mrs. Shelton, who knew as much about the subtle workings of the financial world as she did about the mythical inhabitants of the moon.

Mr. Shelton jumped up, slightly flushed in the face.

"What idiots women are!" was the complimentary exclamation that met his wife's ears, as he went hurriedly from the room, heedless of her excited Mark——"

But Mark was out in the cold, sunlit street, before the little woman had recovered from her astonishment; his white, even teeth clenched tightly together, as he hurried down to the dim, musty office, where so many arduous duties demanded his attention.

Many of his business friends who met or passed him on the streets looked curiously at his down cast face; for his mind was too much preoccupied to take any interest in passing occurrences. He heard nothing, saw nothing but the blue, numb hands of the street beggars, who seemed to beset his path every few rods, for his characteristic charity was well known, and few were the palms that did not close on the coveted penny.

For Mark was a good man, humane, charitable and generous in all things, and until a year back the world had gone well with him. But the panic swamped dozens of his debtors; his business was dead in a financial sense; and his creditors were clamorous for bills he could not meet. He had never been careless, unwise or extravagant in filling or discharging contracts, and his business difficulties had come upon him so swiftly and imperceptibly that the blow fell heavier than if he had been expecting some such catastrophe.

But Alice Shelton knew nothing of all this. The mental turmoil going on in her husband's breast never found vent in a dissatisfied word or look, and until the previous day he had kept his face and manner free from all traces of anxiety. But the constant excitement and worry had been too hard for him, and the dunning of a creditor, who demanded the punctual payment of a note of $4,000 that fell due on the 21st of December, together with other unforeseen debts, had so upset him that he could not cover his mental distress with the mask of carelessness he had worn for weeks past.

His greatest trouble was for Alice. Never very strong—and he had often underrated her strength—he had endeavored to surround her with every comfort and had carefully kept all harrassing business details or cares from her ears. He had given her money without stint, and he supposed she spent it like other women, for she was always well dressed, and his home was a model of order and good taste. Be that as it may, he never thought of tracing the cause of his failure to home extravagance. For no woman was more thoroughly economical, without being miserly, than Mrs. Shelton. Her party toilets were always in exceptional taste, and her dress for Mrs. Austin's party was not designed for any unusual display of elegance, although the gathering was to be one of unusual brilliancy.

The night of the 20th came—a dark, stormy December night, the air filled with snowflakes and the sky gray and overcast with heavy clouds.

"It is going to be a terrible night, Mark," Mrs. Shelton said to her husband, who sat before the library fire, evidently absorbed in the contents of the evening paper. "I have thought once or twice since I commenced dressing that I would not go out to-night."

"Go, by all means, Alice; the carriage is close," her husband replied, glancing up at the trim little figure arrayed in a dark silk, retrimmed, with a pale blush rose in her purplish-black hair, and at the white throat, half-veiled with a flimsy lace. He smiled bitterly as he saw her going out in her happy, child-like innocence, as she might never go again, among people who had no sympathy for failing merchants, and who would not give his wife a thought if she were not rich in the world's goods.

"I wish you would go," she said, beseechingly, lingering at the door to adjust her cloak, "Mr. Austin will be expecting you."

Mr. Shelton smiled, thinking, perhaps, of the forbidding face of a man of whom he had begged a loan that afternoon, whose curt "cannot spare a dollar, sir," rang in his ears yet. He arose from his seat by the fire, and going over to his wife's side, fastened the warm wraps closer about her throat.

"Be careful of yourself, little woman," he said with a forced attempt at gayety, "and enjoy yourself, for it is utterly impossible for me to go."

He accompanied her to the carriage, and as he closed the door on the placid little face he inwardly anathematized the weakness that prompted him to withhold the story of his difficulties from her, when she daily ran the risk of hearing it from lips less liable to soften its details. Yet he still hoped that the morrow would bring some chance of redeeming his lost credit; although his efforts to raise the $4,000 due on the 21st were still unsuccessful. He was almost worn out with physical and mental labor, yet he put on his hat and overcoat, and dragged wearily down town through the fast-falling snow and murky darkness, to spend the dreary hours of his wife's absence, poring over ledgers in his counting-room.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Mark Shelton, not quite satisfied with Mark's "strange freak," as she called her husband's refusal to attend the party, was zealously trying to feel at ease among Mrs. Austin's stylish guests. For, somehow, she felt depressed and ill at ease among the fashionables who had hitherto welcomed her as the wife of a prominent young merchant who was steadily rising to eminence in the commercial world. There was an undercurrent of coldness in their greeting that her sensitive nature detected instantly, and an angry flush rose to her cheek when she overheard a remark relating to "Mrs. Shelton's old silk."

"I suppose my dress is not up to their standard in point of elegance," she muttered, bitterly; "but I'll never ruin Mark with my extravagance in dress—never!"

She slipped out of the gay, overcrowded parlors into the library, where she found refuge behind the heavy hangings of a bay window. She dropped into a low seat, and sat watching the streams of gas-light flickering across the street, now ankle deep with snow, wishing that Mark would remember her orders and send the carriage early. The heavy sensuous odors of tropical plants filled the room with a fragrance that almost took her breath away, and in the distance the music of a popular waltz rose and fell, the soft, voluptuous cadences soothing her disturbed mind into a calmness that was soon broken by the entrance of two ladies, whose first words chained Mrs. Shelton to her seat, and held her in the questionable light of an eaves-dropper.

"I was astonished to see Mrs. Mark Shelton out to-night," exclaimed the elder of the two ladies, whose diamonds flashed in the gas-light.

"Why?"

"Have you not heard? Why, Mrs. Lamer! Shelton is on the verge of bankruptcy."

"Mark Shelton? Impossible! Why, he is considered one of the staunchest merchants in the city."

"He was. But he has lost credit somehow. He has been on the streets for days trying to raise money to cancel most of his urgent debts; and I wouldn't be surprised if his wife did have to give up her stylish home before the winter is over."

"She is a nobody anyway. Her father was only a soap chandler and I have often wondered at Mark Shelton's taste in choosing her for a wife," remarked Mrs. Lamer, who had once a decided fancy for Mark, herself.

"Soap chandlers are as good as other men, provided they are sober and respectable," returned the lady with the diamonds, whose father had once been a peanut vender. while Mrs. Lamer's ancestors were famous for blue blood and reckless dissipation.

"I don't pity Mrs. Shelton, though," went on Mrs. Lamer, politely ignoring the elder lady's home thrust; "for I expect she is just like other women in the same situation; Mark made oceans of money, and she spent it."

"Doubtless. Just give any woman that never had anything some money to splurge on, and see how fast she'll go through it," laughed the elder lady, as she glided out of the library, her rich silks sweeping after her like purple billows, while Mrs. Lamer followed her like a shadow, in her pale tarletan robes.

Poor Alice Shelton had heard every word, and sat perfectly still, with her slim, white fingers clasped tightly together. Every faculty of her nature seemed paralyzed by the intensity of her emotions. Her honest, conscientious heart was shocked at the hypocrisy of two of her most intimate society friends, and with the bitterness was mingled a feeling of intense pity for Mark, who had kept all this from her ears that she might hear it from so uncharitable lips. Verily, she thought, the world is a vain show, and those who love it but moths, fluttering about its dazzling pleasures, only to have their wings singed by the cruel tongues of flame that leap up from envy, malice and deceit.

"Mark shall not fail," she said, rising up, with a white, determined face. "I will show them his wife is worthy of him."

Heedless of the gayety and warmth around her, of the blinding snow-storm that was raging without, or the long, snow-bound walk that lay between the Austin mansion and her husband's warehouse, she hurried up to the dressing-room, and, wrapping herself up in cloak and furs, went out into the storm and bravely faced the blinding sheets of snow that the wind dashed into her face—a face almost as ghastly as the snow that fell so swiftly and silently on the half-deserted pavements. The gas flared out through murky gas lamps with a dull, sickly glare; hacks and carriages went whirling by like sheeted ghosts, and once in a while some belated pedestrian almost walked over her; but still Mrs. Shelton walked on, her heart too hard and anxious to think of fear or fatigue.

When she reached the warehouse the clock on a distant steeple was just chiming 11, and Mark was standing in the dimly-lit office, putting on his overcoat. The porter dozed in a chair before the stove in the outer room, and Alice stole softly past him and stood before her husband.

"Alice!"

His eyes dilated in astonishment. Alice dropped into a seat and looked up at him with a glitter in her blue eyes that held him spellbound.

"Mark, do you think I'm a fool?"

Her voice had a raspy ring that startled Mark. He glanced at her snow-covered wraps, and then made a dash for the soaked boots peeping out from under the edge of her bedraggled silken skirts.

"Alice?"—one boot came off with a jerk—"what insane whim drove you out on the streets such a night as this?"—he flung its mate to the furthest end of the room.

"O Mark," Mrs. Shelton's temporary strength and courage was swiftly vanishing, "are you going to fail?"

Mark instantly comprehended the situation. She had heard the story of his financial troubles, probably in some distorted form, and the knowledge had almost crazed her. He blamed himself severely for keeping her in ignorance of the truth. He always had a repugnance to womanly interference in business matters, but felt, in justice to his wife's general worthiness, he should have trusted her in this emergency.

"Hush, Alice!"—for she was beginning to sob hysterically—"you must not be alarmed. If I can raise the money to pay off a note that falls due to-morrow, I may weather the panic yet."

"How much will you need?"

Her little face was uplifted eagerly.

"Four thousand dollars."

"Is that all?" with a little hysterical laugh. "Then you won't fail; for I have five thousand, all my own, saved out of the money you gave me to spend on the house and myself. Ah, Mark, you thought I spent it!"

"Alice!"—Mark took the little shivering form in his arms—"you are worth your weight in gold!"

"I know it," slyly retorted Alice; "but it has taken you five years to find it out. And, Mark, if you cannot cancel the rest of your debt, we'll sell the house and furniture and live in a room or two until the panic is over; for you shall not fail."

Mark sent for a carriage, and they went home through the white, noiseless streets, Alice recounting, as she went, the story she heard in Mr. Austin's perfumed library. At its conclusion she said:

"It was cruel of you to keep me in the dark so long, Mark. And never, never treat me like a fool or a child again. For if I am a soap-chandler's daughter, I have sense, and feeling, and judgment, and discretion enough to save something for 'rainy days.'"

It is needless to say that Mark redeemed his note, to the chagrin of some of his business rivals, who had secretly gloated over his difficulties; and, although his affection for his wife was never demonstrative, the care he took of her was wonderful, for he found that the price of a good wife is "above rubies."

The History of Zero.

"Zero," on the common thermometer, like the fanciful names of the constellations, is a curious instance of the way wise men's errors are made immortal by becoming popular. It may be worth while to say that the word itself (zero) comes to us through the Spanish from the Arabic, and means empty, hence nothing. In expressions like "90 deg. Fahr.," the abbreviation, Fahr., stands for Fahrenheit, a Prussian merchant of Dantzic, on the shores of the Baltic Sea. His full name was Gabriel Daniel Fahrenheit.

From a boy he was a close observer of nature, and when only nineteen years old, in the remarkably cold winter of 1709, he experimented by putting snow and salt together, and noticed that it produced a degree of cold equal to the coldest day of that year. As that day was the coldest that the oldest inhabitant could remember, Gabriel was the more struck with the coincidence of his little scientific discovery, and hastily concluded that he had found the lowest degree of temperature known in the world, either natural or artificial. He called that degree zero, and constructed a thermometer, or a rude weather glass, with a scale graduated up from the zero to a boiling-point, which he numbered 212, and the freezing-point thirty-two. Because, as he thought, mercury contracted the thirty-second of its volume on being cooled down from the temperature of freezing water to zero; and expanded 180th on being heated from the freezing to the boiling point.

Time showed that this arrangement, instead of being truly scientific, was as arbitrary as the division of the Bible into verses and chapters, and that these two points no more represented the real extremes of temperature, than "from Dan to Beersheba" expressed the exact extremes of Palestine.

But Farenheit's thermometer had been largely adopted, with its inconvenient scale; and none thought of any better until his name became an authority, for Fahrenheit finally abandoned trade and gave himself to science. Then habit made people cling to the established scale, as habit makes the English cling to their old system of cumbrous fractional money.

Our nation began to use Fahrenheit's thermometer about the middle of the last century, or not far from the time when Old Style was exchanged for New Style in the writing of dates.

The three countries which use Fahrenheit are Holland, England and America. Russia and Germany use Reaumer's thermometer, in which the boiling point is counted 80 degrees above freezing point. France uses the centigrade thermometer, so called because it marks the boiling point 100 degrees from freezing point.

On many accounts the centigrade system is the best, and the triumph of convenience will be attained, when zero is made the freezing point, and when the boiling point is put 100 or 1,000 degrees from it, and all the subdivisions are fixed decimally.

If Fahrenheit had done this at first, or even if he had made it one of his many improvements, after the public adopted his error, the luck of opportunity, which was really his, would have secured to his invention the patronage of the world.—North Christian Advocate.

How a Maine Printer Was Made a Man ot.

Several years ago, a slab-sided, awkward printer boy, from Maine, found his way to Washington in search of an "easy place." Tom Ewing was then Secretary of the Interior. He was also uncle of our gawky place-hunter. To him the youngster naturally applied for assistance in getting the desired situation.

This was the encouraging answer he received from Ewing.

"I will not get you a place in any of the departments. Moreover, if you find a place and go to work, I will use all my influence to have you dismissed. I am not going to have you made into a limp and helpless nonentity, if I can help it. I want you to get out of Washington. Go anywhere; go to the devil, if you like, you shan't stay in Washington."

This inspiriting counsel drove the printer youth back to Maine again.

Had Ewing found him the desired place, he would to-day be tying tape around bundled documents, or sticking official stamps on somebody else's letters, in one of the departments, an inert human routine machine. But the uncle's sensible brusqueness was the nephew's salvation. The name of that discouraged young applicant was James G. Blaine, present Speaker of the House of Representatives.—*Wash. Cor. Eggs a Healthy Food.—An English paper earnestly recommends an increased consumption of eggs as an important article of daily food. It asserts that this ingredient of diet is an unmistakable promoter of longevity, and that practical advocates of the system will live to be eighty or ninety years old. It gives a still higher incentive to a liberal consumption of eggs, for it advises their use for all those persons who are deficient in brains, as the phosphorous forming a large constituent in the egg will strengthen and develop the brain force. The same authority gives excellent advice as to the different ways in which this desirable article of food may be made palatable. Hard boiled eggs and brown bread and butter make excellent sandwiches; eggs spread on toast make an appetizing dish; and poached eggs, or those dropped from the shell into hot water, form a delicate morsel for an invalid.

A Terrific Problem.

A recent number of a scientific journal, speaking of the relative proportion of the sexes in the human race, declares that for every one hundred and fifty men that come into the world, one hundred and seventy-two one-hundredths (100 72-100) women are born. I do not dispute these figures. I only ask for light. It appears, according to this, that there are some women who are only seventy-two one-hundredths of a woman. What the remaining twenty-eight one-hundredths are I cannot imagine.

Now, what I want to know is this: If a woman of this kind marries a one-hundred man and has a daughter, will the daughter be an eighty-four one-hundredths woman, or a ninety-six one-hundredths woman? And what will be the exact relationship between such a daughter and a seventy-six one-hundredths aunt and her eighty-seven one-hundredths daughters, especially if the eighty-seven one-hundredth girls marry the brothers of the ninety-six one-hundred girl, and so become not only her ninety-eight one-hundredth first cousins, but also her ninety-five one-hundredth sisters-in-law, the aforesaid seventy-six one-hundredth aunt becoming also the eighty-nine one hundredths mother-in-law of her eighty-eight one-hundredth nephews, will the—the—. Let me see; where am I? It is an awful subject to grapple with. Oh yes! I say if the seventy-six one-hundredths aunt ——. But no. The question can't be solved in any such way as this. I give it up. The only way to get at it will be to do the sum in algebra somehow, making the daughter x, the aunt y, the first cousin a, and the mother-in-law b. Then, it seems to me, if you multiply the aunt by the daughter and divide the first cousin by the mother-in-law, in some way or other, or else extract the square root of the cousins and subtract the result from the aunt, keeping the daughter as a common denominator, and at the same time make a decimal fraction of the mother-in-law, perhaps the result might be satisfactory. But I am not certain. I am poor at mathematics. I wish the lightning-calculator would get at this, or that Professor Tyndall would subject it to chemical analysis.—Max Adeler.

Disgusted with Law.

Many a man who has lost a just suit in court will talk in strong terms about the uncertainty of law. But few have such a good reason for their distrust as Dr. Lyman Beecher. He used to tell the following incident with a flashing eye and strong emphasis, even in his old age:

He woke one night when a young man in college, and saw his clothes slowly disappearing through a broken pane in his window. His room was on the ground floor. Without hesitation he leaped from the bed, and opening the window, sprung out of it in his night-dress and gave chase. The frightened thief dropped the clothes, and thought only of escaping. But Beecher's blood was up, and he held on in the chase till he grabbed the thief by the collar. When the latter attempted to strike, he knocked him down and choked him till he begged for mercy. The thief then tried to get a knife out of his pocket, but Beecher took it away, and marched him back to college in triumph, and made him quiet on the floor till morning. Then he took him before a Justice, told the story with an honest pride at his own prowess, and waited to see the law do its duty. To his unspeakable disgust the Justice released the culprit because, in the chase, Beecher had lost sight of him once round a corner. Beecher was disgusted, and inclined to speak sarcastically of the technicalities of law after that experience.

A Man Without a Single Hair.

In the County House, at the present time, is a man who bears the name of George Greenwood, born in Malden, Mass., in 1826, where he resided for several years. He subsequently emigrated to Texas, where he followed the occupation of a herder, and afterward was a large stock-raiser. Greenwood is entirely hairless, not having a single hair about his head and body. He is even void of eyebrows and eyelashes. While in Texas he acquired a great fancy for athletics, and on leaving that State, traveled with Barnum, and afterward with Rice's circus. He at one time earned about $5,000 per annum. He was never married, but has lived a fast life. He failed in health some time ago, and was placed in the hospital at Albany, from which place he was removed to this city by a stranger and left at one of the Congress street hotels, and, owing to his being without friends, he was sent to the County House. No reason has been assigned by the medical fraternity as to the cause of his being entirely without hair.—Troy Budget.

Our Coal Territory.

The coal area of the United States is sectioned off in square miles about as follows: Illinois (largest of all) 36,000, or about two-thirds of the whole area; Missouri basin, 26,687; Iowa, 18,000; Kansas, 17,900; West Virginia section, 16,000; Ohio section, 10,000; East Kentucky section, 8,983; Pennsylvania section, 12,502; Pennsylvania anthracite, 472; New England basin, 500; Maryland section, 550; Tennessee, 5,100; Alabama, 5,330; Indiana, 6,440; West Kentucky, 9,888; Texas, 4,500; Michigan basin, 6,700; Nebraska, 3,000; Arkansas, 9,043; Virginia, 185, and North Carolina, 310. The great bulk of the general coal deposit is the common soft or bituminous coal the exception being the semi-bituminous, the anthracite and the cannel coal found largely in the Kanawha coal fields of West Virginia.—Illinois Journal.

By a table published in the New York Times it is shown that only seventeen per cent. of the inhabitants of that city are native born of native born parents—that is having two generations of American blood in their veins, while nearly eighty per cent. are foreigners and the children of foreigners. In the country at large these figures are almost reversed.

"And thus disgrace my race?
Know this, Miss Tab, I'm no such beast,
To share so grim and dark a feast!

"What suits my taste," Tray further said,
"Is beef—an honest slice—
Most any bird—a bit of bread,
Or anything that's nice.
I grieve to see that wretched rats
So long have been the food of cats!"

"Enough! enough! Oh, let us part,"
Said Tabby, moved to tears;
"I'm sure you'll break my bleeding heart,
With all your bitter sneers!
Or shall I scratch your ugly eyes?"
And here her spine began to rise.

"No, no," said Tray. "You eat the rat,
I'll go and seek a bone;

Rhode Island bristles with spelling matches. Some of the dictionary words reach clear across the State.

Success is said, by a Western sage, to greatly depend upon the possession of three qualities—grit, grip, and gumption.

Professor of rhetoric—"What important change came over Burns in the latter part of his life?" Senior—"He died."

A bright boy recently told his teacher there were three sects—the male sect, the female sect, and insects.

A Colorado tombstone remarks:

He was young,
He was fair,
But the Injuns
Raised his hair.

Mamma (to Freddy, who is learning his letters)—"Don't you know what that is, Freddy?" "Why that's A, apple-pie, isn't it, Cissy, dear?" Cissy—"Well, mamma, I should say an apple-pie if you asked me."

If one becomes somewhat discouraged upon general principles, he has only to compare his situation with its luxuries to the lot of those who lived a century ago, and then be thankful for the age in which he lives, replete with every imaginable device and invention to lighten labor.

English traveler—"As he got up two horse pistols dropped from his back pockets." Interlocutor—"But how could he find room for two horse pistols?" Third party—"O, he did not mean two horse pistols, exactly; he meant two Colt's pistols."

A poet sang: "I'm sitting sadly on the strand that stretches to the water's brink, and as the day slips slowly by I idly fold my hands and think." His ardent admirers did not know that, while he was sitting on the strand, with idle, folded hands, his family at home were in want.

"Boy," said a man at the postoffice yesterday to a stub-nosed boot-shiner, "if I buy ten apples and give you six, how many have I left?" "Oh, dry up!" replied the boy, turning away; "you'd chuck 'em all down into yer coat-tail pocket and let me buy my own."—Detroit Free Press

A youth and a pretty girl sat facing each other at a party. The youth, smitten with the charms of the maiden, only ventured a sly look, and now and then touched Patty's feet under the table. The girl, determined to make the youth express what he so warmly felt, bore with these advances a little while in silence, when she cried out, "Look here! if you love me, say so, but don't dirty my stockings."

Yesterday as an old citizen was nailing a "To Rent" card on a vacant house, a pedestrian halted and remarked that "howze" was not the right way to spell "house." "How long have you lived in Detroit?" asked the old citizen, scowling savagely. "Fifteen years," was the reply. "Well, I've lived here for thirty," continued the old man, "and I guess I know how to spell as well as you do!"—Detroit Free Press.

A plain-spoken preacher delivered the following from his desk: "I "I would announce to the congregation that, probably by mistake, there was left at the meeting-house this morning a small cotton umbrella, much damaged by time and wear, and of an exceedingly pale blue color, in place whereof was taken a very large black silk umbrella of great beauty. Blunders of this sort, my brethren, are getting a little too common."

A Funny Ice Adventure

Last Saturday a man residing near Cohoes was trying to move a large cake of ice which was on the point of being cast off on the road by the current in the river. He stepped upon the ice with the intention of breaking it, when it began to move off, taking him with it. The ice moved out into the center of the river and rapidly toward the dam. The man was in a fever of excitement, expecting his last moment to appear when he would reach the dam. The water being very high, the fall at the dam was unusually low, and the ice with the man on it passed over in safety, and drifted in the direction of the gas house. When nearing the gas house the ice landed on top of a little shanty which was nearly covered with water. The man got off the ice and stood on top of the house, but immediately fell through a skylight in the roof, falling on some girls who had gone to the top floor to escape the water. A scene immediately ensued, the girls roaring "Burglar!" and "Murder!" Their father appeared from the next room and an explanation followed.—Troy Press.

Another death, in consequence of the culpable manner in which narcotics are administered to children, occurred recently at Holloway in England. The child having been restless, the mother bought some sirup of poppies and gave it a spoonful. On the following morning the child was found to be unconsious and died shortly after. The doctor who made the post mortem examination pronounces the cause of death to be opium poisoning, and, in answer to a question, stated that laudanum was sometimes mixed with treacle as a substitute for spirit of poppies.

Fashion Notes.

Inexpensive collars have neck-ties to match.

There is a noticeable absence of lace on hats, this season.

The old-fashioned black and white checks are to be worn again.

Many basques are made without shoulder seams, and consequently have bias backs.

All the looping of over-dresses is in the back. The front must be perfectly straight and plain.

Most of the spring hats have three or four colors in the trimming, and these in [illegible]

Children's hats are mostly of chip and leghorn, and simplicity is the rule which guides their trimming.

The new summer fan is called the "Pistolet." It is shaped like a pistol, and "goes off" when opened.

Young ladies, from twelve to sixteen, who are in the habit of chewing gum, must be told the painful news that that practice is going out of fashion.

Some of the country hats are marvels of beauty and jauntiness. They have very wide brims turned up in front and dented at the sides, and are trimmed with scarfs of flowers.

Walking skirts consists of a front gore, a straight back breadth and two gores on each side. About half way down the skirt, on the second side seams, strings should be fastened, in order to tie the dress back, and make all the fullness come behind.

A very pretty every-day dress for a little girl of ten years is of brown plaid, made with overdress and basque. The underskirt is trimmed with a knife plaiting about eight inches wide, headed with a bias fold piped with red. The little round overskirt, looped on the side and in the back, has the same trimming made narrower. The basque has only the fold and piping around the bottom, and the sleeves have a plaiting eight inches wide, with a fold and piping running through the center. The arm-holes are also piped.

It may be well to suggest to young ladies who wish to have something quite pretty and dressy without much expense, that a sleeveless jacket of lace and muslin puffs or insertion is extremely pretty to wear over a black silk to an informal entertainment where full dress is out of the question, and a plain black silk is a little too sober. A jacket of this kind may be made at home, and with not very much work. After a perfect pattern is made, the lace must be carefully basted on the paper, bringing selvedge to selvedge, so that it may be overhanded. When the seams are nicely put together, it should have a lace edge an inch and a half or two inches wide all around the garment and around the arm-holes.

A New "Rape of the Lock."

The Pall Mall Gazette reports that a "Rape of the Lock" is reported from Gorlitz, in Silesia. A young Baroness residing in that town had struck up a close friendship with the daughter of a tradesman there, who boasted of a magnificent head of hair, terminating in two black locks behind, while the Baroness had but little hair that was not supplied by the hairdresser. Her friend the other day made an offensive allusion to this circumstance, and the Baroness determined to be avenged. Taking advantage of an unguarded moment, she cut off the two objectionable locks; but her punishment has been much more severe than that inflicted by Pope's Belinda. The tradesman's daughter applied to the Crown Prosecutor for redress, upon which a prosecution was instituted against the Baroness in due form before a jury, though the law officers were in great doubt as to whether the offense should be regarded as an "infliction of bodily harm," an insult, or a theft. Ultimately the jury decided that it was a case of bodily harm, and the Baroness was sentenced to five days' imprisonment.

A Pet Lobster.

A French journalist met with a strange pet the other day when paying a visit. While he was talking he noticed something moving on the carpet which was neither a cat nor a dog. On looking again he saw that it was a fine lobster, dark gray, spotted with red, and thought that it must have escaped from the kitchen. The lady of the house smiled, and said: "I must tell you the history of my pet. Some months ago I bought a lobster, and as it was not wanted for dinner, my cook left it in the water in the kitchen. I was going to a ball that night, and being ready, I sat in an easy chair and fell fast asleep. Suddenly I sprang up from the pain of a sharp bite in my foot, and I saw the lobster biting it. I started up and ran to the kitchen. No one was there, and a cloth in front of the fire had caught fire. It was soon extinguished, but I have kept the lobster ever since out of gratitude." It has its basin of cold water, and seems to recognize its mistress, and is so fond of music that it is always drawn toward the piano whenever she plays.

A Neat Thing in Jails.—Out in Churchill county, Col., they had a prisoner, but no jail in which to confine him. The authorities finally resolved upon a magnificent residence. There was an old unused mining shaft in the neighborhood, and into this shaft the prisoner was lowered. Three times a day he was raised to the surface, fed, and then lowered back again. As the shaft was 200 feet deep there was little chance for an escape from jail by climbing out, and tunnelling out would scarcely be attempted. The plan of the Colorado Sheriff is recommended further east. It is almost impossible to procure the honest erection of a public building, but a hole in the ground might be dug which would not be a sham. The new plan for jails has its merits, though it would be bad for prisoners in the event of a sudden flood.

The recent birth of the quadruplets in Baltimore is paralleled in a similar event in Brattleboro, Vt. The parents' name is Hahn, and the family are very poor. Hundreds of people visit the infants every day. An admission fee is charged, and the little ones are already earning from $50 to $100 a week each. They continue healthy, and are likely to live. They were christened Sarah, Mary, Katie and Jennie.

A Perplexed Duellist.

The most notorious of living duellists is just now under a cloud, and the worst of it for him is that he cannot, as usual, get into the sunshine again by killing or wounding somebody. A certain Madame Olga in Paris recently sent around to the office of the Pays newspaper a notice of a concert, which notice failed to appear in the journal named. A friend of Madame Olga called on the editor of the Pays, M. Paul Cassagnac, and asked the reason of this neglect. M. Cassagnac, the editor, responded curtly, and supplemented his response by a reflection upon the character of the lady interested. Madame Olga, hearing of this scandalous aspersion, failed to throw herself into [illegible] the modes of self-destruction popular with despairing women in the French capital. She took quite a different course. In short, Madame Olga dressed herself in man's attire, purchased a small cane, and went upon the war-path. She found that famous duellist and editor, M. Paul Cassagnac, sipping his absinthe grandly in the fashionable Cafe de la Paix, and addressed him briefly but pointedly in the way a furious woman talks. Then the little cane in Madame Olga's hand cut the air and curled about M. Cassagnac's back, then across the face, and then the gentle creature left the room. The duellist is enraged, but, apparently, without resort. He cannot call a woman out and shoot her; he cannot pink her with his sword, which is for men alone. It is a distressing situation for the editor of the Pays, and his Frenchman's wit will be tested in devising a revenge.

Some New French Aphorisms.

It is right to despise fools; it is wrong not to fear them.

Love descends to friendship; friendship never soars to love.

People who injure us always say they do so for our good.

Women do not like to remember; men do not like to foresee.

Nothing shows happiness more than tears. Tears are the extreme smile.

An honest man never abandons a woman, but he knows how to make himself forsaken.

By their fickleness women escape much misery. Birds save themselves only with their wings.

A women never is deceived by the love she inspires, but she deceives herself through that which she experiences.

Patent Medicines.—That there are some good patent medicines no intelligent man dare for a moment deny; and pre-eminent is the great California hero medicine, Vinegar Bitters, discovered by Dr. J. Walker, a prominent physician of San Francisco. This medicine, although called Bitters, is not to be classed among the vile "fancy drinks" recommended and sold over the bar by rum-venders, but is a combination of pure herbalistic extracts, known to possess sterling medicinal qualities, and is compounded without the use in any shape of spirits. Its action upon the internal system is not stimulating to the extent that alcoholic poison is, but it at once attacks blood-impurities, and by removing the original cause destroys the germs of disease and invites returning health. Its action upon the stomach and liver renders it an almost certain specific in the most stubborn cases of dyspepsia, and in truth imparts new life and vigor to the whole system. It is one of the best medicines ever invented.

The Stature of Primitive Man.—The indications are that the primeval man of Europe and his nearer descendants were of short stature. The popular notion that the present generation is physically weaker and smaller than the primitive or ancient is not only utterly unfounded, but there is abundant evidence that the reverse is true. Most of us would be amazed if not shocked at a true and life-sized portrait of the real Eve, "mother of all living." We often hear, indeed, of giants' bones here and there dug up, but intelligent examination invariably proves them to have belonged to the mammoth or other animal.

The most eminent organists of Paris and London, as well as Warren, Morgan, Zundel, of Trinity, Grace, and other principal churches in New York, have given to the Mason & Hamlin Organ Co. written testimonials to the superiority of their cabinet organs, which they declare to have excellencies not found in others.

The Queen of all Sewing Machines.—In speaking of the merits of the Wilson shuttle sewing machine, it is sufficient for us to say that we think the invention of this machine marks one of the most important eras in the history of this country; and when we consider the influence it has upon the social well-being of the masses, it is difficult to conceive of an invention of more importance. It has a beautiful, noiseless movement; it makes the genuine "lock-stitch" alike on both sides, and does to perfection all kinds of plain and fine sewing; it needs no commendation; its rapid sales, the increasing demand, and the many flattering testimonials from those who have used it, is sufficient proof of its merits. The want of a sewing machine is deeply felt in every household, and as the Wilson shuttle sewing machine, on account of its extreme simplicity and less cost of manufacture, is sold at a much lower price than all other first-class machines, it is meeting with the extensive patronage that it so justly deserves. Machines will be delivered at any railroad station in this county, free of transportation charges, if ordered through the company's branch house at 197 State street, Chicago. They send an elegant catalogue and chromo circular free on application. This company want a few more good agents.

Davis' Pain Killer.—This article needs no comments from us, but the real worth of so valuable a compound compels us to give publicity to it. The Pain Killer we keep constantly at hand, and have done so for a number of years, and have administered it for ails of all descriptions, both external and internal, and have ever found it to be the best remedy extant. We well recollect its first introduction for public patronage; it was then sold in a few shops in the city; look at it now—the world are its patrons. Sold everywhere.

"Horse-Men," and others who pretend to know, say that the following directions had better be observed in using Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders: Give a horse a tablespoonful every night for a week; the same every other night for 4 or 6 nights; the same for a milch cow, and twice as much for an ox. The addition of a little fine salt will be an advantage.

We have heard recently of several severe cases of spinal disease cured by Johnson's Anodyne Liniment; one case of a man forty-five years old, who had not done a day's work for four years. The back should be washed, then rubbed with a coarse towel. Apply the Liniment cold, and rub in well with the hand.

The Elastic Truss of Pomeroy & Co., 744 Broadway, N. Y., is by far the best in use.

A $4.00 Book for $1.50.

The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, in plain English, or Medicine Simplified; By R. V. Pierce, M. D., Counselor-in-Chief of the Board of Physicians and Surgeons, at the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y. The above work—a book of about nine hundred large pages, profusely illustrated with wood engravings and colored plates, and well and strongly bound—will be sent, post paid, to any address, for One Dollar and Fifty Cents—making it the cheapest book ever offered to the American People. Other books treating of domestic medicine, of like size and style of binding, and not nearly as well illustrated, with no colored plates, and some of them containing no prescriptions and making known no means of self-cure for the diseases which they discuss, sell for from three dollars and a half to five dollars. Were Dr. Pierce's Work not published by the author, printed and bound with his own machinery, and were it sold through agents, as other like works are, the price of it would have to be not less than four dollars. For when the publisher pays the author a fair price for his production, then adds a profit to his investment large enough to satisfy himself and compensate him, not only for his labor, but also for the risk of pecuniary loss which he assumes in taking the chances of the enterprise proving a success, and when the State, county and canvassing agent has each received his profit, they have added to the expense of a book, that originally cost about $1.25, so much that the people have to pay not less than $4.00 for it. The People's Medical Adviser, on the contrary, is placed within the pecuniary reach of all classes by the author, who adopts the plan of the Grangers, dispensing with middle men and giving the benefit of their profits to the people, offering his book at a price little above actual cost of publication. That those desiring the book may run no risk of losing their money in sending it through the mails, the author advertises that money addressed to him at Buffalo, N. Y., and inclosed in registered letters, may be at his risk of loss. The author's large correspondence with the people upon medical matters, which we are credibly informed frequently exceeds three hundred letters a day, and requires several trained and skillful medical assistants and short-hand reporters to enable him to entertain and answer them, as well as his large daily dealings with disease at the World's Dispensary, appear to have peculiarly fitted him for writing the Work, by rendering him very familiar with the every day medical needs of the people. He endeavors in this Work to answer all the numerous questions relating to health and disease that have been addressed to him by the people from all parts of the land, and hence it contains important information for the young and old, male and female, single and married, nowhere else to be found. All the most prevalent diseases of both sexes are also plainly and fully considered, and means of self-cure made known. Unlike other works on Domestic Medicine, it includes the subjects of Biology, Cerebral Physiology, Hygiene, Temperaments, Marriage, Reproduction, etc., all of which are treated in an original and interesting manner. It is a compendium of Anatomical, Physiological and Medical Science, and embodies the latest discoveries in each department.

A Remarkable Book.

In 1868 P. T. Barnum wrote his Autobiography for Burr & Co., the celebrated publishers in Hartford, Conn., for which they paid him $15,000. It made a book of 800 pages, was profusely illustrated, gave a particular account of Barnum's eventful life in all parts of the world, and included his celebrated lecture on "The Art of Money Getting." Horace Greeley pronounced the book "worth a hundred dollar greenback to many a beginner in life." The publishers sold 90,000 copies of the book by subscription, at three dollars and a half a copy. In 1871, when Mr. Barnum started his great traveling shows, he bought back the copyright and stereotype plates of his book for $10,000, added an Appendix bringing the account of his life up to that date, printed an edition of 100,000 copies, sent them with his traveling shows, and sold the whole of them at cost, one dollar each. He has added an Appendix each year, which has now increased the volume to a thousand pages. It averages a sale of 100,000 copies each year. They are neatly bound in muslin, gilt, and sold in all his traveling shows. As the patrons emerge from the great show tents with his books under their arm, they look as if coming from a circulating library! No book in this country ever had such an enormous sale, or so abounds in curious incidents of real life and valuable experiences.—Buffalo Courier.

ELASTIC TRUSS.

THE ELASTIC TRUSS AND SUPPORTER is now superseding adopted everywhere by the leading physicians, surgeons, druggists, army and navy, hospitals, gymnasiums, etc., etc. The success and universal satisfaction they have given, as well as the great number of radical cures they have effected, has demonstrated the fact that rupture can be surely cured without suffering or annoyance, and without the danger of incurring Spinal Disease or Paralysis, often caused by the severe pressure of Metal Trusses and Supporters. It is the only sure cure for Hernia, as it is the only Truss in use that will hold the rupture securely in all positions in which the body can be placed. It will perform radical cures when all others fail. It can be worn with ease and comfort when no spring truss can be used. When once adjusted, no motion of the body or accident can displace it. These instruments have the unqualified approval of the most eminent practitioners in the profession.

From the numerous testimonials in our possession we append the following:

"After the experience of months, patients testify strongly to its efficacy, as well as to the ease and freedom from inconvenience with which the instrument is worn. With superior advantages, the Elastic Truss possesses in a high degree ALL requisites and qualifications claimed for other inventions. I have no hesitation in regarding it as an important means for the relief and cure of Hernia.
J. M. CARNOCHAN, M. D.,

"Ex-Health Officer of the Port of New York, Surgeon-in-Chief of New York State Hospital," etc., etc.

Geo. V. House, M.D., Superintendent Elastic Truss Co.: Dear Sir: After suffering for thirty years, in my own person, from the use of every form of Metallic Truss pronounced curable in this country and in Europe, I, two years ago, applied your Elastic Truss, and since that time I have experienced comfort and satisfaction, and been taught the truth, that the Elastic Truss is the only instrument that should be used for the relief and cure of Hernia; and now, after more than thirty years' continuous practice, and having adjusted many hundreds of Trusses (and for the last twenty months yours exclusively), I gratefully declare it to be my deliberate opinion that your Elastic Truss is the only one entitled to the confidence of the public; that elasticity is the only power at all adapted to the requirements of a Truss or Supporter, and am convinced that your Elastic Truss actually cures a large proportion of all cases to which it is applied, not only among children, but in numerous cases within my own knowledge of patients from 50 to 75 years of age.

VINEGAR BITTERS
OU
PURELY VEGETABLE
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of Vinegar Bitters?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of Vinegar Bitters in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim Vinegar Bitters the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. Walker's Vinegar Bitters, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with Vinegar Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, Walker's Vinegar Bitters have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of Walker's Vinegar Bitters occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN INDIANA, APRIL 29, 1875.

The Washington correspondent of the Graphic announces that Grant never was a candidate for the third term. As the president is not in Washington, it is not easy to see how the correspondent of the Graphic can know anything on the subject. The Graphic is one of the few papers that have shown a disposition to favor the third term project.

The "King of the Bohemians" is dead. Henry Clapp was a cynical, unique, brilliant wit, without a checkered story. He had been a temperance lecturer and a drunkard. He had been an Abolitionist preacher and an office-holder in the city government of New York. He had been a reformer in England and had bathed in the dissipation of Paris. A brilliant conversationist, he became the center and the justly-named King of a little Bohemian circle in New York in which wit and culture were not lacking, though Presbyterian proprieties were not observed.

The wholesale swindling of colored people revealed by the investigation of the affairs of the defunct Freedman's bank, at Washington, has alienated the affections of nearly all of that class from the republican party, and the managers of that tottering concern are becoming extremely solicitous to regain the ground they have lost. To do this the administration has hit upon an expedient rather more ingenious than honest. It is proposed to buy the bank building, on the pretense that it is needed for department purposes, for an amount sufficient to cover the accounts of the defrauded depositors. It is believed, and with good grounds, that this would restore the confidence of the Congo voters in the republican party as their saviors and natural and only protectors.

Set orations are sometimes a little ridiculous in their minor effects.—George William Curtis opened his speech at Concord with a flowery description of "the heaven's bending sendigaly" over the scene, and the "earth blossoming with renewed life." The day, however, turned out to be a cold and stormy one. Still more ridiculous was the effect of the peroration which was directed to Grant as follows:

> Sir, it is the signal felicity of this occasion, that on the one hundredth anniversary of the fiist battle in the war of American independence, I may salute you, who led to victory the citizen soldiers of American liberty, as the first elected president of the free republic of the United States. Fortunate man! to whom God has given the priceless boon of associating your name with that triumph of freedom, which will presently bind the East and the West, the North and the South, in a closer and more perfect union for the establishment of justice and the security of the blessings of liberty than these states have ever known.

In the meanwhile the president had taken himself off to enjoy a smoke and a drive, and left the orator alone with his eloquence. When the direct address came, it was directed to an empty seat. This was rough on Curtis.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The New York Sun says: We receive a great many letters from Southern subscribers to the Sun upon the subject of the relations between the whites and the negro race in that part of the country; and the burden of a large perportion of them is that people who live in the North cannot understand the conditions which now govern these relations. That the great mass of former slaveholders have come to the conclusion that emancipation will eventually prove a benefit to the people of the Southern States is undoubtedly true, and we do not suppose that any person of ordinary intelligence in the South has the most remote idea that this result of the war can ever be changed. One correspondent writes: "We are all abolitionists down here, but not radicals. We think the war, in cutting us loose from slavery, has been, or will be, of service to the white man, but how much it will benefit the negro, time alone will show." The majority of the freedmen are improvident, while they lack the intelligence, the application and the skill to make their labor as profitable as it should be. What is worse according to the testimony of innumerable witnesses, the rules of morality fail to exercise much influence over them, and their habits of pilfering render them in the most cases undesirable neighbors. A Federal office-holder in Georgia, writing of the negro, says:

"Having no forethought to prompt him to provide for his own necessities at the proper time, when hunger overtakes him, he will sally forth under cover of darkness, having in his bosom no conscientious scruples to restrain him; and if a neighbor, black, or white, has a hen roost, a pig sty, potato field, or corn patch well supplied, the next morning will exhibit signs of depletion." The depredations of worthless negroes upon the property of the whites [illegible] the industrious and prudent of their own race form the subject of general complaint in every part of the South. One reason for the loose morals of the fredmen may perhaps be found in the character of their religious teachings. While the Southern negro, religion is usually entirely an emotion. At their meetings they will indulge in the most fervid shouts and prayers, which will not have the least effect in preventing immoral actions immediately afterwards; and the preachers of their own race are popular in porportion to their power to induce in their congregations a condition of ecstasy, rather than for the excellence of their precepts and the uprightness of their example. An intelligent correspondent, writing from Kentucky, says that the negroes are inclined to be religious, but their ministers in too many cases are utterly unprincipled knaves and sensualists. Almost all the women, without regard to habits of life, belonging to the church and the light regard in which chastity is held, both by the shepherds and their flocks, have led to gross immoralities among the negro clergy, which have the effect of disgusting the better class of colored people with the very name of religion. All this servise to show that the opposition to familiar social intercourse between the two races in the South which the passage of the Civil Rights Bill has done so much to intensify, arises not so much from a prejustice against color as against certain characteristics of the newly enfranchised freedmen, which it is to be hoped will disappear in time. It also explains the intense antipathy to the establishment of mixed schools which is so generally felt throughout the reconstructed States.

Let the Whole Cabinet Resign.

In the House of Representatives which meets in December, there will be a Democratic majority of about seventy. Nobody doubts that the House will, through the agency of investigating committees, very thoroughly overhaul the leading departments of Grants Administration, and institute a searching inquiry into the public conduct of Grant himself. To fail to do this would be to shun the performance of a plain duty, and seriously disappoint public expectation. We take it for granted, therefore, that this important work will be done, and that the knife, so to speak, will be thrust into the foul ulcer of Grantism without pity and without fear.

In this view of the course which the next House will pursue, it is very easy to account for the resignation of Attorney-General Williams, and to credit the rumor that other members of the Cabinet will soon follow his example, and step down and out. They see the storm coming, and would fain hide themselves from its fury.

Perhaps the frightened officials imagine that if they throw up their seals a few months previous to the meeting of Congress they will be forgot on by the time it assembles.—Doubtless the whole of them ought to be covered with the contempt of every high-minded person; but the people have in store for these corrupt and infamous officeholders something more intolerable for them to bear than the scorn of upright citizens. They will demand that Congress shall not only expose their misdeeds, but punish the malefactors; or, at all events, leave it to the Republican majority in the Senate to brave public odium by acquitting them, if it pleases so to do after the House shall have arranged them at its bar for high crimes and misdemeanors.

However, perhaps they had all better follow in the footsteps of Williams. It could do no harm; and their voluntary disappearance from public view might be accepted as a plea of guilty and throwing themselves upon the mercy of the court in advance. We therefore advise the rest of the Cabinet to resign in a body, and not stand upon the order of their going, but go all at once.

As to Grant, the people themselves will settle his case at the polls if any convention can be brought to nominate him for a third term.

Come and see the splendid stock of gents' and ladies' misses' and children's fine Shoes, just received at J. E. Woodford's, sign of the big boot.

Peter Reeling, heretofore with Vordermark & Sons, will move his "quarters" to Bluffton, Allen County Ohio, and engage in the boot and shoe trade. Good luck to Pete.

If you want a straw hat bleached and pressed, call at M. E. Martin & Co., where it will be done in the best manner, as we warrant all our work in srtaw.

If you wish a straw hat bleached and pressed, call at M. E. Martin & Co., where it will be done in the best manner, as we warrant all our work in straw.

"Don't stay after ten," was what we heard a newly married wife tell her affectionate husband, the other evening. When the fellow returned it was a few minutes (hic) after ten. Don't crowd (hic).

The Pleasures of Sin.—The Rev. Mr. Welch. of the M. E. Church, has selected the above as the subject for a discourse on next Sabbath evening. The public are cordially invited.

C. A. Baughn, who has been absent from the city for two months, returned last week. We understand that he visited the Black Hills gold regions, and that he brought home a specimen of the products of the new Eldorado.

"John! John! wake up; there's a burglar in the house," said the wife. John sat upright in bed. "Burglar—b-u-r-g-l-e-r—burgler"—and he rolled over, waiting for a harder word.

Gen. Reub Williams, of the Indianian has in view the purchase of the Fort Wayne Gazette. We hope he will conclude to purchase, as we would like to see a good morning paper there, and believe Reub could furnish it.

There will be a supper and festival, for the benefit of Rev. J. E. Fisher, at Ensley's hall next Friday evening to which the people of Auburn and vicinity are all cordially invited. Tableaux, Music, and a good time generally.

Frank Davenport is the worst fellow to sell things cheap we ever saw. He is selling Wall Paper so cheap that it would pay our citizens to paper their barns and woodhouses, just for the looks of the thing. Go and learn his prices.

The tick of the telegraph instrument is now heard next door to the Courier office, and we now have direct communication with the whole world including Garret City. No well regulated telegraph office can be happy without a printing office next door.

We can help you spend your money wisely, we can convince you, that you can save money this spring and summer, if you will buy your boots and shoes at J. E. Woodford's, sign of the big boot, East side of Main street, Auburn, Ind.

Two gentlemen from Fort Wayne have leased the brickyard of Mr. Ensley, and will go to work immediately to get out a million or more brick to meet the great local demand. They are practical workmen, and we believe they will find a good investment here.

T. H. Clayton, of Garrett, was practising with the festive revolver, and by a simple twist of the wrist, a shot therefrom perforated a finger, and rendered one joint boneless in the twinkling of an eye. He discovered his mistake soon after.

Ladies' and Gents' remember that you can always find a complete assortment of the best and latest styles of ladies', gents', misses' and children's Shoes and Slippers. Remember that our store is headquarters for varieties and styles, as well as low prices. J. E. Woodford, sign of the Big Boot.

An item appeared in the Courier of week before last stating that the brick already delivered on the ground for the new jail, had been condemned. Such is not the case. The brick were bought of Mr. Groscop, and they have been adjudged good material, and payed for. We make this correction in justice to Mr. G.

We call attention to the Letter from the South, from the able pen of our old and esteemed friend, Hon. John W. Dawson. He makes a careful review and gives the result of his observations on Louisiana affairs, after a sojourn of nearly two months in that State. It will be read with interest. See 1st page

We learn that a Marble Shop will be established in Auburn in a few days. The vacant space west of the ice house has been leased, and the new establishment will be in running order in a short time. We have often wondered why this branch of trade has not been represented here before, perhaps because of the healthy condition of our people, but then they have realized a moderate trade from other localities.

Though the Bryan Band is a crack one, our Auburn boys played alongside of them without suffering any depreciation by the proximity. We have a good band, a gentlemanly set of fellows who never fail to honor and reflect our good name abroad. We suggest that the boys get up a grand musical festival of about two days in June, offer prizes and have a regular jubilee of bands.

The Town and school Board, has decided to purchase several lots of Dr. Ford next to his residence, for the erection of a school house some day, for the accommodation of that part of town. Our place is getting too large for one central school house, and, we believe this will be a wise provision. Now the next thing is, to look after a new school edifice.

Hicksville is building up quite substantially. A large number of new buildings are in course of erection. We noticed a fine new church on Main street, opposite Mr. Edgerton's residence. The Auburn folks were loud in their praise of the fine school building now in use, which goes to show that our citizens would appreciate a good edifice of this kind if they had one. We hope soon to have one.

The Odd Fellows' celebration at Hicksville last Monday, proved to be a greater affair than was anticipated by our enterprising neighbors. Delegations from Bryan, Defiance, Maysville and this place, were in attendance, aggregating three bands, and the air was full of music. The ceremonies were neatly conducted, though somewhat brief on account of Bob Patterson, of Bryan, failing to put in an appearance as speaker.

We are now told that the fact of the construction of Mr. Williams' "cottage by the sea" on south Jackson street was not duly chronicled at the time last summer. That house must be noticed, for we think it one of the best in town. It is built with some degree of taste, which we cannot say characterizes all the buildings going up in this town. It is commodious and airy, and entirely comfortable within.

Peters' Household Melodies is issued every month at $4 per year. It contains songs, duetts, choruses, etc, all new and original. The last number contains "Alone, and at Home," "When Silver Locks replace the Gold," "The Shores are fading Robin," "Never say die," "The Strain I heard in Happier Days," "Where is my loved one To-Night," "Gane Awa,'" "Sun of my Soul." Address J. L. Peters, 599 Broadway, New York.

If you want a pair of easy fitting boots or shoes, that will surround those painful corns, or bunyons, and make you think there is something in this world to live for, besides trials, troubles, vexations, pains, misery, and tribulations, go and let W. W. Humes, at J. E. Woodford's, fit you with a pair of understandings, that will produce the happiest effect; sign of the big boot, East side of Main street, Auburn Ind.

Some smart young men were stoning the billiard room, last Friday night known as five points. This business will not always last, and the gang, who have for some time been carrying it along, will feel sore over the effects of a cartridge ball. It speaks bad for the town, and looks to the eye of a well raised citizen, especially a stranger, as though the town was destitute of Sunday schools and Bibles. Watch for them and the law will "cook their dish."

Coming.—We are glad to announce that the Albion Dramatic Company will render the "Ticket-of-Leave Man" at Ensley Hall on Saturday evening, May 8th, being a week from next Saturday. Several of our citizens went over to Albion last Saturday night and saw them play this charming drama, and they accredit the troupe as being first-class. We want to see the hall crowded, not only as a compliment to our neighbors, but to reciprocate the courtesy extended to our troupe a few weeks ago at that place.

Messrs. Cy. Lock, of Waterloo, and Mace Long, of Fort Wayne, were in town Monday looking up a location for a new billiard parlor, to contain six tables. They propose building a room and buying property for this purpose. These gentlemen are of the kind that push ahead in everything they undertake, and the lovers of the billiard game may rest assured of a quiet and orderly room to while away their idle moments. If they can secure a lot at reasonable figures, immediate steps will be taken to erect the building.

One of the most beautiful and convenient additions to the city of Auburn, is now being laid out by Mr. John Sommers, East of cedar creek. The most desirable building lots in the immediate vicinity of Auburn will soon be in the market. Mr. Sommers in connection with Mr. Baker, intend to continue seventh street on a straight line east to Ford street, thence South connecting with the Spencerville road. We are pleased to see Mr. Baker enter into the spirit of enterprise that seems to prevail among all our citizens.

Business Men's Union.

W. H. Whitaker is in this county representing the firm of Fouse, Hershberger & Co., 285 Broadway, New York, managers of the above named Union. The object of the Union is for the collection of outstanding and abandoned claims, and by its system of reports to protect business men from a class of men that systematically obtain credit, and never pay. This is the best method of adjusting such claims that has ever been introduced, and every business man in DeKalb County should take an interest in the enterprise, as it will be a great advantage to them. We have examined the system and freely endorse it. We see by examining Mr. Whitaker's books that he has a majority of the principal firms at this place. He will call on all the business men in the county within a few days and give them an opportunity to avail themselves of the benefits of the Union.

The game of croquet is a beautiful game—and how the young bucks improve the shining hours, may be seen by gazing out on the Court House Square!

Is Friday an Unlucky Day.

I answer this question in the following satisfactory manner: On Friday, August 21st, 1492, Christopher Columbus sailed on his great voyage of discovery. On Friday, October 12th, 1492, he first landed. On Friday, January 4th, 1493, he sailed on his return to Spain, which, if he had not reached in safety, the happy result would never have been known, which led to the settlement of this continent. On Friday, March 15th, 1493 he arrived at Palos in safety; on Friday, November 22, 1493, he arrived at Hispanola on his second voyage to America; on Friday, June 13th, 1494 he thought, unknown to himself, that he discovered the continent of America; on Friday, March 5th, 1496, Henry VIII., of England gave to John Cabot his Commission, which led to the discovery of North America. This is the first American State paper in England. On Friday, September 7th, Melendez founded St. Augustine, the odlest town in the United States by more than forty years; on Friday, November 10th, 1620, the Mayflower with the pilgrims made the harbor of Provincetown, and on the same day they signed that august compact, the forerunner of our present glorious Constitution. On Friday, December 22, 1620, the Pilgrims made their final landing at Plymouth rock. On Friday, February 22, 1720, George Warhington, the father of American freedom was born; on Friday, June 16th, 1777 Bunker Hill was seized and fortified, and on Friday, October 7th, 1777 the surrender of Saratoga was made, which had such power and influence inducing france to declare for our cause; on Friday, September 22d, 1780, the treason of Arnold was laid bare which saved us from destruction; on Friday, October 18th, 1781, the surrender at Yorktown, the crowning glory of the American arms, occurred. On Friday, July 6th, 1776, the motion in Congress was made by John Adams and seconded by Richard Henry Lee, that the United States Colonies were, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Thus by numerous examples, we see that however it may be with foreign nations, Americans need never dread to begin on Friday, any undertaking however momentous it may be.

Important Suggestions to School Officers

In seating a school room always avoid placing a small desk in front of a larger one. A scholar can neither sit nor write with ease when desks are so arranged. Desks of the same size should be placed in the same row, placing the large desks in the outside rows, and the smaller ones in the inside. If necessary at any time to place a small desk in front of a larger one, a back seat should be placed between them, corresponding in size with the smaller desk.

As a matter of justice to the people, we would advise all trustees to require a "warranty," to be attached under the seat of every desk they purchase. We are convinced that this is the only way by which a warranty will amount to much Our reasons are, that a trustee usually loses a guarantee, even if one be given him, and it is very seldom that his successor ever sees it, consequently when desks break, the usual result is that the trustee not knowing whether the desks were warranted or not, buys new ones, as many have done the past year. Furthermore, require a warranty to be written as follows and be sure the words "ordinary or fair use," do not appear in it:

FORM OF WARRANTY.

"This desk is warranted for five years from the time of delivery. If it breaks in use in that time, or becomes rickety, will upon notification, replace it with a new desk, complete, not the casting only free of all charges.

(signed)———Manufacturers."

Require the above "warranty" to be given in all cases by a responsible manufacturer. We propose to warrant every Bent Wood Desk in the above manner, and if one breaks or gets rickety it is sure to be seen by the teacher or director or that it belongs to us to replace it free of all charges. If trustees allow themselves to be pursuaded to purchase any manufacture of school furniture without such a warranty they should be held strictly accountable by the people for gross carelessness. So much school furniture is breaking in the country districts especially, that it cannot longer be overlooked and passed by as an insignificant matter. We have, during the past year, had trustees to pay us fifty dollars and upwards for repairing broken cast iron desks with "bent wood."

All we ask of you is to purchase whatever desk you think best, but when you purchase any desk in the future, protect yourselves and your people as we suggest in the way of practical "warranty."

We clip the above from a circular issued by the Higgens Bent Wood School Furniture Company, of Indianapolis. There is so much sound sense in it, we feel called upon to give it the benefit of our circulation and to call upon the people to see that more care be taken in the selection of good school furniture. Trustees should not at any price purchase furniture which the manufacturers cannot afford to and will not warrant as above. School furniture properly made and of durable material should last twenty years, and if the manufacturers will not fully warrant it for five years, by attaching the warranty to each and every desk they sell they should not expect the people to encourage them in the manufacture of a worthless article. We hope there are no trustees in this State who will allow agents to persuade them at the expense of the people to purchase school furniture which will have to be replaced by the township for at least ten or fifteen years. We would further suggest that trustees at their May meeting pass a resolution not to purchase any desk unless every one has a warranty attached similar to the above.

From Corunna.

Nothing of especial interest has transpired at "high Corunna" since your last issue. In our rounds we note the following:

William Kline has located in our village. Also William Heist.

Rev. Mr. Mott, for the past three years pastor of the M. E. Church, preached his farewell sermon on last Sabbath.

We trust that brother Fried did not "pizen" neighbor Rosenberry's faithful [illegible]

On Monday last the summer term of the Corunna School commenced, with Miss Crosby as principal and Miss M. Harding as assistant.

Rev. Mr. Bacon has been assigned the pastorate of the M. E. Church, and will preach his introductory sermon on next Sabbath.

There is an odd character about town. He is known by the euphonious cognomen of "Chicago Joe," and he works for "Slocum."

If we must have saloons, such a man as Oliver Rosenberry is the right man in the right place. His purpose is not to abuse his privelege as a saloonist.

It is rumored that an attempt to suicide occurred a few miles from town last week. The case is a young girl—it is a sad case, and—

"Points a moral to adorn a tale."

The dog-killer came around the other day, and several of the canine tribe have gone under. The manner in which some fiend is distributing sudden death around loose is not pleasant.

W. B. Adams, the hardware merchant, with a full stock for the summer campaign, is certainly an enterprising citizen. He spares no pains or expense to improve and beautify his property, which has been extensively overhauled and brightened up lately. The example of Mr. A. is worthy of emulation by our villagers.

Some scallawag boy "shied" a rock at an eastern bound passenger train recently, which perforated a window of one of the coaches and bounced from off the head of a dozing passenger. As the railroad Company want that boy, and as they have set a fabulous price upon the body of the wretch, perhaps it would be just as well not to tell, as "it might injure the feelings of his parents," you know. Thereby hangs a tale.

Gordon.

The New Eldorado.

We paid a brief visit to Garrett City last Thursday, and found everybody speculating as to its future greatness. It is beautifully located in the midst of a large tract of land, handsomly surrounded by a large variety of swamps and other exotics. Its climate is not quite so genial, perhaps, as that of Florida, and yet its lovely tammarack groves, reminds one of the pine forests of the Sunny South. It is that "sequestered spot" that so many novelists write about and by whose artistic touches it is made so beautiful. In fact it is so unusually attractive at this time of the year, that our Waterloo friends visit it in large delegations, and peacefully gaze on the transporting scene. Even Charley Baxter has been there, and who could remain away after the knowledge of the fact. There is no getting along without it; children cry to go there; the women must see it. It is the mecca of our hope, the crowning of our desires. Well, we visited this fertile city and found it as tranquil as a porker in a mud hole. A ifew buildings here and there indicate the exact spot where the city is to be located. Several large frames for boarding houses are going up, and one or two store rooms. But little work is being done by the railroad, yet lots are selling rapidly at from $300 to $500 each. Parties from abroad are rushing there to secure eligible locations. Now is the time to invest; nearly one hundred lots have been sold already. Mr. Cowan informed us that he gave a guarantee that the shops would be located there, or a forfeiture of $500 would be made, together with the lot purchased.

The boarding house, restaurant and saloon business, seem to be about the best at the present. The hotel de Clark and cafe de Butts, are flourishing under a fine patronage, one of a permanent, the other of a transient character.

Our friend John A. Marvin is doing splendidly with a neat little restaurant, and will erect a house in which to locate permanently.

Orrin C. Clark is building a large store room on the south side, wherein to engage in merchandise.

The most popular resort is the Tammarack house, in the west end, where the agreeable Messrs. Mernsch & Moore hold forth. It was here we met the second most celebrated character in the place, "Wild Dick, the Printer," Hermit Long being the first. Who has been where Dick has not. The breezes of the tropics have fanned his classic brow, his brawny arm has reached forth and grasped icicles from the north pole; the beauties of the Indies have stretched out in panoramic view before him, and the monster grisly of the rocky mountains has snarled at his approach. A good judge of human nature, an excellent memory, and withal a keen wit, Dick is no slouch, and those who pick him up for a fool will let him drop quick. Hermit Long still clings to his ducal palace with a tenacity that ought to be appreciated, but isn't. There is an alabaster whiteness, a purity of complexion, about him that astonishes the beholder, and with his fine silk hat set jauntily on one side, his purple cloak thrown carelessly around him, a la Hamlet, he looks the king indeed. We attempted to interview him, but he gently put us off by picking up a small fence rail and jocosely requested us not to call again. He spoke largely of his landed estates, and seemed to have an undue affection for several railroad officials, who wanted to buy him out. He did not ask us into his studio to partake of his choice old Burgundy, doubtless aware that we could not spare the time. Visitors from abroad will receive a brief but hearty welcome, and will miss the greatest feature of the city if they fail to give him a call.

What Others Say.

Bro. Staley of the Frankfort "Crescent," writing up the Southern excursion, says of Florida:

When we landed from the steamer, and the train from the capitol of Florida came to receive us, lo, I beheld a large number of the foremost citizens of Tallahassee, the officers and members of the Board of Trade, and other dignitaries were there to welcome us.' Ex-Governor Walker, who came very near being elected United States Senator from Florida, instead of Jones; ex-Judge Dupont, of the Supreme Court of the State, and other eminent men were there; the silver cornet band had been sent, and we were received in great style. Our distinguished hosts accompanied us to the State Capitol, and when we arrived at the depot a short address of welcome was made, carriages were provided to carry us to the hotel. Several of us were taken in carriages and buggies over the city to see the sights, and after supper in the evening, we were all taken to a large hall, where a choice selection of fruits, vegetables and flowers now to be had in abundance here, were on exibition. There were oranges, bananas, winter plums, fresh ripe strawberries, large lettice, cabbage just pulled weighing twenty pounds, beets, raddishes, turnips etc., etc. It looked like an enchanted scene. Flowers were there in rich profusion; beautiful large roses and many flowers not common to us. Bunches of wheat and oats two feet high were there, showing that those two cereals could be raised in Florida.

We are charmed with the mild, genial climate, the flowers and early vegetables A fine sea breeze comes wafted from the gulf only thirty miles away, the country here is gently rolling and undulating, varied by hill and dale, and with all a rich fertile soil, capable of producing anything. Oysters in abundance brought up from the bay. Good society and all things that render life desirable and pleasant. The popole welcome all persons from the north; they want us to come and settle here, and grow up with them.

All day Thursday, the 25th, was spent n visiting the delightful country around Tallahassee. This is the prettiest district of country we have yet seen in all the South. Much of Florida is a low barren waste, but here in Central Florida, the land is diversified with hill and dale, lowland and upland. Here you find some of the best soil to be found in the South. Though this is not strictly an orange country, yet some of the most delicious oranges it was our pleasure to find we plucked with our own hands in Captain Houston's plantation, one mile from Tallahassee. Let me here say, that up in the north we do not know what a sweet orange is. The fruit sent up to us is all inferior, insipid. For a genuine sweet delicious article you must come to Florida and pull them—eat them fresh from the trees.

Not only oranges, but the great staples cotton and sugar-cane, as well as corn, wheat and oats, are here grown. They have a species of grape, known as the Scuppernong, which yields very abundantly and produces a delicious, harmless wine which "Exhilarates but not intoxicates."

For early gardening this portion of Florida is unsurpassed. They now have green peas, raddishes, etc., corn is up three or four inches, they have new potatoes and beans are coming on. To all persons looking to the South, we would say Central Florida is the place.

THE EAST.

JUDGE NEILSON and the scandal-case lawyers have signed a petition to the New York Legislature, asking for special legislation which shall give the Supervisors of Brooklyn power to further compensate the jurymen who have served over thirty days.

IT is reported that a well-known merchant of New York, a bachelor of 80, has given $1,000,000 and signed a will bequeathing the balance of his estate, valued at $4,000,000, except a life interest of $250,000 of estate, to several relatives, to endow a College of Music in that city....The Mill river region in Massachusetts has been the scene of another catastrophe, the breaking of a dam having let loose a flood which carried with it disaster and destruction to the extent of $200,000 worth of property in the villages of Wrentham and Norfolk, about 25 miles from Boston. No loss of life is reported.

THE centennial celebrations at Concord and Lexington of the first shots fired in the war of American Independence took place on April 19, on which occasion the patriotism of the old Bay State seems to have been aroused to the utmost pitch. The day was ushered in with the firing of cannon, and then followed civic and military processions, orations, songs, etc. The President and Vice President of the United States, members of the Cabinet, United States Senators, members of Congress, Governors of States, Judges, Generals, poets, orators, and eminent men of the republic, lent their presence to the patriotic occasion, while mighty crowds, only limited in size by their ability to reach the historic scenes, participated in the memorable celebration. The extreme cold weather had the effect to interfere somewhat with the complete fulfillment of the contemplated order of procedure; but nevertheless the joint centennial was a magnificent success.

OWING to inadequate railroad facilities at the Concord and Lexington celebration, some 3,000 people were forced to camp out over night in the latter place, sleeping in barns, churches, etc. All night long the road to Boston was crowded with pedestrians.

THE National Board of Fire Underwriters met in New York last week, and transacted business relative to insurance interests. The percentage of losses the past year has been greater than any year since the great Chicago fire....Wearied with the continued drudgery of reportorial work attending the Beecher trial, Dr. Julius Duncan, a reporter of the Brooklyn Freie Presse, took a dose of opium last week, and is now with the angels, it is hoped. He left a letter stating that he was sick of the blasphemy and perjury of the Beecher trial.

Wright for the forgery of Indian bounty warrants, on trial at St. Louis, the jury returned a verdict of not guilty....John Welch gave himself up to the police in East St. Louis last Friday, confessing to having helped to fire the elevator of Rush & Co., at Indianapolis, recently, causing a loss of $75,000....An important arrest of counterfeiters and capture of their tools and product was made at Boscobel, Wis., last week. ....Mrs. E. L. Erwin, a highly respectable young widow, of Hannibal, Mo., the other day, tied a clothes-line around herself and her little girl, 6 years old, fastened the other end to a stake in the ground, and then took the child in her arms and deliberately walked into Bear Creek. Miners from Idaho and California made $10 to $40 per day there. Valuable quartz was also found in the vicinity....A telegram from St. Joseph, Mo., says: "The warm days have hatched and revealed a myriad of grasshoppers in all the counties of Northwest Missouri. Considerable apprehension is felt on account of the fact. The hope of the farmers is, that they may take wings, as is their habit, and leave the locality of their hatching."....The Supreme Court of the State of Kansas have decided the act authorizing counties and municipalities to issue bonds for the purchase of seed grain for destitute settlers to be unconstitutional.... A successful attempt was made a few days ago to wreck a train on the St. Paul and Sioux City railroad near Mankato, Minn. The engine and half a dozen stock cars were precipitated through a bridge into a ravine below. About fifty head of cattle were killed, but the passengers miraculously escaped....The Northern Pacific railroad has passed into the hands of a receiver....Exciting reports of Indian outrages continue to come from the frontier. Four soldiers had a fight with a band of savages near Grenada, Kan., last week. Several of the latter were sent to the happy hunting grounds.

THE Chicago Tribune publishes a large number of reports concerning crop prospects in various parts of the West, from which it appears that wide-spread damage has resulted from the recent extremely cold weather. Great injury has been done to winter wheat, and other small grains sown early in the spring have suffered from heavy frosts and protracted cold. In many cases fields will be replowed and planted with corn, the acreage of which promises to be unusually large. From the fruit-growing regions the reports indicate extensive disaster to the prospects of the season's crop by reason of the Arctic wave.... The suit for libel brought by Miss Alice A. Early, of Rockford, Ill., against Wilbur F. Storey, proprietor of the Chicago Times, was tried at Chicago last week, and resulted in a verdict for $23,000 damages.

THE TILTON-BEECHER TRIAL.

SEVENTIETH DAY.—After an interruption of several days, caused by the illness of Mr. Fullerton, the great scandal trial was resumed with the defendant on the stand for cross-examination. The testimony was explanatory of the letters in the case, in the midst of which Mr. Fullerton charged the witness with evasion of direct questions, for which he was promptly rebuked by Judge Neilson.

SEVENTY-FIRST DAY.—The passages between the defendant and his cross-examiner were unusually sharp, and the latter was rewarded with some measure of success in his attempts to worm out damaging admissions. It transpired that Mr. Beecher adopted the theory of blackmail at the instigation of his lawyers, who, he says, drilled him up to the point of making an allegation which he did not then, and does not now, believe to be true.

SEVENTY-SECOND DAY.—An interesting part of the cross-examination was in reference to Beecher's health, and what he meant by his letter to Mrs. Tilton, in 1873, that when he last saw her he did not expect to live three days. He acknowledged his general health was good that year, but he had what he thought were symptoms of apoplexy in 1856, which he afterward found to be mere results of nervous exhaustion. The cross-examination ended, and after a short re-direct examination the witness left the stand. But few "points" were made by counsel on either side.

SEVENTY-THIRD DAY.—The court was not more than half full. H. O. Armour, a merchant, of Brooklyn, testified that Moulton threatened to "make it hotter than hell" for any one who would testify against him. H. M. Cleveland, a member of the Plymouth investigating committee, testified that Beecher could not have confessed to Mrs. Moulton on June 2, 1873.

POLITICAL.

IN the Louisiana House of Representatives, on the 20th, the majority report of the Committee on Elections, seating four Conservatives who had been declared elected by the Returning Board, and unseating four Republican members, was adopted by a majority of 61 to 32. This gives the Democrats a majority on joint ballot. A committee which had been appointed to examine the books of the Auditor of State, made a report recommending that that officer be impeached.

A WASHINGTON special to a Western paper states that Secretary Delano's resignation has been in the hands of the President ever since last December, "and whenever he is satisfied that he can insist upon his resignation being accepted without incurring the imputation that the President has requested him to resign, he will do so."...The Lincoln Club, of New York, last week gave a reception to Congressman Lawson, who, in a speech, urged the Republican party to nominate Senator Conkling for President.

AN investigation of the condition of the winter wheat by the statistical division of the Department of Agriculture at Washington shows the crop as a whole to be much below the status of that of last year in April. There is an apparent increase of about 7 per cent. in the areas of winter wheat, amounting in round numbers to 1,500,000 acres, though that portion of winter killed and to be replanted in other crops may be equal in the West to the enlargement of the planted area. This increase is small in the Middle States, considerable in Illinois and Missouri, and proportionately largest in the Gulf States and in Kansas, reaching 30 per cent. in the Southwest.

There was less interest shown in the grain markets during the past week, and, although a fair speculative business was transacted, the markets were comparatively quiet. The firmness and advancing tendency gave place to a weak feeling, and, with the exception of Thursday and Friday, the daily tendency of values was to a lower range. The May option was the chief center of attraction, the longer futures ruling comparitively dull, while but a limited business was transacted for immediate delivery. The recent liberal advance in values left a good margin for operators on the long side of the trade, and a satisfactory profit to speculators who had been carrying the grain for an advance, and then were not at all slow in taking advantage of the profit in their favor to sell out and take in their differences. The condition of the Liverpool and New York markets was not particularly favorable for the maintainance of prices, the advices being unfavorable in their tenor. The receipts are still light but operators anticipate increased arrivals before the close of the month. The May shorts had made ample prepartion for their contracts, and were therefore less anxious to buy. Numerous selling orders were received from the interior and from other markets. In making calculations on the current prices and the market for the week, cash grain should not be taken into consideration, as the daily changes in the storage of receipts made very irregular prices. There was really no actual change in storage, but the transfer from winter to summer storage rates necessitated frequent changes in values. Wheat has declined about 3@4c per bushel. Corn shared in the weakness, ruling 3½c lower. "New" will be dropped in the inspection of corn. April 20th and straight No. 2 will be the only No. 2 grades. We may then look for large receipts. Oats were 2c lower. Rye and barley firm and higher all around.

A Lost Cause.

E. A. HOWE, an attorney of the San Francisco police court, blushes and hangs his head to think himself a man. He was going to a religious revival at night and his attention was attracted by a man making rapid tracks, and another following crying: "Stop thief." The race was taking place on his side of the street, and directly in his path. It was coming toward him with a rush. Howe had a splendid opportunity to distinguish himself before he went to meeting, besides doing something neat to benefit his business—as a police lawyer. He let the chance go by. The man who was ahead in the race drew something large and round from his pocket and threatened to blow the roof off Howe's brains if he dared lay hands on him or impede his progress. Howe stepped aside and carried off his brains in triumph. And the cry of "stop thief" ran along the street from a hundred fellows who joined in the chase. Howe went to meeting and told how he had been mercifully preserved from a violent death. His story was that a desperado had presented a big pistol close to his head, and that an overruling Providence had prevented it from going off. Further down the street the course of the fugitive was stopped by a man who had a strong arm and Providence on his side. He knocked down the thief, grappled with and arrested him. The fellow was armed only with a big bologna sausage, and the mercifully-preserved Mr. Howe does not tell his story of miraculous escape from death any more, either at meeting or in the precincts of the police court. He lost a clear case of arresting and then defending his own thief.

The Senses of Bees.

The lenses of the bees' eyes are not adjustable; and, though they can see accurately at great distances, they, like some men, seem blind to objects close by. They dart down to the door of their hives with unerring precision; but, if from any cause they miss the opening, they are obliged to rise in the air and take another look. A bee's sense of taste is also imperfect, foul ditch-water and ill-smelling plants being often preferred. Bees haven't any ears to speak of, but their sense of smell—which, by the way, according to Huber, is in the mouth—is very keen. Honey-bees often, in scarce seasons, attack the bumble-bees on their return from the fields laden with honey, and force them to disgorge all they have collected. Its presence in the honey-bag must have been detected by the sense of smell. The sense, however, which is the most perfect is the touch, and that seems to be wholly in their antennæ. When one bee meets another, greetings are made by crossing their antennæ. Huber says it constructs its comb in darkness; it pours its honey into the magazines, feeds its young, judges of their age and necessities, recognizes its queen, all by aid of its antennæ, which are much less adapted for becoming acquainted with objects than our hands. Therefore, shall we not grant to this sense modifications and perfections unknown to the touch of man?

Was Obliging.

The other evening a kind-looking old man was escorted to a room on the third floor of a hotel to pass the night, and it wasn't five minutes before the bell indicated that he wanted to see a waiter. A colored boy ran up, stuck his head into the room, and asked what was wanted. The old man said he didn't want any thing, but the waiter was hardly down stairs before the bell rang again.

"Did you want suffin?" he inquired, as he reached the room again.

"Nothing," replied the old man, as he opened the door.

In about two minutes the bell rang again, and this time the waiter exclaimed:

"If you don't want suffin, what fur ye pullin' de bell fur?"

"I want to oblige the waiter," replied the old man.

"De waitah! Oblige de waitah?"

"Yes; it says here, 'Please ring the bell for the waiter,' and if he wants it rung I'm willing to oblige him, though I'm tired and sleepy, and shan't pull it more 'n four times more, unless I know that some of his family are sick."

A Pigeon Hunter.

A man about thirty years old, having a shot-gun on his shoulder and two pigeons in his hand, was yesterday standing on a street corner telling a crowd that he had been out and killed five hundred pigeons since sunrise.

"You're a liar!" shouted a man at the edge of the crowd.

The stranger looked at him long and earnestly, and then inquired:

"Where did you get acquainted with me?"

LAZY persons die young. It is the active in body and brain who live to extreme old age, as a rule. It is abundantly proven that exercise of the mind invigorates its bodily receptacle, even when that exercise is carried to an apparently extreme point. The brain, the reservoir of nervous energy to the rest of the system, increases in volume and vigor by use, just as the arm of the blacksmith or the leg of the dancer gains in muscular development. The general system benefits by the enhanced brain-power, and greater vitality and longevity is the result. Work by method and on system, even when severe, is not only quite compatible with long life, but is actually conducive to it, while the torpor of idleness or the excitements of fitful effort are the sure precursors of mental and physical degeneration. This is a useful doctrine to preach, and still more useful to practice.—Dr. Hall.

HE WAS THE ONE.—Seven or eight boys were rushing around the postoffice Saturday, headed by a yellow-haired youth who was saying:

"All I want in this world is to lay my hands on him!"

He presently came upon a boy weighing about ten pounds more than himself, and rushing at him he exclaimed:

"Did you lick my brother Ben?"

"Yes, I did," replied the boy, dropping his bundle and spitting on his hands.

"Well," continued the other lad, backing slowly away, "he needs a licking once a week to teach him to be civil!"—Detroit Free Press.

BIG GUNS.—It is thought by nautical men that small vessels mounting heavy guns are the most effective in naval warfare, and that these gigantic pieces, properly served, will hereafter decide the fate of naval battles. A single shot from a monster gun with a long range may cripple the largest and finest line-of-battle-ship that was ever launched.

THE Boston spelling match was bothered with such easy words as cerisas, ptysmagogtachygraph, giaour, tael, eyot, fichus, enchamy and demoniacal.

A CHANCE for rhymers! The Rev. Dr. Hatfield, of New York, has offered one hundred dollars for the best home mission hymn sent to 149 West Thirty-fourth street, before next July.

NO IRISHMAN ever made a greater bull than the English lawyer, who drew up an indictment charging that the prisoner killed a man with a certain wooden instrument called an iron pestle.

THE first native Chinaman ever naturalized in the United States was Yung Wing, the Educational Commissioner to America from the Celestial Empire, who was made a voter at Hartford last week.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Chicago Tribune asserts that James Gordon Bennett is fitting out an Arctic expedition. His partners in the enterprise are Lady Franklin and Captain Young.

A SMART Eastern paper says that "a station-master on the Harlem road has a dog that smokes with as much ease and comfort as his master." It forgets to add, however, that it makes his master sick to look at a pipe.

THE Remington Gun Works, at Ilion, N. Y., are employing 2,000 men night and day upon a contract for 300,000 breech-loading rifles for the Spanish government. Between 4,000 and 5,000 finished rifles are shipped per week.

MRS. JEMIMA SELTZER, of North Carolina, has smoked a pipe and drunk strong coffee ever since she can remember, and she is as hearty at 95 as she was eighty years ago. The only time she was ever sick was when she smoked the first pipe.

HOLLAND has 12,000 windmills in operation, each doing a six or ten-horse power service through the twenty-four hours. They are kept up at an annual cost of $4,000,000, and perform all the services required of steam engines at one-twentieth the cost.

How Pat Stopped a Train.

The Quincy Herald tells how a conductor on the Toledo, Wabash and Western railroad, on his way with a heavy freight train, behind time, and with a full head of steam, saw a man frantically waving a monstrous umbrella to hail the train. The brakes went down, and with a mighty effort the heavy train was brought to a stop. The individual with the umbrella turned out to be Irish, and the following dialogue ensued: Son of Erin—"Can I see the conductor?" O'Neil—"You can; that's me." Son of Erin—"Is your name Charles O'Neil?" O'Neil—"It is." Son of Erin—"Are you from Ireland?" O'Neil—"I am." Son of Erin—"And are you from the county Kilkenny?" O'Neil—"I am not." Son of Erin—"Well, be gorra, Misther O'Neil, it's sorry indade I am to hear that last, for I had an own cousin named Charles O'Neil lave the Ould Dart and the county of Kilkenny, thirty-two years ago this coming December, and it's only a fortnight back that I heard there was one Charles O'Neil bossing this train, and how did I know but what he might be the same cousin? God bless yer soul!" O'Neil—"And is that all you want?" Son of Erin—"Begorra, isn't that enough? What more could an honest man want than to see a cousin that he hasn't laid eyes on for these thirty-two years?"

GOSSIP OF THE DAY.

THERE are fifty-seven Cardinals in all. In the event of the Pope's death, a two-thirds vote of the body will be required to elect a new man, who must be from among their own number.

A YOUNG lady the other day performed the remarkable feat of walking from Nashua, N. H., to Lowell, a distance of fifteen miles, while in a somnambulistic fit. She was clad in her night-clothes.

AFTER leaving the witness stand the other day, Mr. Beecher was jocosely asked by a friend how he liked it. "Oh well," he replied, laughing, "eels don't mind being skinned after they get used to it."

THE jurors in the Beecher case get but $10 a week for their services, and naturally begin to feel that, however funny the trial may be to the spectators and principals and wel-lfed lawyers, it is martyrdom to them.

O'LEARY, the Chicago pedestrian, may now be set down as the champion walker of the Continent. In a recent match with DeWitt, of New York, he walked a hundred miles in less than twenty-four hours. O'Leary is panting to out-travel that pedestrian fraud, Weston.

CHICAGO Tribune: "The editor of the Carlyle Constitution attended the funeral of a subscriber recently, and placed on the coffin a palm-leaf fan, a linen coat, and a thermometer, and everybody understood at a glance that the dear departed was four years behind on his subscription."

MR. HORACE R. HOBART, for a year past editor and proprietor of the Jacksonville (Ill.) Daily Journal, has purchased a controlling interest in the Chicago Morning Courier. Mr. Hobart is a journalist of experience and ability, and will no doubt make the Courier a lively and interesting paper.

URA CARRUTH, the Vineland (N. J.) editor who was recently shot by Landis, is recovering. Carruth is not the only man who has carried a bullet in his head. Gen. John F. Miller, of San Francisco, has just been relieved of an ounce ball which entered his eye at Liberty Gap, Tenn., July 24, 1863. It was taken from behind the eye-ball.

GENTLEMEN, let us again join and sing the praises of reopening spring in Tennysonian verse. Here goes for a starter:

In the spring the blithe street-sprinkler 'gins to ruin vernal plants;
In the spring the landlord's fancy turns to thoughts of an advance.
—Chicago Times.
In the spring the idler's biceps will relinquish baize and balls;
In the spring the idler's fancy turns to thoughts of base and balls.

THE modern Damon and Pythias are living at South Abingdon, Mass. They are the two oldest living graduates of Brown University, it is said, and are both over 90 years old. They were born in the town, are members of the same church, were partners in practicing law, served together as Representatives in the Legislature, and are connected by family ties. They are both in good health.

Two important marine experiments are announced from England—one, a trial trip across the English channel by the newly-constructed seasick-proof Bessemer steamer; the other, the attempt of a man to float across the English channel—over twenty miles—by means of a new life-preserving apparatus. The steamer trial trip is pronounced entirely satisfactory, and the floating experiment almost equally so.

IN the Lynchburg (Va.) News there is an obituary notice of Mr. Charles Henry Lynch, who, it is stated, was the grandson of Charles Lynch, the originator of the famous "Lynch law." The old tree is still standing in the yard of the family homestead from which Judge Lynch's victims were suspended. This statement is confirmed by the authority of Webster, who says "the term is derived from a Virginia farmer named Lynch, who thus took the law into his own hands."

THE era of civil and religious liberty which the youthful King of Spain intimated was to begin with his accession to the throne has probably been postponed until a more convenient season. The right of petitioning for redress of wrongs is one of the fundamental principles of that constitutional system in England which he pretends to admire. Yet two prominent professors of the Madrid University have been arrested for exercising this right, and numerous others are also to be prosecuted.

The Washington National Monument Association have issued an appeal to the United States, in which they state that the monument has stood in its present condition for more than twenty years without the means to carry on the work. It will cost $500,000 to finish it. The centennial year of American Independence is fast approaching, and the Association feel that the shaft should be completed as soon as possible. They, therefore, ask all of the various orders, lodges, societies, granges, brotherhoods, military organizations, etc., to give something so that the work may be resumed and the cap-stone placed on the highest structure ever erected to man, during the most joyous year in the world's history—the year of American Jubilee.

IT does seem as if people of intelligence rush to greater extremes than all others. After sentence of death had been pronounced upon Ruloff, the philologist and Binghamton murderer, doctors of medicine and theology and men distinguished in other professions begged that his life might either be saved by the executive or lengthened sufficiently to permit the elucidation of some interesting ideas then under investigation. He was hanged, though, on time. Now the doctors of Boston and vicinity regard Jesse Pomeroy, the boy murderer, as the subject of a wonderful mental disease, one in fact that should be carefully studied for future recognition and treatment. But this poor boy finds none but a company of ladies to raise a voice to the Governor in his behalf, while the doctors, professors, and "many other prominent citizens," have urged his immediate execution, because it would be dangerous to have him running loose. Before he committed the last murder Jesse begged to be placed where he could do no harm. His request was unheeded then, but it will be now, in a few months.

POLITICAL MEMORANDA.

THE New York Graphic nominates Samuel J. Tilden for President.

BEN. WADE says "if this glorious government is ever ruined it will be by office-seekers."

Two elections, to be held in Mississippi and California next fall, will complete the roll of members elect to the Forty-Fourth Congress.

GEN. COBURN, of Indiana, thinks that an ex-Congressman who seeks office thereby declares his inability to earn a livelihood in any other way.

GOV. LESLIE, of Kentucky, is a very prominent candidate for the United States Senator ship from that State. The Hon. James B. Beck is his most formidable rival.

IN the course of the recent Senate debate on the Civil Rights bill, Senator Morton said: "I am one of those who believe in the right of women to vote, and I have always believed in that."

GOV. HARTRANFT, of Pennsylvania, refused to veto the bill repealing the Local-Option law, although he was strongly urged to do so. He said the popular will on the subject was clearly enough expressed last fall.

CALIFORNIA holds her quadrennial election for Governor and associate officers, and her biennial election of a Legislature in September. There are three parties in that State, Independent or Reformers, Democrats and Republicans, and there will probably be three corresponding tickets.

GEN. BURNSIDE is said to be a striking contrast to his predecessor, Senator Sprague, who gave one the idea of a not-very-precocious boy. There is a sort of a full-dress-parade air about the General, who spoils his otherwise faultless and rather exquisite dress by wearing a snuff-colored vest buttoned up to the throat closely. His very striking face is much the best in full view, and his almost bald head looms up like a promontory of white chalk, bleak and bare.—Philadelphia Press.

THE London Spectator, with the dazed air of a man who has just stepped out of the sunlight into a very dark and unknown room, says: "It is stated that one result of the last session of Congress has been to raise Mr. J. G. Blaine, a Pennsylvanian, who, however, resides in Maine, to the first position as the next Republican candidate for the Presidency. Mr. Blaine has been Speaker of the House of Representatives for the session, and his impartiality, firmness and vigor of mind have greatly struck the leaders of the party, who see that the traditionary dislike of the third term will be too strong for General Grant. The Democrats have not decided on their candidate yet, but it is not impossible that Mr. Andrew Johnson, the ex-President, and now Senator from Tennessee, may ultimately be adopted. He is a 'war Democrat' in opinion, is a Western man, made many friends at the White House, and has the same kind of attraction for the masses as General Jackson had. If he can maintain his present attitude for eighteen months, which is doubtful, he may prove the favorite of the party."

JUDGE POLAND wrote a private letter recently concerning his action in Southern affairs, and of course it has got into print. Its most interesting portion is the following in reference to Arkansas politics: "The President was made to think otherwise, and there of course I differed with the President. But our action was wholly in harmony with his first action, and, as I believe, in entire harmony with the general sentiment of the Republican party. I think the President was entirely deceived in regard to the facts of the Arkansas case. Washington was full of Arkansas refugees all winter, and it was a matter of political life or death with them, and they were by no means scrupulous as to what they said. My action in the matter was, I think, required by the plainest principles of constitutional law and by the principles of the Republican party. So far as the President held different views, I think they were caused by an erroneous view of the facts, and that most unwearied and persistent and wicked efforts were used to deceive him. As soon as the opinion of even one House of Congress was expressed, he acquiesced at once, and directed the departments to recognize Garland as Governor."

INDIANA NEWS.

THE Rush county farmers are rushing things this spring.

WM. HOGAN died on Monday at Fort Wayne, aged 102 years.

THE Brazil Miner folks talk about their county-seat war, "which has been in the courts for thirty years." It promises to last as much longer.

AT an adjourned term of the Circuit Court, Judge Franklin presiding, the relocation of the county seat was tried, and decided in favor of Brazil once more.

ABRAM J. BUCKLES, Auditor of Delaware county, has been declared a defaulter to the amount of $15,000, for which suit has been instituted against him.

THE Courier states that the spring trade of Evansville is in the line of the marvelous. No such receipts were ever reported during the flush times of the war period.

A FISHING-SMACK capsized last Saturday afternoon while trying to make the pier at Michigan City, and three of its men drowned. They were from Chicago, but their names have not yet been ascertained.

A SUPPOSED incendiary fire at Anderson, last week, destroyed the heading and stave factory of Henry Alford, with a large amount of stock. Building and machinery entirely destroyed. Loss about $5,000; no insurance.

PATENTS on inventions and improvements have recently been issued to citizens of this State as follows: Fracture splints, G. H. Brown, Indianapolis; draft equalizers, W. H. Brown, Lafayette; drive well points, D. A. Danford, Elkhart; rotary blowers, J. McClosky, Connersville.

A BARN owned by James McCloud, near Milford, Kosciusko county, was struck by lightning, last week, and entirely destroyed, together with 300 bushels of corn, sixty tons of hay, two carriages, and other farming implements. Mr. McCloud was injured by try to get his stock out of the flames, but not seriously. Loss, $4,000.

A SAD accident occurred at Lafayette on Monday, by which an old man named Conroy and his wife were killed while walking on the track of the Toledo, Wabash and Western railroad. They were both very old and feeble, and were caught by a switching train before they were aware of its approach. The engineer did not see them, as he was with his engine at the further end of the train.

AMONG its fishing notes the Terre Haute Express has the following: "Last week Mr. James Foster caught 18,000 pounds of fish at one time. It was done by stretching a large seine across the mouth of Mill creek, just above York, when the river was at its highest, and the fish were up in the creek, and as the river began to fall the fish moved back toward the river, and were stopped by the large seine. With a smaller seine he kept seining them out, and caught the above immense amount."

THE Boonville Enquirer says: "The farmers throughout the country are busily engaged preparing for huge crops the coming season. A greater number of acres will be seeded this year than any former one, especially corn and potatoes. The average of wheat exceeds that of last season, and the prospects are equally as flattering. Almost every farmer is preparing for an increased crop of tobacco. The meadows look exceedingly well, and with a favorable season, the crop will exceed last year's in quantity."

RECENT postal changes in Indiana: Discontinued—Bear Creek, Jay county; Cookerby, Vigo county. Established—Blair, DeKalb county, Jacob D. Leighty, Postmaster; Pleasant Plain, Huntington county, E. J. Scott, Postmaster. Postmasters Appointed—Sunman, Ripley county, James M. Torrence; Versailles, Ripley county, William Will; Boston Store, Montgomery county, George H. Crider; Cortland, Jackson county, Allen A. Shepard; Kewannee, Fulton county, Rufus Blair; Oakland, Spencer county, Frederick Polk; Reno, Hendricks county, R. F. Hall.

AS AN illustration of the increasing value of walnut lumber, the Indianapolis Journal notes that the standing walnut trees on a half section of land in Miami county were sold recently for $17,000. There is a large amount of other timber on the tract, which is not included, only the walnut timber being sold. Walnut lumber is coming more and more into use throughout this country and Europe, and at present a very large business is done in preparing and shipping it from Indiana.

FOR some months past an organized gang of car thieves have been plying their vocation in the vicinity of Logansport, the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and St. Louis railway being the principal sufferers. The company has had detectives at work for some weeks past, and, everything being in readiness, they made arrests, capturing nine of the robbers and recovering a large quantity of the stolen freight, consisting of trunks, valices, boots, shoes, tobacco, liquors, dress goods, clothing, and various other articles, which were found concealed at the houses of the thieves. The ring-leaders were three brothers named Wright, and a man named Evans Baker.

A YOUNG lady named Nora Wagner, a daughter of Lycurgus Wagner, of Franklin, was shot in the leg under singular circumstances, a few days ago, near that place. A youth named Robinson, the son of the Rev. L. D. Robinson, was sportively flourishing a pistol at a picnic, when a girl came up and playfully tapped the trigger with a stick. The pistol was by this means discharged, and the bullet buried itself in the limb of Miss Wagner, who was standing near. The bullet has not yet been found by the surgeons, though Miss Wagner suffers no great inconvenience from the wound. It is some satisfaction to know that the young idiot who carried the pistol was taken before the Mayor and fined for carrying concealed weapons.

THE Chicago Tribune, of April 22, has a report of the condition of the crops in Northern Indiana, telegraphed from South Bend, which says: "Parties who have been well over that section of Northern Indiana where winter wheat is usually a large crop, concur in the report that wheat on the numerous small prairies is almost a total failure. Many farmers are already drilling in spring wheat on the fields that were sown last fall with winter wheat. In the cleared timber section, where there was protection from timber, wheat looks well, and will average about a two-third yield. It is estimated that this county will give about half a crop, which is better than the adjoining counties will do. Owing to the low prices last fall, not more than three-fourths the average was sown, as compared with the year before. Corn commanding good prices will cause a larger planting this season than ever before."

German Gymnastic Drill.

In a private letter to a gentleman in New York, the contents of which are furnished to the Cincinnati Gazette by a correspondent, the secret of the success attending the German arms in recent struggles is partially unfolded by a description of the drill under which the soldiers have to pass. The writer witnessed some portions of it while strolling near the barracks outside of Madgeburg. For raw recruits a lot of gun boxes were piled up to a height of four or five feet, and over these the men were required to make handsprings, each one on failing being required to try it again and again until successful. Another squad was practicing a leap over a four foot high pile, touching only with the right hand. Others were springing with the help of the left hand only, and others still without touching either hand. At one side of the drill ground were horizontal bars, and other appliances of the gymnasium, at all of which squads were at exercise, every squad being under the supervision of an officer. In another place was a wall breast high, over which soldiers in full marching order with muskets and knapsacks were leaping, with only the assistance of their left hands. With bayonets fixed they marched to the front of the wall, and halted at the word of command. Then, at another order, each man rested his left hand on the wall, and at another he leaped over, without touching feet or hitting the butt of his musket against the stone. Several times they did thus, and then, from a distance of twelve or fifteen yards, went over it at a run in the same way, by the use of only the left hand. Such exercise as all this gives a man must necessarily make him, in a measure, insensible to the ordinary fatigue of an active campaign, and has also the double effect of keeping the men under strict discipline while improving their physique.

The Seven Wise Men of Greece.

These men are supposed to have lived in the fifth century before Christ. Their names were Pittacus, Bias, Solon, Thales, Chilon, Cleobulus, and Periander. The reason of their being called "wise" is given differently by different authors, but the most approved account states that as some Coans were fishing, certain strangers from Miletus bought whatever should be in the nets without seeing it. When the nets were drawn in, they were found to contain a golden tripod, which Helen, as she sailed from Troy, is supposed to have thrown in there.

A dispute arose between the fishermen and the strangers as to whom it belonged, and as they could not agree they took it to the Temple of Apollo, and consulted the priestess as to what should be done with it.

She said it must be given to the wisest man in Greece, and it was accordingly sent to Thales, who declared that Bias was wiser, and sent it to him.

Bias sent it to another one, and so on until it had passed through the hands of all the men, afterwards distinguished by the title of the "Seven Wise Men," and as each one claimed that some one was wiser than he, it finally was sent to the Temple of Apollo, where, according to some writers, it still remains to teach the lesson that the wisest are the most distrustful of their own wisdom.—Methodist.

THE champion lifter, Mr. L. Barr, is an employee in one of the rolling mills in Indianapolis. He is said to be one of the most powerful men west of the Alleghanies. He often picks up a couple of rails weighing 1,120 pounds for small wagers, and can handle a 560 pound rail easier than most men can handle a fair-sized stick of wood. He is credited with having lifted 1,475 pounds not long since. This modern Samson wears his hair short, is six feet in hight, magnificently proportioned, and has very bright, black eyes.

"AT Vienna," writes a musical correspondent, "we saw a little tenor struggling to carry off a fat soprano, to the amusement of the house, which she made stentorian mirth by turning around, whipping up the tenor and making her exit with him kicking under her arm."

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC

The Old Farm-House.

[illegible]
The homely ways, the ample cheer,
The refuge at my mother's knee
From childhood's every grief and fear,
And hear the memory of those days
Bathed in love's amber atmosphere,
When all our voices rose in praise,
When sire and child were bowed in prayer.
But where are they,
The fond, the gay,
Who filled the great white house in May?

Gone like the birds from last year's nest!
Gone as the leaves in Autumn fly!
Some to the cities of the West;
Some toil beneath an Indian sky;
Some, other prairies sow and reap;
One sank beneath the moaning sea;
Some in the churchyard lie asleep,
And, quivering in the old roof-tree,
One homesick wails
The swing of gates
To waft her to heaven's bright estates!

Around the Farm.

AN ill-bred thoroughbred is the worst animal a farmer can breed from.

EXAMINE branches of fruit trees within reach, and remove everything containing eggs or insects.

TO SAVE PLUMS FROM THE CURCULIO.—The branches of the elderberry bush, hung among the branches of the plum tree, are said to effectually prevent the ravages of the curculio. They also drive away the striped bug from cucumber plants.

IT is a good plan to keep a small field near the barn for growing roots. Even one acre heavily manured and thoroughly tilled would be found very profitable. After two years' thorough culture the expense is greatly lessened. Grow mangolds for cattle and carrots for horses.

FARM out-buildings are not complete until there is room for not only all the products of the farm, but also all the implements and vehicles necessary are provided for, and also a shop where tools can be kept for doing repairs and such jobs in bad weather as the farmer and his help may be able to do.

DR. SYLVESTER, of Lyons, planted his orchard twenty-eight years ago, and from less than ten acres had 1,000 barrels this year. He does not keep stirring the surface because he believes it wastes the fertility. Does not believe in using large quantities of stable manure in the pear orchards, for it would cause blight. If his trees make three inches of wood yearly, he is satisfied.

FOR potatoes and corn, hog manure which contains plenty of well rotted corn cobs is one of the best things I ever used. Cobs contain a great deal of potash, and are extremely useful on soils which are deficient in that material. On almost all kinds of land, and for all farm crops, they are much more valuable than is usually thought, and ought to be carefully saved and used for manure.

IN raising tomatoes for profit plant in rows four feet apart, alternating with rows of peas. The peas protect the tomatoes. The rows should be east and west. When the peas are picked remove the vines and take a light plow and turn a furrow away from the tomatoes. Raise the tomato plants in a seed bed, then set them in a cold bed and let them get stocky and finally take them to the soil.

THE following table of periods which some of the most common seeds require in germinating is given in the Michigan Farmer:

	Days.		Days.
Wheat	1	Beet	6
Millet	1	Purslane	9
Hungarian grass	1	Cabbage	10
Barley	7	Parsley	40 to 50
Spinach	3	Hyssop	30
Beans	3		Years.
Mustard	3	Almond	1
Lettuce	3	Chestnut	1
Aniseed	4	Peach	1
Melon	5	Rose	2
Cress	5	Filbert	2
Cucumber	5	Hawthorn	2

THE DRESSED WEIGHT OF ANIMALS.—Farmers, who have had but little experience in feeding animals for the market, are often disappointed because their beef and pork does not weigh as much as they thought it would. They are likely to overlook certain points which ought always to be taken into account when estimating the dress weight of animals. 1. Age. An old animal will not dress as much in proportion to its looks as a young and growing one. (?) 2. The degree of fatness. A creature well fattened will weigh a great deal more than one equally as large, but which has not been well fattened. 3. Amount of grain which has been fed. An animal which has had twenty or thirty bushels of meal will dress much heavier than one which was in equally good order when the fattening was commenced, and which may look equally well when it is finished, but which has been fed only half as much meal. 4. Length of time in which grain has been fed. A creature which has been mealed for five or six months will weigh more than one which has had about the same quantity of meal, but which has been fed only about half as long. In all cases liberal and long continued feeding is essential to the attainment of any great success in fattening animals of any kind.—New England Homestead.

About the House.

BROWN paper is an excellent thing to polish tin with.

IF you are buying a carpet for durability, you must choose small figures.

WASH-BOILERS that are inclined to rust, may be washed with sweet milk.

VINEGAR WHEY.—Take of milk one pint, vinegar half an ounce; boil for a few minutes, and separate the curd. Excellent for the sick.

HOP YEAST.—One handful of hops, three pints warm water, one cup brown sugar, one cup and a half of flour, one tablespoonful salt, two-thirds cup yeast.

GUM ARABIC mucilage may be prevented from molding or fermenting by the addition of a few drops of sulphuric acid, or better still, of a small portion of quinine.

CURE FOR A FELON.—Take a tablespoonful of fine salt, a tablespoonful of black pepper, a tablespoonful of vinegar, and the the yolk of an egg, simmer together and bind on. Renew twice a day. A never-failing remedy.

TO CEMENT BRASS TO GLASS.—Boil three parts of colophony with one of caustic soda and five of water. The soap or emulsion produced is mixed with half its weight of plaster-paris, zinc white, white lead, or prepared chalk.—Journal of Applied Chemistry.

CHILDREN'S PUDDING.—Children like sweet things, and a nice and simple little pudding can be made for them by taking a pint of sirup and a large lump of butter, let them warm over the fire. Take some slices of baker's bread, let them simmer a few minutes in the sirup, and send to the table warm.

MOTHS IN CARPETS.—Moths will work in carpets in rooms that are kept warm in the winter as well as in the summer. A sure method of removing the pests is to pour strong alum water on the floor to the distance of half a yard around the edges before laying the carpets. Then once or twice during the season sprinkle dry salt over the carpet before sweeping. Insects do not like salt, and sufficient adheres to the carpet to prevent their alighting upon it.

MATCH MATS.—These can be made of ordinary sand paper cut in circular and octagonal shapes, fastened upon pasteboard and bound with bright-colored braids, a ring attached to each and the whole hung near the match-safe for use whenever a match is lighted. The unsightly marks that disfigure many walls may by this inexpensive and simple arrangement be entirely prevented. There should be one in every room in the house.

Give Us a Change.

Give us now a dash of etymology, syntax, or prosody. There has been something too much of this orthography. The spelling match has been productive of no good save to the peddlers of unabridged dictionaries. It has filled the victor with vainglory and the vanquished with consuming envy. There may have been in it fun for the boys, but the fatality among brags has been fearful. People who spelled along in blind confidence now fear to spell at all lest they be caught tripping. What right, anyway, has Noah Webster to set himself up as an authority for the spelling of words? Why may not every man, otherwise entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, be permitted to spell according to the dictates of his own conscience? We agree heartily with Gen. Jackson, who hated the spelling book with an intensity only equaled by Andrew Johnson's love of the constitution without a k. Said the General to a coxcomb critic, "If e-x-t-r-e-a-m doesn't spell extreme what in h— does it spell?" It was the General who originated the cabalistic sign O. K., his abbreviation (are there two b's in abbreviation?) of "oll korrect." We would be glad to enter most cordially upon a defense of the old man's peculiar orthography if Randolph had not already done so, even at the expense of the scholarly Adams. Said Randolph long ago: "It is true Jackson cannot spell. The reason is, he was fighting the British while Webster was making spelling books. Jackson cannot write, because he was not taught. Nor can Adams, either, write well. The reason is, that he was not teachable. Jackson is ignorant, but he could have got over it if he had only had a chance. Adams had a chance, but he was a natural born fool, and he never could get over it."—Chicago Times.

Cold Sleeping Rooms.

Hall's Journal of Health says that cold bed-chambers always imperil health and invite fatal diseases. Robust persons may safely sleep in a temperature of forty or under, but the old, the infant, and the frail, should never sleep in a room where the atmosphere is much under fifty degrees Fahrenheit. All know the danger of going directly into the cold from a very warm room. Very few rooms, churches, theaters and the like, are ever warmer than seventy degrees. If it is freezing out of doors it is thirty degrees—the difference being forty degrees more. Persons will be chilled by such a change in ten minutes, although they may be actively walking. But to lie still in bed, nothing to promote circulation, and breathe for hours an atmosphere of forty and even fifty degrees when the lungs are always at ninety-eight, is too great a change. Many persons wake up in the morning with inflammation of the lungs who went to bed well, and are surprised that this should be the case. The cause may often be found in sleeping in a room the window of which has been foolishly hoisted for ventilation. The water-cure journals of the country have done an incalculable injury by the blind and indiscriminate advice of hoisting the windows at night.

Tunneling the Hudson.

The Hudson Tunnel Railroad Company, that propose to construct a tunnel twenty-six feet in width and twenty-four feet in height under the Hudson river, have organized under the general railroad laws of New Jersey, have raised their own capital, and have gone to work with a vigor that seems to mean business. No subsidy has been asked for, though it is estimated that $10,000,000 will be required for the completion of the work. When it is open for travel, it is expected that, in addition to its ordinary traffic as a public road, 400 trains of cars will be enabled to cross the river daily. Of course various obstacles have been placed in the way of the company, but they urge that their work is necessary to the commerce of New York, and they avow their determination to push ahead. Certainly they have discovered the secret of success so far as all plans for rapid transit are concerned. They rely upon private capital to build the road, and this must be the future of all such schemes. State and city aid for this purpose are things of the past.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The Roll of the Lords.

There are 26 spiritual and 465 temporal Lords upon the roll of the Lords. The total number (491) is one less than the number on the roll of last session. The name of Prince Arthur as Duke of Connaught and Strathearn appears on the roll for the first time. The names of Lord Kildare (now Duke of Leinster) and Lord Panmure disappear. The other changes are but substitutions. The Earl of Clonmell and Lord Castlemaine take the places of the two Irish representative peers deceased; the Bishop of Ely comes into the house on the retirement of the Bishop of St. David's, and Baron Ravensworth is advanced to a place among the Earls. The House of Lords consists of five Princes of the Blood, 28 Dukes, 32 Marquises, 171 Earls, 37 Viscounts, 26 Prelates, and 192 Barons. John Wilson Patton (Lord Winmaleigh) is still the junior Lord.—London Times.

Granger Headquarters!

NO MIDDLE MEN with us; this is the secret of our immense trade. We buy at first hands and sell direct to the consumer; hence, we save our customers the profits of the speculator, jobber and wholesale merchants. These profits amount to from 10 to 20 per cent. Our customers get the benefit of them. Take Teas, for instance, the profits on that article are so great that the price is often doubled before it reaches the consumer. Every time it changes hands there is 10 to 20c. per pound added to it. This, of course, the consumer has to pay. Of course the retailer will endeavor to persuade you that his Teas are worth the money, that they cost him so and so. Well, this is all true, but the trouble is he has paid too much in the first place and can't help himself. He purchases from the wholesale grocer, and the wholesale grocer has to add his 20c. All these extra profits our customers get the benefit of, and it is just the same as Coffees, Sugar,s Spices, Canned Goods, Oysters, &c., as on Teas. No Middle Men with us, They would starve to Death if they had to live on the profits they make of us.

For my part I don't approve of any one purchasing them that can do without them, but it is an admitted fact that there is more money used in the United States for Liquors than for Flour, and for the benefit of those who wish to indulge in the luxury, we will guarantee them a saving of at least 50c on the dollar, and for the sick and invalid our wines and old '76 whiskey cannot be beat.

Conflicting reports about the fruit crop. We think the truth is, that the early fruits have all been killed by the late freeze.

Friends, ask your neighbors who are not taking the COURIER to subscribe for it at once, and pay for the same an entire year in advance.

A jury returned a verdict of 25,000 last week, against Wilber F. Storey, proprietor of the Chicago "Times," for slandering a young lady named Alice Early, of Rockford Ill.

Wisconsin journals say that the name of Ex-senator Carpeter is coming into prominence in connecting with the republican candidacy for Governor.

Last Saturday was one of the dullest days that Auburn has experience for a long, long time. The storm was hard all day, and it was impossible for the farmers to get to town.

At its late session at Elkhart, the Northern Indiana Conference set measurers on foot to endow the Fort Wayne College with $100,000. Subscriptions for the purpose will be solicited.

An elopemen in high life was frusrated in Fort Wayne last Saturday night, through the accidentall dropping of a note by the young lady in the case that explained the arrangements. The old gentleman filled the daugeter's appointments.

J. W. Batterson, and Mr. Moor, of Garret City, were in the city last Friday and gave the COURIER office a visit. They are boys not to be sneezed at, and we are always glad to have such fellows call when they come to the place.

The M. E. Parsonage, occupied by Rev Mr. Welsh, took fire at the rear end, last Friday, but it was discovered before much damage was done. The fire originated from the pipe, used in place of a chimney.

A Missouri Judge delivered a unique death sentence. He said to the candidate for the gallows: "If guilty, you richly deserve the fate that awaits you; if innocent, it will be a gratification for for you to feel that you were hanged without such a crime on your conscience in either case you will be delivered from a world of care."

Holland has twelve thousand windmills in operation, each doing a six or ten horse power service through the twenty-four hours. They are kept up at an annual cost of $4,600,000, and perform all the service required of steam engines at one-twentyeth the cost.

Some of the Assyrian tablets discovered by Mr. George Smith, and presented to the British museum, contain a much larger and fuller account of the creation and fall of man than the Book of Genesis. The fall of Satan, which in the Bible is only assumed of at length in these records.

A Solemn Warning.

Hereafter we shall publish the list of the names of those who go a-fishing on the Lord's day and fail to send us a string of trout. Perch and suckers have too many bones in them to allow us to forget that the moral element of our population look to the press to eradiate the growing descration of the Sabbath—"San Antonio (Tex.) Herald."

An old college Prex. used to say that he would always assign a reason for any official act of his. One day Jones, who was a stupid fellow, went to him and complained that in the distribution of commencement honors, no oration had been assigned for him to deliver, and asked Prex. what reason there was why he was not to speak. "Scriptural reason sir," was the reply; "there is no PIECE for the WEAK HEAD.

A serious unpleasantness exists in the M. E. Church of Huntington, arising out of the removal of B. F. Ibach, as Superintendent of the Sunday school, by the paster, Rev. W. R. Kisler, Ibach in turn going to the Conference at Elkhart, and having Kesler transferred to another charge. It seems the church and Sunday school sustained Kesler, while the Conference sustained Ibach.

On Friday last, two prisoners confined in the county jail at Goshen, sat the building on fire by lighting the straw of their beds. The smoke poured out of the windows in great clouds. The alarm of fire was sounded, and the whole town aroused. Twelve prisoners were locked in the cells, and were nearly suffocated before the flames were extinguished.—"Lagrange Standard."

The mad-stone has at last had its existence, if not its efficacy, legally recognized. In the District Court at Georgetown, Texas, "Dr." David F. Knight, sued a patient to recover fees for applying a mad-stone to certain wounds said to have been caused by the bite of a rabid dog. The defense pleaded that the application of a mad-stone was not legitimate practice, and after some delibration. the jury disagreed.

His ways is above our ways. We complain of cold weather this Spring as though cold weather at an usual time of year was an unmixed evil. How do we know but what we consider a calamity is a blessing in disguise. Who know? Doubtless this cold weather in the Spring was sent to kill off the grasshoppers in Kansas, and the Colorado bugs throughout the country; and to rid us of other vermin. This cheerful view of the matter should put an end to grumbling, and unable us to forego the luxuries of the season without a murmer.

The Parker House was taken by storm on Monday last but was found equal to the emergency. About 11 o'clock the proprietors was informed that a large number of Odd Fellows would take dinner there, so they immediately sat to work and by one o'clock a table accommodating about thirty guests was in readiness, laden with the choisest eatables, such as the Park House is noted for. The table was over four times filled there being about a hundred and thirty provided with dinners.—"Hickville Independent.

Horace Maynare, is a good man for the Constantinople mission. He'll be a safe man to have around the harem. He's so ghostly in feature and awkward in figure that there is litile likelihood of the festive female getting struck with him. But there's danger, while he wears his hair in tresses that trail down his neck and around his shoulder not unlike the wild and wierd grape vine on a jack oak that has been discouraged in early growth by an abortive attempt at "girdling."

The accounts of the wheat crop of this county are very cheering. Our exchanges from every quarter report the prospects are flattering, and asfar as we have learned, from the farmers of this county, we have the promise of a good crop. It was feared that the incelement weather would destroy the germs; but the heavy snows kept them warm. Some weeks ago, the prospects was unfavorable, but the recent warm days has spred out the "mantle of green," and with a favorable season from this to harvest, the yield will be abundant, and business in towns and cities will revive correspondingly.—"Peru Sentinel."

A Lanchaster, South Carolina, polygamist, was sentenced in the following words: "James Martin, the court is credibly informed that you have six wives now living in Lanchaster county. The law does not tolerate such a monopoly, but the court recognizes, as a mitigating circumstance in your case, the fact that you dwell in this vast solitude, and you may thereby have been impressed with the belief that you live in patriarchal times, and you may thus have multiplied your marriages to relieve the loneliness of the situation. The court, therefore, imposes upon you the mildest sentence permitted by the statute, one month for each wife."

A Gentleman who was the owner of a pet monkey and a parrot, had occasion to leave home for a half an hour or so, leaving the monkey and parrot in a room together. Upon his return what was his surprise to see the monkey in the middle of the room drancing up and down, on a bunch of green feathers, and displaying a couple of wings in his hands. The man, of course, supposed that the parrot had got killed by the monkey, but what was his surprise when in a few moments, the parrot walked out from under the washstand, without a feathered upon him, and exclaimed in a "sotto voice" "Hello! We have been having a h— of a time since you left."

The Wabash "Plaindealer" says: Nearly all of our exchanges in Northern Indiana, are investing to a considerable extent for Fort Wayne dry goods and grocery estableshments. We prefer to help our own merchants sell goods, but we don't expect to publish a paper without advertising patronage. If our merchants and business men are disposed to be "penny wase and pound foolish," and dispense with the use of printer's ink, we shall endeavor to procure advertising from abroad—even though it may "fravel us," to houl down our motto of "patronizing home institutions."

We desire to make the COURIER a lively local paper and to that end we solicit contributations from all and any, who may desire to write upon any subject of general interest. Provided they can take a little time in the preparation of articles and not "scratch them off in a hurry," leaving us to re-write, spell punctuate, &c. Write but on one side of the sheet—write plainly, punctuate, &c., and write nothing personal that would tend to wound the feelings of any one. Persons who think an editor has nothing to do, and can, just as will correct their manuscript as not, are sadly mistaken. Our time is constantly emploped and whenever we have to take fifteen minutes or more to do work that should have been done by others, it just takes that much of our time that should have been enployed in something else.

George W. Lawrence, Esq., of Union townshid, met with an accident which it is possile may prove fatal, while returning home from church last Sunday evening. He was alone and on horse back, and when opposit thd Pittsburgh depot his horse became frightened at the smoke of an engine which was standing at the water tank, and rearing upright, fell backwards upon Mr. Lawrence, thereby forcing the pommel of the saddle into his abdoman, and causing severe internal injuries. He succeeded in reaching home unaided, and is suffering comparitively little pain at present, though the final issue of his injuries is by no means certain.—Columbia City Post.

Preparing for Specie Payments.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with the law to prepare for the resumption of specie payments, is making large purchases of silver, over 2,000,000 ounces have been bought at San Francisco, and Carson City, and a part of the purchases will be transferred to New York and Philadelhia for refining Silver is lower to day than it has been for years. By the 15th of August all mints will be running at full capacity in coining silver for the redemption of fractional currency. The dies for the new twenty-cent pieces will be ready for use by the middle of August. The Treasury Department anticipates large shipments of gold from Europe.

Profanity

We are emphatically in the age of profanity, and it seems to us that we are on the topmost current. One cannot go on the streets anywhere without having his ears offended with the vile words and his reverence shocked by the most profane use of scared names. Nor does it come from the old men or middleaged alone, but is a fact, as alarming as true that the younger portion of the community are most proficient in the degrading language. Boys have an idea that it is smart to swear; that it makes them manly but there is never a greater mistake in the world. Men, even those who swear themselves, are disgusted with profanity in young men, because they know how, of all habits, this clings the most closely and increases with years. It is the most incidious of habits, growing on so invsibly that almost before one is aware he becomes an accomplished curser.

It is telegraphed over the country that the Supreme Court of the United States will not render any decision of a political nature during this term, but "will postpone all such until after the fall elections." Why? Is the highest Court in the land nothing better than the tool of a political party? Is justice to be delayed and are men to be deprived of their rights in this Court Supreme at the bidding of Grant or the Grant party? Have the Court decisions in contemplation which will ruin the republican party Has the conduct of the republican party been so lawless that the Supreme Court dare not pronounce upon it before elections? Evidently yes, for if the Court intended to give any decision that would aid the republican party they wouldn't delay them until after elections. The confession that the Supreme Court has been prostituted to political purposes will not be forgotton.

THE EAST.

THE Chicago pedestrian, O'Leary, has just accomplished at Philadelphia the extraordinary feat of walking 116 miles in 23 hours and 8 minutes. This is the best time on record.

A SERIOUS collision occurred Monday last on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, near Washington, by which nine persons were badly injured, and several slightly. Both engines and a number of cars were demolished by the collision.... A lawsuit involving property valued at $60,000,000 has been commenced at New York by the heirs of what is known as the Waldron estate, granted to Baron Resolvent Waldron by Gov. Stuyvesant in 1654. The lands in dispute have been reclaimed from the waters of the harbor by the city authorities.

THE imposing ceremonies of conferring the beretta, or red cap, on Cardinal McCloskey took place on Tuesday last, at St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York city. The attendance of church dignitaries was very numerous, and the services of a most solemn and impressive character. The spectators were so densely packed that they could not even kneel. The special envoy of the Pope delivered his message amid the fumes of incense and joyous chants—and now America has a bright-robed Cardinal.... Mrs. Mary Dennehey, who was supposed to have been killed by the cars in Boston, is now believed to have been strangled to death by John Dennehey, aided and abetted by others, and her body placed on the railroad track to avoid suspicion.

THE Allegheny County Workhouse, near Pittsburgh, was partially destroyed by fire last week. Out of 350 prisoners, some few escaped. The loss will exceed $50,000.

A DESPERATE fight between miners and officers is reported from Wilkesbarre, Pa. One of the latter was mortally, and another seriously, wounded.... George H. Greeley, bookkeeper for J. S. Emery & Co., ship brokers, of Boston, has been arrested, and turns out to be a defaulter to the extent of from $15,000 to $20,000.

THE WEST.

THE dramatic company of Manager McVicker, of Chicago, will make a Western tour during the first two weeks of May, playing at St. Paul, LaCrosse, and Minneapolis.

ST. LOUIS has lost by death her recently elected Mayor, Hon. Arthur B. Barrett.... Advices from the West give details of a bloody fight with the Cheyennes at Monument, Kan., 386 miles west of Kansas City. Lieut. Hinley, of company H, with United States troops, attacked a band of the Cheyennes forty miles from Monument, on the forks of Tappa river, and, after a running fight of two hours, dispersed them, killing twenty-seven and capturing over 100 ponies. Lieut. Papier and private Trems fell in the engagement, being fatally wounded. Thirty-three Indians escaped, and it is feared that they will return and inflict vengeance on innocent settlers. To prevent this the troops will keep close watch on their movements, and, if discovered, they will be immediately captured.

THE Chicago papers state that it is probable that the new Custom-House in that city will have to be begun over again. The new Superintendent of the work has discovered some serious defects in its construction—defects of such a nature as to lead to the supposition that the building will tumble down if carried much higher.... The fifty-sixth anniversary of Odd-Fellowship (April 26) was generally celebrated by members of the order throughout the West. .... Advices from the Pacific Coast convey the sad news of the drowning in Puget's Sound of the entire theatrical troupe of Mr. J. A. Sawtelle, well known throughout the West. They embarked during a severe gale in a small tug-boat for Port Madison, from Seattle, Washington Territory. A large number of people stood on the dock, watching the tug. She went out into the roaring sea, which was tossing like mad, and was engulfed in a few moments. The company consisted of Mr. Sawtelle, his wife, and little "Vivia," Mrs. Fannie Morgan Phelps, Miss Lizzie Moran, Mr. Jerry Crowell, and others.

IN the tournament of Western and Southern billiard players at Chicago, for prizes offered by the Brunswick & Balke Billiard Table Manufacturing Company, the following disposition of the prizes has been made: The diamond star championship badge and first prize of $500 to Henry Miller, of New Orleans; the second prize of $400 to William Burleigh, of Grand Rapids; the third prize of $300 to Henry Rhines, of Chicago; the fourth prize of $250 to L. McAffee, of Davenport; the fifth prize of $175 to Eugene Carter, of Toledo; the sixth prize of $125 to Thomas J. Gallagher, of Cleveland; the last prize, a fine pair of No. 11 brogans, to walk home in, to Harry Liverman, of La Crosse.

THE principal part of the city of Oshkosh, Wis., has been destroyed by fire. The fire commenced among the saw mills, and then swept the entire length of Main street, burning the Opera-House, hotels, stores, etc., and rendering hundreds of families homeless. The dreary waste caused by the flames is a mile and a half long and about half a mile wide, and in all that area there is not a single building standing. The loss will probably exceed $2,000,000.

A TRAIN on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad, endeavoring to make up four hours' lost time caused by a break in the track in Iowa, made the trip from Mendota, Ill., to Aurora (fifty-six miles) in the unprecedented time of fifty-six minutes. Eighty miles were gone over in one hour and fifty-one minutes. The total distance run, subtracting stops for dinner, watering and passengers, averaged a mile in less than a minute and a half.... The factory of the Weber Furniture Company, at Detroit, with a dozen adjoining dwellings, was recently consumed by fire, causing a total loss of $350,000. The company employed 130 men.... Another expedition, consisting of fifty wagons and about 275 men, left Sioux City for the Black Hills last week.... Maria Nelson, a young unmarried Danish woman, of Chicago, recently gave birth to twins, which she smothered and sewed up in a blanket, and then threw into the river. The woman is under arrest, and has made a confession.

THE SOUTH.

A SHOCKING disaster, resulting in large loss of life, is reported from New Orleans. The steamer John Kyle, one of the largest Mississippi steamers, while lying at the levee, was discovered to be on fire. As soon as the alarm was sounded people rushed to the scene, and some 150 went on board the steamer Exporter to view the fire. The Kyle was soon cut loose and the eddy floated her up stream. About the same time B. F. Burch, mate of the Lizzie Taylor, fearing that his vessel would be burned, cut the Exporter's cable, which was the most unfortunate thing that could have been done. The Exporter, crowded with people, most of them citizens, drifted after the burning Kyle, and the moment she touched was in a blaze, quite a distance from the shore. A terrible scene ensued. In an instant those on board the Exporter became aware of their position, and had a choice of two alternatives—either to take the chances of the water or remain and be burned. As far as is known, all jumped into the river, having thrown the stages and such things overboard. Many were so badly frightened that they did not know what to do, and acted without deliberation. There were several women on board, and it was difficult to induce them to go into the water, even when it was plain to all of them that the boat would so certainly be destroyed. On the Kyle the disaster was not so great, as there were not many people on board. However, the scenes and incidents were terrible. All on board were compelled to jump overboard. The steamer Charles Bodman was also burned. The loss of life is variously estimated at from thirty to fifty, and may even reach higher than the latter figure.

COL. E. M. YERGER, well-known in connection with the killing of Col. Crane, at Jackson, Miss., but for some time editor and proprietor of the Baltimore Gazette, died in the latter city last week.... An interesting test of anthracite coal found in Johnson county, Ark. has been made at St. Louis. Competent judges pronounced one ton of it to be equal to two tons of the best Pittsburgh coal.

ALL the Southern cities are taking sanitary preventive measures against the yellow fever.

THE postoffice at Carizoo, Texas, was recently robbed and plundered by Mexican marauders, and Dr. Lovell, the Postmaster, killed.... Dr. John Bull, proprietor and maker of well-known patent medicines, by which he had amassed a very large fortune, died suddenly at his residence in Louisville, of congestion of the brain, a few days ago.... Memorial services over the graves of the Confederate dead were held throughout the South on April 26.

A MEMPHIS telegram states that planters are complaining greatly of the unprecedented destruction of mules, horses, and cattle by the buffalo gnats. It is estimated that within the past ten days $100,000 worth of stock has been killed by them within a radius of 100 miles from that city, and the consequence has been a heavy advance in the price of mules and horses.... The Internal Revenue Bureau has been advised of an extensive system of illicit distilling in South Carolina. Five hundred gallons of illicit whisky are sold openly per day in one district. These sales are made in public from covered wagons, occupied by desperadoes, who shoot down government officers who approach their places of concealment. Two Deputy Collectors were shot down last week while attempting to make arrests.... The Common Council of Baltimore have passed a law prohibiting fortune-tellers from plying their vocation in that city.

BY the burning of the residence of Mrs. Lucy Bakewell, at Shelbyville, Ky., last week, the valuable library of the great naturalist, Audubon, was totally destroyed.... The Southern railroads are still engaged in their war for Southern travel, and the rate from New Orleans to New York is now $35—$15 less than former rates. The rates to Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia have been reduced a similar amount.

WASHINGTON.

THE Secretary of the Treasury has made an entirely new classification of the Collectors' Divisions. They are arranged in seven divisions. Alton, Quincy and St. Louis, of Western cities, are in the third division; Omaha, Burlington, Keokuk, Dubuque, Chicago, Milwaukee, and the eastern lake ports are in the sixth division.... The Washington people think that the visit of the Papal Envoys here may have some connection with the selection of a suitable location for the Holy See, and that if the Pope should ever leave Italy he will locate in that city.

THE Internal Revenue Bureau is making arrangements to bring suit for $20,000 on the bond of Frederick A. Sawyer, late Assistant-Secretary of the Treasury, ex-United States Senator, and formerly Collector of Internal Revenue in South Carolina.... The Mexican raids into Texas was the subject of discussion at a Cabinet meeting the other day. No formal conclusion was reached, but it is understood that a note of protest will soon be prepared and presented to the Mexican government.

THE TILTON-BEECHER TRIAL.

SEVENTY-FOURTH DAY.—The examination of H. M. Cleveland was concluded, and Frank Moulton was recalled to rebut the evidence of Partridge. Moulton denied positively that he ever had the conversation recited by the former regarding Tilton's reason for writing the life of Woodhull. Partridge was then recalled, and reiterated his story.

SEVENTY-FIFTH DAY—S. W. Partridge and Edward Wright, a cashier in Stewart's dry goods store, were called, but their testimony was comparatively unimportant. The next witness, Mrs. Palmer, a practical free-lover and spiritualist, created quite a sensation by her singular testimony. She testified that spirits were constantly flitting about, and glibly called the fanciful roll of the visionary adherents of the parties to the trial. According to her version, all the departed are not agreed, for some favor Beecher and others Tilton. Gen. B. F. Tracy occupied the witness stand at the time of adjournment.

SEVENTY-SIXTH DAY.—J. F. St. George was the only witness called. He swore that Tilton occupied the same carriage with Woodhull and Claflin in the Communistic procession in 1871.

SEVENTY-SEVENTH DAY.—Lawyer Tracy detailed his history of the case, and his consultations with Moulton and Tilton. He volunteered the statement that he might perhaps have said to Moulton and Tilton, if there was any lie at all in denying the Woodhull scandal story, essentially false as they both told him it was, the lie was of such a character that he would not hesitate to take the responsibility of it, if it related to his own family.

SEVENTY-EIGHTH DAY.—Gen. Tracy's direct testimony was concluded, and his cross-examination commenced by Mr. Beach. Sometimes Tracy was doubtful, and Beach volunteered to wait while he was making up his mind. He would not answer directly, "But I will tell you what occurred." Beach would retort, "When I want that I will ask you. Now answer my question." And once counsel said, dropping the subject, "Well, if you can't answer, we'll get somebody else that will?" It is intimated that Gen. Butler will be called to rebut a part of Tracy's evidence.

POLITICAL.

BOTH houses of the Louisiana Legislature have adjourned. In the Senate the resolution suspending Auditor Clinton from office was postponed till 1876. But few if any of the reform measures were finally passed. A bill appropriating $117,000 for the expenses of an extra session, etc., passed. Bills were passed reducing the expenses of the Metropolitan police from $600,000 to $499,000 per annum; restricting the publication of laws to the official journals of the State, heretofore published in several parish papers. This bill saves the State $100,000 per annum.

FINANCE AND TRADE.

Weekly Review of the Chicago Market.

FINANCIAL.

The money market remains in the same condition as noted for some time past. Demand for loans and accommodations rather light, with interest rates unchanged. Eastern exchange firmer. Government bonds firm and in good demand with offerings light. Gold, 114¾@115¼.

BREADSTUFFS.

The grain markets have attracted considerable attention both from local speculators and also from outside operators. Quite an active speculative business was transacted, the favorite options being May and June. Trading continues mainly on speculative account, the shipping interest doing but very little in the way of buying. The few charters made during the week were on the basis of 4c for corn to Buffalo, an unusually low rate, but with the supply of vessels in excess of the demand. There is no margin for shippers to work on, and they are therefore inclined to use considerable caution in their movements. The reports received from various sections of the interior note poor prospects for the winter wheat crop, and numerous buying orders were received for wheat; values have been very irregular, although the closing quotations generally show a decline as compared with the figures current at the opening. Since the 20th inst. corn has been coming forward freely, the dropping on the word "new" in the inspection making the corn deliverable on May contracts. Local distillers and shippers are buying "new No. 2," as it answers their purpose fully as well as No. 2, the only difference being in the name. Oats have been comparatively firm, the demand being fairly active. Rye has been firm and higher. Barley also met with a good order and speculative demand at full prices.

The following tables shows the prices current at the opening and close of the past week:

Cranberries were dull at $9.00@11.50 for common to choice cultivated. Dried peas quiet at $2.00@2.10 for choice green and $1.70@1.80 for marrowfat. Eggs closed steady at 12½@13c. Feathers remain quiet at 48@52c per pound for prime live geese, and 30@35c for choice turkey tail feathers. Apples were dull, with the offerings largely in excess of the demand; choice straight lots of Eastern sold in a small way at about $2.75, but round lots were generally disposed of at $2.00@2.25. Common about $1.00@1.50. Hides were quiet at 7@7½c for green, 5c for grubby, 8c for heavy green salted, and 8½c for light do. Hops remain dull and quiet at 33 and 40c per lb for good to choice. Honey was dull and weak at 20@25c per lb in combs, and 10½c for strained. COOPERAGE, LUMBER, AND WOOD.

There was a fair demand for cooperage, and the market ruled steady at about former prices. Quotable at $1.10 for pork barrels, $1.35 for lard tierces, $1.90@2.00 for whisky barrels, and 45@55c for flour barrels. There were a number of cargoes of lumber on the market, but the demand continues good and prices were well maintained. Quotations range at $15.00@30.00 for fair to choice "A" stock boards; $11@12.00 for common boards and scantling 18 to 20 feet. Shingles, $3@3.25 per 1,000 for A sawed. Lath, $2@2.25. The "Tramp" Printer.

Spring has come and the tramp looks longingly Westward, for festivity and plunder. A tramp—by profession—now in New York, has been so often swinging through the circle that it is said he can now set type handsomely for the Cherokee Nation's paper; while a Philadelphia tramp is known as having set many thousand ems in an old Dutch settlement in Ohio, where especially fine gin is distilled which pays no tax and is certainly in respect to price, "the poor man's friend." Fun, isn't it? A characteristic tramp is he of the festive nature, who walks into a town tired, hungry, solemn, sober and penniless; poor but respectable; shabby, but very skillful; shoeless, but with a good understanding; all but hatless, with a remarkable idea-box. He applies for work. "Sober?" "Yes." "Know your business?" "Yes." "Been here before?" "No." Got any recommendations?" "Lots of 'em." "All right, go to work." Sedately and calmly he labors until he gets his two weeks pay; then comes a change to the spirit of his dream. He gathereth together the other devotees at the shrine of Bacchus, and not only incapacitates himself for further work, but demoralizes and all but paralyzes for a time the entire printing interests of the town. Then it is that editors and proprietors and boys and girls have to get out the paper, as the festive tramp having done all the damage he can, moves for new worlds to conquer. In this way a tramp will bring destruction on a half-dozen offices, and smash more temperance pledges in two weeks than are signed in a year.—American Newspaper Reporter.

A Duel on Horseback.

The Myo (California) Independent has the following: Quite a chivalrous episode occurred at Round Valley on Wednesday last. As the matter was to have been judicially investigated at Big Pine yesterday, we will await that report before giving full particulars. A row had taken place between T. D. Lewis and W. T. Wiswall, at the ranch of the former, all about some hogs. As no satisfactory solution of the difficulty could be attained by a war of words and fists, Wiswall retired from the field of action with the avowed intention of coming back better prepared for business. He did so, reappearing a short time after, armed with a six-shooter. Lewis, armed with a shot-gun, mounted his war-horse and sallied forth to meet him. Maneuvering a short time for position, both parties opened fire. Lewis' shot did no good, but Wiswall's took effect in the neck of his opponent's horse, cutting the bridle rein at the same time, together rendering him unmanageable. But the Lewis banner still floated defiantly to the breeze, and continued to do so, even after a shot from the enemy had taken effect near the sciatic plexus, or that portion of the body nearest the cantle of the saddle. This was unpleasant, but not sufficient to prevent the wounded men, then dismounted, from firing another broadside, with the effect of bringing the action to a close, the enemy drawing off, but still unharmed. It was a well contested little tournament, and this system for settling hog difficulties may become quite popular. Lewis' wound is quite severe, but not considered particularly dangerous.

The Staff of Life.

Two thousand years ago Hippocrates, the "father of medicine," who depended far more on correct diet and general regimen both for the prevention and removal of disease, than he did on medicine, particularly commended the unbolted wheat meal for bread. The ancient wrestlers, who were trained for great bodily power, ate only the coarse wheaten meal bread to preserve the strength of their limbs. Pliny tells us that the Spartans, during the period when they were most remarkable for bodily vigor and personal powers, knew no other bread for three hundred years.

Near the close of the last century, when England and France were waging war with each other, the British Parliment passed a law, to take effect for two years, that the army at home should be supplied with bread made from unbolted wheat meal, solely for the purpose of making the wheat go as far as possible. At first the soldiers were exceedingly displeased with this kind of bread and refused to eat it, but after two or three weeks they preferred it to fine flour bread. The result of the experiment was that the health of soldiers improved so much and so manifestly in the course of a few months that the officers and physicians of the army publicly declared that the soldiers were never before so healthy and robust, and that diseases of many kinds had almost entirely disappeared from the army. For a while the use of this bread was almost universal in public institutions and in private families, and it was pronounced by the civic physicians by far the most healthy bread that could be eaten. The testimony of sea-captains and whalemen is equally in favor of wheaten bread. "The coarser my ship bread is, the healthier is my crew," said a very intelligent sea-captain of over 30 years' experience. The inhabitants of Westphalia, who are a hardy and robust people, capable of enduring the greatest fatigues, are a living testimony to the salutary effects of this sort of bread; and it is remarkable that they are very seldom attacked by acute fevers, and those other diseases which arise from bad humors. In fact the laboring class throughout Europe, Asia and Africa use bread made of the whole grain; happily for them they cannot afford to buy fine flour.

The most intelligent class of people in our large cities have bread made of unbolted wheat on their tables every day, and depend upon it; but in country places the idea prevails that it is cheap and coarse, and that to feed a guest on Graham bread would be inhospitality. Nothing can be further from the truth. Our first-class hotels have regularly on their bills of fare "cracked wheat," "homminy," "oatmeal mush;" and some advanced teachers of hygiene are beginning to hope that the reign of fine flour is passing away.

In preparing articles of food from the whole wheat, very much of their palatableness depends on the manner in which they are compounded. Bread of unbolted flour should be molded soft and baked quite hard. It may be raised just as bread of fine flour is raised, with yeast, with sour milk and soda, with yeast powder, or, best of all, most palatable and nutritious, be mixed with milk and water in equal proportions and baked in "gem pans" in a very hot oven. This is the most wholesome form in which wheat can be made into bread.—New York Tribune.

A Rattlesnake Fight.

A man living near Santa Rosa, Cal., was the witness of a terrible contest between two rattlesnakes, one morning last August. The snakes were wrapped around each other from the tail to within six or eight inches of the head, and never for a moment did they take their eyes off each other. Now and then they would slowly unwind to within one or two coils of the tail, when, with an instantaneous movement, they would again become involved to the neck, and with jaws distended and fangs exposed, one would strike at the other, his antagonist invariably dodging at the blow, when in turn he would be foiled. After repeating their manœuvers for a time they would lie panting in each other's coils, and then slowly and cautiously unwind, only to repeat the involvement and striking again. So fiercely did they embrace each other that one would think surely the life would be crushed out. Blow after blow was struck on both sides, but never once was an adversary so far caught off his guard as to receive a blow They had been fighting over a space of fifteen or twenty feet, as evinced by their tracks in the dust. To all appearances they had been fighting all night, every inch of ground bearing marks of the conflict. After looking at them for some time the man cut a pole, some eight or ten feet long, and just then another man came up. He took the pole, and approaching the snakes, they simultaneously discovered him, when, loosening their hold of each other with marvelous rapidity, the larger one rushed at him, perfectly furious; it required the second blow to stop him. In a moment after, the second started after the other witness of the fight as his now dead antagonist had done, when he, too, was slain by a well-directed blow. One had sixteen and the other fifteen rattles.

Novel Devise for Transmitting Power.

Upon the ceiling, or in some convenient place, are hung two cast-iron disks, or hemispheres, securely clamped together. Between the two is an elastic diaphragm having a piston secured to the center. The piston passes through a hole in the lower disk, and is geared to a crank, or a short piece of shafting. From each disk extends a common rubber tube. These are united at any convenient distance with a small air-tight cylinder with a piston. On applying power, the diaphragm is driven rapidly up and down, and the air above and below it is alternately compressed and rarefied. This impulse passes, with little loss by friction, through the pipes, and the piston in the cylinder is alternately sucked up and driven down. As there is two pipes, the movement is reciprocal, and the piston moves with nearly the same power, and at a speed corresponding with the movement of the diaphram. There is no exhaust, no discharge, and no new supply of air. Even a leak does no harm, except to waste the power, and the cylinder will work in whatever position it is placed, so long as the pipes are clear. This device has been used in cutting cloth in a wholesale clothing house, and it is said to work satisfactory.—Scribner for May.

Co-operation in England.

The co-operative societies of England have recently held their annual congress, which was presided over by Prof. Thorold Rogers of Oxford, and it is apparent that co-operation is making much more headway in England than in this country. Both in trade and in production, many of the co-operative societies are doing a thriving business at a good profit. Co-operative stores in the manufacturing districts of Lancashire accumulate profits of one or two million dollars in a few years. The Scottish wholesale co operative company had cleared $70,000 in the past year. These stores buy and sell at the market rates and divide the profits among the stockholders, instead of selling at a nominal profit. Perhaps the most extensive operation of the principle was reported from Oldham, in which town the co-operative societies had a membership of 12,000; some of these [illegible] building societies and had built and sold to artisans at cost price 300 cottages; others were doing an annual business of $1,500,000 in flour; others were in retail trade, and others still were in cotton manufacture, there being 60 co-operative mills with a capital of $18,000,000. The Manchester Equitable Co-operative Society was established fourteen years ago, and it has divided meantime, besides good dividends, $240,000 in bonuses. The statistics of the societies in Great Britain show that they now number more than 400,000 members and divide annually in profits $37,000,000. Here is work for our Sovereigns and Grangers to aim at.

Burn Kerosene the Right Way.

A correspondent of the New York Sun calls attention of all consumers of kerosene oil to the pernicious and unhealthy practice of using lamps filled with that article with the wicks turned down. The gas which should be consumed by the flames is by this means left heavily in the air, while the cost of the oil thus saved at present prices would scarcely be one dollar a year for the lamps of a household. His attention was called particularly to this custom by boarding in the country where kerosene was the only available light. A large family of children living in the same house were taken ill one night, and on going to the nursery the mother found the room nearly suffocating, with a lamp turned down, whereupon the physician forbade the use of a lamp at night, unless turned at full head. He said he could quote many cases, one of a young girl subject to fits of faintness, which if not induced, were greatly increased by sleeping in a room with the lamp almost turned out. Besides the damage to health, it spoils the paper and curtains, soils the mirrors and windows, and gives the whole house an untidy air and an unwholesome odor.

A Queer Case.

The Gainesville (Texas) Sun publishes the following singular, but doubtless true story: "Last Saturday two men named Henson and Johnson while here both became slightly under the influence of liquor. While going home they got into a dispute, in which Henson called Johnson a liar. Johnson instantly seized his Spencer rifle, which hung to the horn of his saddle, and shot Henson, the bullet entering through the top of the hip bone, passing nearly through the body and lodging in the other side. Henson rode on for a few steps and fell from his horse. Johnson was at once stricken with remorse, and wept piteously over his victim. He then turned to go, when Henson gave him his horse as being the best to get away on, and told him to go to Mexico. The two men then bade each other an affectionate farewell, and Johnson left. Henson was carried home that evening, where he has since been lying in a very critical condition, although some hopes are entertained of his recovery. The two men had been fast friends for years."

The Civil Rights Bill in North Carolina.

In a recent trial at Greensboro, N. C., Judge Dick, of that State, declined to express any opinion as to the constitutionality of the Civil Rights bill—believing such a course premature—but expressed a concurrence in the construction of the law adopted by the Ohio courts. He holds to the opinion that the act gives the colored man no rights in North Carolina that he did not possess under the old statute laws, with the exception of trial in the United States courts, if he so elect. He was positive as to the right of the State to regulate the marriage question, and held that the law only applied to railroads, steamboats, hotels, and theaters, and did not necessarily place negroes and whites together in these, but only entitled the colored man to the same accommodation as the white man if he can afford it. Separate apartments and coaches could be designated for each race, and neither could infringe upon the rights of the other.

A MAN in Baltimore called on a grave-digger one day to have his wife's grave sodded. He was an extremely penurious man, and higgled a long time over the price of the sodding. Suddenly he became mute, while his eyes were fixed upon a neighboring tombstone. His daughter and the grave-digger stood back in respect for the feelings of the old gentleman, in whose mind they supposed the sight of that tablet had called up the memory of a dear departed friend, for grief was depicted in his countenance, and he was visibly agitated. At length the deep emotion which swelled his bosom found vent in this pathetic outburst: "My God! when did that man die? He owes me two hundred dollars, and I'll never see a cent of it!"

WRUNG HIM OUT.—On Randolph street yesterday, when a crowd had collected around a boy who had been run over and badly hurt, a man rose up and said.

"I'm sorry enough to cry but I haven't time. I want to call your attention to my new patent clothes-wringer, which is warranted to—"

At that point he came down on the pavement, several parties stepped on him, and as he was being sponged off in a drug store he inquired:

"Is this Texas or Michigan?"—Detroit Free Press.

Two brothers, one of whom fought on the federal and the other on the rebel side during the war, met at Columbia, Tennessee, the other day, after fifteen year's separation, but would not recognize each other, and separated again without speaking.

GOSSIP OF THE DAY.

The Welshmen in Cincinnati have been engaging in a spelling-match, the orthography of their own beautiful tongue being the subject of their endeavors. Two of the hard words were Daddychweledigaethan and Llanystumdwy.

Mr. Carruth, the Vineland (N. J.) editor has nearly recovered, and it is likely that he will soon be as well as usual, excepting that the bullet remains in his head. It is reported that there are two other persons living in Vineland with bullets in their brains. Good place to raise a regiment for the next war.

In a space of ten years not much less than two millions of British subjects have left their native land. Some went to Australia, some to Canada, and more to the United States. Until lately the Irish emigrants were in excess of the English or Scotch. Since 1869, however, the respective rates are reversed.

The New York Times of a recent date, in a review of the financial situation, says of the outlook: "The voice of the croakers is growing fainter, and we are likely to enter the centennial with a degree of prosperity that will reflect credit upon the enterprise and recuperative ability of the American people." So mote it be.

At a recent spelling match in Saratoga a gentleman offered a library, worth $160, to anybody who would spell correctly the following sixteen words: "Bas, Llama, Eteve, (dropped), Emeute, Tureen, Demesnial, Eau de Vie, Banister, Scirrhosity, Pharmacopœia, Esquisse, Eleemosynary, Caoulchouc, Cyclostylar, Ipecacuanha, Ticdouloureux." The liberal gentleman still has his library.

President Grant, in authorizing a denial of the report that Minister Washburne had been instructed by our government to request the French government to resume diplomatic relations with Mexico, makes public a fact which has not hitherto been officially known, namely: that at one time Gen. Sheridan was in readiness, and under waiting orders, with a considerable force, to march upon Mexico against Maximilian and the French troops.

An army officer, who has just returned to Washington from a fort near the Black Hills country, says that the mining adventurers are following a "will-of-the-wisp;" that if they escape the military they will certainly be destroyed by the Sioux. This officer has had special jurisdiction over a considerable portion of the Sioux country, and speaks from personal knowledge when he says that that tribe has never been more determined upon any subject than it now is to prevent the entering of white settlers into the Black Hills country in violation of the treaty.

That the Grand Centennial at Philadelphia will be a new wonder of the world is true beyond a doubt. All the curiosities of life, animal, human and vegetable; all the results of study and professional skill; all the big cheeses and little dogs; all that art can create or science develop, will be there; and among these, there will be present William Squires, of Oregon, the modern Noah, who by that time will have constructed and equipped a fac-simile of the original ark, of the same wood as used by the first shipwright. All who wish to escape the deluge of noise can take refuge in this vessel.

Official statistics show that 260,814 immigrants arrived in this country during 1874. Of these, 2,645 were of professional occupations; 32,482 skilled laborers; 101,318 of various trades and occupations, and 122,458 of no occupation, a classification including women and children. Some of the minor divisions under the professional head are interesting, as the notation that there arrived 1 billiard-player, 1 equestrian, 1 letter-carrier, 1 omnibus carrier, 1 pensioner, and 2 bath-keepers. Six authors, 133 actors, 120 artists and 381 clergymen came over.

In speaking of the signature of John C. New, which looks like a bundle of fishhooks, an exchange says: "How in the world Mr. New could have studied up such a combination of involved and labyrinthine lines, and at the same time devoted time enough during his less than fifty years of life to accumulating the handsome fortune of which he is possessed, is a deeper mystery than the signature. If we reason by analogies, it might be said that, as a thousand years would be required to decipher the tangle, so the man that invented it must have been born so long ago that he might have taken flying matches with the pterodactyl. Mr. New can go down to posterity as the great chirographist of this or any other age."

A Catholic statistician claims that out of the 40,000,000 of souls in the United States, 5,761,242 are Roman Catholics. They occupy 6,920 stations, chapels, and churches; and they have the service of 4,873 priests, six apostolic vicars, forty-nine bishops, nine archbishops, and one cardinal. That they are increasing rapidly is quite obvious. They already have eighteen theological schools, or seminaries, with nearly 1,500 students; over 2,000 of all grades, and more than 300 asylums and hospitals. The jurisdiction of these prelates has a very wide range, from 2,000 in the diocese of Little Rock, Ark., to 300,000 in that of Chicago, and from the archbishopric of Oregon, comprising 20,000, to that of New York, rated at 700,000. These figures are stupendous.

Drunkenness has increased in France to such a fearful degree that the government has found it necessary to give the subject careful and serious attention. A bill has been introduced in the National Assembly, which is a step in advance of legislation in this country. We give two articles from the bill:

Article 3. Any person who shall be found intoxicated in the streets, roads, hotels, coffee-houses, taverns, or other public places, and has for the repetition of this offense been sentenced twice, shall moreover, by the second judgment, be deprived of the privilege of voting, of being eligible and appointed to any public office, or serving as a juror, and of carrying arms.

Art. 4. Any elector who will present himself at the polls, any witness who will appear before the courts, any juror who will attend the Court of Assizes, in a state of intoxication; any Mayor, Deputy-Mayor, member of Town Council, who shall be intoxicated when exercising his functions, shall be liable to the aforenamed penalties.

POLITICAL MEMORANDA.

The St. Louis Globe nominates John A. Logan as the Republican candidate for Governor of Illinois.

Gen. Rutherford B. Hayes announces that he cannot consent to be the Republican candidate for Governor of Ohio.

The Independent thinks that the next Presidential election will be the hardest fought contest through which the Republican organization has ever passed.

Gov. Dingley, of Maine, has declined to be a candidate for renomination, and expects at the expiration of his term to return to his profession of journalism.

The latest Presidential ticket is presented by the Beacon, of Akron, Ohio, as follows: "For President, Benjamin H. Bristow, of Kentucky; for Vice-President, Marshall Jewell, of Connecticut."

When Mary Clemmer terms the Hon. James B. Beck, of Kentucky, the "Ajax of America," and the compositors translate it "A Jack of America," how can he hope to successfully contest with Gov. Leslie for the United States Senate?

Senator Cameron owns up. He did run away from the yellow fever. He says he is 76 years old, "hearty as a buck," and does not want the yellow fever. He had to go in some direction, and it happened to be easiest and pleasantest for him to go where the yellow fever was not.

Speaking of party leaders, the St. Louis Republican reflects that the Democratic party is not so badly off for wanting them. It says the time for party leaders has passed; that Missouri has had no party leader since Benton; and that there has been no party leader, in the national sense, since Henry Clay.

There is a new political party in process of incubation. The first convention of the party is to meet early in September at Cincinnati. It is to be composed of such political economists as dissent from the principles of the late Cleveland Convention of Labor Reformers, and yet hope to attract voters from among the laboring classes.

Charles Nordhoff, the historian, is writing up Arkansas for the New York Herald, and says a reorganization of parties there is probable, but that, whatever happens, the negro is safe, for his vote—which can be got only by kind treatment—will be sought by the leaders of both parties, and he who wrongs a black man will lose votes.

There will be no more politics to speak of for five months, when Maine will hold her State election. This will be followed by elections in California, Wyoming, Colorado, and New Mexico. Ohio will elect a Governor in October. Iowa will have an October election, and Massachusetts and several other States will hold elections in November. These elections will test the public sentiment and prepare the way for the great contest of next year, and perhaps will forecast the result.

In a lecture recently delivered before the Kent Club of the Yale Law School, on the subject of "Political Reform," Prof. Francis A. Walker, former Superintendent of the Census, said, alluding to the composition of our legislative bodies: "He could not see that the character of modern representatives gave ground for complaint. The loss of dignified but comparatively useless men, and the change to bustling men of business, was not a cause for regret. Nor should we grieve because there were no intellectual giants in Congress. They were needed there no more than in our banks and other public institutions. Nor should the decline of eloquence be a cause of regret. It could not be said that our representatives lacked social respectability to an alarming extent. Where, then, was the real falling off? It was in tone, in rugged public virtue, in sound convictions, and in consistency in speech and vote. To get office almost always takes years spent in conciliating the members of rings. This probation was a bad one. These pilgrimages on the knees led to unholy altars." The Professor proposed cumulative voting as the remedy for these evils.

Cleaning Old Black Dresses.—A teaspoonful of powdered borax dissolved in a quart of tepid water is good for cleaning old black dresses of silk, cashmere, or alpaca.

D. Whonsettler, while engaged in building a frame house at Grand Rapids crossing, Wednesday, was instantly killed by a joist upon which he was standing giving away and throwing him to the ground, a distance of twelve feet.

Superintendent Evans, of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Indianapolis road, has instructed the men employed in the yards to report to him the number of the engine, and to what road it belongs, should any more racing of locomotives on these tracks, within the city limits, occur.

Five lawyers and two doctors have moved to Lebanon, Boone county, in the last three weeks, and mechanics and laborers in great numbers. If the increase of population continues for the year as it has for the last two months, one thousand persons will be added to that thriving little city.

Terre Haute had an impromptu bull-fight the other day, when nine car-loads of these useful animals, on their way east, were transferred from the pens to the cars. Two of them got broken legs, several were gored, and one gored a valuable horse hitched near the scene of combat.

The striking miners in the Clay county coal districts are again becoming turbulent. A band of them to the number of 250 or more are roaming about the country intimidating non-Union miners who are at work, and have been successful in stopping all mines but two. Shooting affrays are frequent.

The State Legislature, at its last session, passed a law allowing bounties on fox and wolf scalps. It fixes the bounty for wolf scalps at twenty dollars, and for those of foxes at five dollars, provided that the animals killed are at least six months old. If under that age the bounties allowed are three dollars and one and a half dollars respectively. These bounties can be paid only in the counties where the animals are killed.

The lawyers of South Bend have made application to Father Sorrin, of the Notre Dame University, for the privilege of employing the artist Gregori to paint an oil portrait of the Hon. Thomas H. Stanfield, Judge of the Circuit Court, the painting to be hung in the Court-House in their city. Father Sorrin, after consulting Gregori, has consented with the liberal condition that the bar accept it as a present from him.

The Nashville Ledger says: "By a careful estimate it is ascertained that if the county seat is changed the Conner heirs will gain title to $300,000 worth of property. And Hamilton county will be sued for at least this amount by different parties who hold title to the property, based upon warrantee deeds originally executed by the county. Will taxpayers sign petitions to change the location of the county seat with this fact staring them in the face?"

The following are the latest reported changes in postal affairs in this State: Established—English, Crawford county, Henry A. Smith, Postmaster; Garrett, DeKalb county, William A. Pratt, Jr. Discontinued—Marcy, LaGrange county. Postmasters Appointed—Ascension, Sullivan county, Thomas Crary; Boggstown, Shelby county, John W. Hutchison; Chambersburgh, Orange county, James W. Montgomery; Duff, Dubois county, Jacob H. Lemmond; Mount Prospect, Crawford county, James A. Brown; Sheridan, Hamilton county, John T. McMinda.

The Greencastle Banner speaks as follows of a steam-plow invented by T. L. Roberts, of Sullivan: "The details are most complete, and, so far as can be seen in advance, anticipate and provide for every emergency. When ready for the field, the machine will weigh only about 6,000 pounds, and will cost some $1,500. It will move with facility anywhere—on the road or in the field—and can be operated by any intelligent person. Another point in its favor is that after the plowing season is over, the machine can be used either as a portable or stationary engine, and thus be made serviceable during the entire year."

The Vincennes Sun chronicles the following infamous act: "Sunday morning, while the steamer was at the fire on Sixth street, it was discovered that the hose had been cut. This is the third time now that an effort has been made by parties to injure the apparatus of the Fire Department in order to impair its efficiency. At one time the harness was cut, the horses were untied, and the door of the stable was left open in order that the horses might go out. At another time the machinery of the engine was tampered with. Such action is infamous, and is intended simply to bring the Chief of the Fire Department and the members into disrepute. The Chief of the Department, George Fendrich, offers a reward of fifty dollars for the detection of any person found guilty of these acts."

Newspaper Rivalry.

The London Times is now sent into the country by special trains running at high speed, and is thus delivered at an early hour in scores of towns where it formerly could not be obtained until long after the local papers had been issued. The Spectator, commenting on this fact, suggests that the time may come when the London Times will drive all other rivals out of the field, and will become the only political journal read in England. It is not impossible that an approach to this state of things may be brought about in England, where there is a dense population within the limits of an island, every part of which can be reached by fast trains in a few hours from London. Here the conditions are different, and, though the Herald and other papers have tried the experiment of running special trains to neighboring cities, the result has not been encouraging. Since the establishment of the telegraph all the great cities of the country have become news centers, and are in this respect on an equality with New York. Thus the same telegraphic news will be found in the Chicago papers that is found in the New York papers, together with the local Chicago news which the New York papers do not, of course, contain. The latter cannot, therefore, compete with the local papers of any other city. If our papers were very greatly superior to those of Chicago, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, or Boston, and could be sent through a pneumatic tube at a speed of 100 miles an hour, they might obtain the same practical monopoly of American journalism which the Spectator fancies that the London Times may obtain in England. Unfortunately, however, they are by no means better than the leading papers in other cities, nor is there any hope that they will be so long as the Associated Press and the telegraph monopolies exist.—New York Graphic.

How to Make Sachets or Scent-Bags.

Various powders, etc., placed in silk bags or ornamental envelopes are agreeable to smell of, and also economical for imparting a pleasing odor to linen and clothes as they are packed away in drawers, for they prevent moths.

For heliotrope powder, take half a pound of orris root, one-quarter pound of ground rose leaves, two ounces powdered tonquin bean, one ounce vanilla bean, one-half drachm grain musk, two drops attar of almonds; mix it all by sifting through a fine sieve. This is one of the best sachets ever made, and perfumes table-cloths, sheets, pillow-cases, and towels deliciously.

For lavender powder take one pound of powdered lavender, one-quarter pound gum benzoin, and one-quarter of an ounce of attar of lavender.

For patchouli, use one-half a pound of patchouli ground fine, and a very little of attar patchouli. This herb is often sold in its natural state as imported, and is tied up in half-pound bundles.

Sandal wood sachet powder is good, and consists of the wood ground fine. Cedar wood, when ground, forms a body for other powders, and will keep moths at a distance. Dried fennel, when ground, is also used for scent-bags, and ground nutmeg is liked for this purpose.

Disraeli on Dry Champagne.

There was once a member of this House, one of its greatest ornaments, who sat opposite this box, or an identical one, and indeed occupied the place which I now unworthily fill. That was Mr. Channing. In his time, besides the discovery of a new world dry champagne was invented. [Laughter.] Hearing everybody talk of dry champagne, Mr. Channing had a great desire to taste it, and Charles Ellis, afterward Lord Seaford, got up a little dinner, care being taken that there should be some dry champagne. Mr. Channing took a glass, and after drinking and thinking for a moment, exclaimed, "The man who says he likes dry champagne will say anything." [Laughter.] Now I do not want to enter into a controversy with any of my honorable friends opposite who doubt the existence of Ribandism; but this I will say, that the man who maintains that Ribandism does not exist, is a man who—ought to drink dry champagne. [Loud laughter and cheers.]—Disraeli's Speech in the House of Commons, March 23.

In the event of Easter offerings, that one taken at St. Peter's Episcopal Church, in Albany, last Sunday, cannot be equalled. The plate collection amounted to the handsome sum of $45,000.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Spring Air.

Sweetly breathing, vernal air,
That with kind warmth doth repair
Winter's ruins; from whose breast
All the gums and spice of th' East
Borrow their perfumes; whose eye
Gilds the morn and clears the sky;
Whose dishevelled tresses shed
Pearls upon the violet bed;
On whose brow, with calm smiles dressed,
The halcyon sits and builds her nest;
Beauty, youth, and endless Spring
Dwell upon my rosy wing!

Around the Farm.

An Ashtabula (O.) farmer winters his stock on beets, and says they are the cheapest food for cattle that he can raise.

The President of the Kansas Agricultural College says that none of the students from that institution have chosen farming as a profession.

When the manure is plowed into the soil in a green state all the elements of fertility, consisting of salts and acids, must be absorbed by the soil, and cannot be lost except by washing away, which the infertilility of a porous subsoil disproves.

In raising tomatoes for profit, plant in rows four feet apart, alternating with rows of peas. The peas protect the tomatoes. The rows should be east and west. When the peas are picked remove the vines and take a light plow and turn a furrow away from the tomatoes. Raise the tomato plants in a seedbed, then set in a cold bed, and let them get stocky, and finally take them to the soil.

The best way we know to circumvent cabbage worms is to hunt them persistently, being especially vigilant when they are in the chrysalis state. Remember that every one of the chrysalises which develops itself into the perfect winged state will leave a numerous progeny. Watering with soapsuds is useful. And we have heard of a man who raised a good crop, while his neighbors raised none, by dusting finely sifted buckwheat flour on the cabbages.

A farmer writes: "In managing hogs I use as a preventive of hog cholera coal siftings from the coal pits. I first throw down three or four scoop shovelfuls of the coal siftings, then throw down a small handful of salt, giving this amount to six hogs—that is, in this proportion to the entire drove. My hogs have never been troubled with the hog cholera. I prefer the Berkshire to any other breed, but I am also quite partial to a cross of the Berkshire with the Magie breed."

Food for Young Chickens.—They want no food for many hours after they are hatched, as they are then digesting the yolk of the egg, which constitutes their food, and acquiring strength to run about. When they begin to peck, they should be fed with soft food and small grain. Unquestionably, the best soft food is an egg beaten up with a tablespoonful of milk, and heated in the oven or by the side of a fire until it sets into a soft custard. Chickens fed or partially fed on this make wonderful progress. If they are to make large fowls, they must be fed soon after daylight; if, as is too often the case, they are left hungry for three hours in the morning, they are always stunted in their growth. They must be fed the first thing, and, while they are young, every two or three hours during the day.

What to do with the boys on the farm is shown by a correspondent of the Agricultural Gazette in a way that is plain, and will be undoubtedly satisfactory wherever it may be tried. In this case there were thirty calves to be fed by the pail. They were put in charge of a boy who had never before had to do with these wayward creatures, but who was tractable and fond of animals. He was promised the sum of $2 as a small but satisfactory inducement in case of success. The calves were put in pairs in wattled pens. The boy became fond of his charge, and worried greatly about their well-doing, feeding them with regularity and so successfully as to agreeably astonish his employer. Now, if one boy will act thus under the stimulus of a responsibility and a small reward—and the former was probably more effective than the latter—why should not other boys go and do likewise? It is reasonable and proper that all the young stock on the farm should be made the special charge of the boys with a proprietary interest in their welfare.

About the House.

Gilt Frames.—If gilt frames are varnished with copal varnish, they can be washed with cold water without injury.

All sorts of vessels and utensils may be purified from long-retained smells of every kind, in the easiest and most perfect manner, by rinsing them out well with charcoal powder, after the grosser impurities have been scoured off with sand and potash.

For a nice sauce pare the apples and trim out the ends, leaving the cores in. Place them in a stew-pan with water enough to cover them, and let them boil very slowly for two hours. When perfectly soft, take them out and sprinkle with white sugar.

Fireproofing Clothes.—Four parts borax and three parts Epsom salts, mixed with three or four parts warm water to one part of the combined substances, is said to form an excellent fireproof wash for clothes. It should be used immediately after preparation.

Window Cleaning.—In washing windows, a narrow-bladed wooden knife, sharply pointed, will take out the dust that hardens in the corner of the sash. Dry whiting will polish the glass, which should first be washed with weak black tea, mixed with a little alcohol. Save the tea leaves for the purpose.

Heart-broken ladies, who find their strenuous efforts to raise house plants frustrated by worms, take our advice, and they will win success by boiling the earth ere setting the plants. Use little water and allow it to simmer away after a few minutes of hard boil. A dry heat is about as effectual.—American Grocer.

The following is a simple method of cleaning brass, which will be valuable for the housewife to remember: If very much oxidized or covered with green rust, first wash it with strong soda and water. If not so very bad, this first process may be dispensed with. Then apply a mixture of one part of common sulphuric acid and twelve parts of water, mixed in an earthen vessel; wash well, first with clear water, and then with water containing some ammonia, afterward scouring well with oil and rotten-stone, using a piece of soft leather and a little dry rotten-stone to give a brilliant polish. In subsequent cleaning, oil and rotten-stone will be found sufficient.

The following is a recipe for making hard soap, which is said to be excellent and economical. Nearly every family accumulates through the winter drippings from beef and mutton. These can be utilized for the grease by boiling in water, allowing it to cool, then removing from the water and boiling till all the water is expelled. Of course the whiter the grease the nicer the soap. Take six pounds of sal soda, six pounds of grease, three and a half pounds new stone lime, four gallons soft water, half pound borax. Put soda, lime and water into an iron boiler; boil till all is dissolved. When well settled pour off the clear lye, wash out the kettle, and put in the clear lye, grease and borax; boil till it comes to soap, pour into a tub to cool, and when sufficiently hard cut into bars and put on boards to dry.

Gentle Spring in the Household.

[From the Danbury News.]

Moving is not pleasant. It breaks up old associations and the skin on your knuckles.

The only way of putting down a stair carpet without getting mad is to take the stairs out in the yard.

We frankly confess that we do not understand why the shaving-cup is packed at the bottom of a barrel of tinware, or why a vest is used to wrap up a ham.

Many articles which have become pleasant to us by long association, look dreadfully cheap and dingy when loaded on a cart, with the neighboring window in direct range.

One of the most trying problems is how to load the wagon so the best furniture will show to the neighbors. The carman who most carefully studies this matter will do the largest business.

It is carrying two lengths of stove-pipe with two elbows at opposite angles, through a narrow hall and up a carpeted stair without dropping soot or knocking off the plaster, that is filling our lunatic asylums.

It is now pretty generally admitted that in moving or house-cleaning, a child will put away three times the amount of food as on any other occasion. Forty times a day the mother apprehensively inquires: "Land's sake! what's the matter with that child? Has it got a tape-worm?"

Which is heavier, a pound of lead or a pound of feathers?—Old Conundrum.

A single pound of feathers is just as heavy as a pound of lead, but twenty-five pounds of feathers in a tick, in a narrow and crooked hallway is about as heavy as two hundred and eighteen pounds of lead.

About the first thing a woman does in a moving, is to cut her fingers, and every object she wishes to call your attention to is pointed out with a hand that is covered by a half pound of carpet-rags, and smelling strong enough of arnica to knock over a stable boy. The injury is sometimes caused by closing her eyes when she is about to strike a nail, but is most frequently done in taking up tacks with a limber case-knife.

There wouldn't be so much moving were it not for woman. If a neighbor becomes a little offensive, or a landlord a trifle exacting, a woman will move at once. But a man will swallow all grievances and cheerfully submit to be knocked down and sat upon, rather than move. Moving is serious business to a man, whatever it may be to a woman, and did he have his way, the present number of carmen would be speedily and considerably reduced.

Wolf Scalps.

Probably not many of our readers have had occasion to use the phrase, "to keep the wolf from the door," which so graphically expresses the labors of a family to prevent hunger from entering the home. The phrase could only have originated in a community where wolves were abundant and fierce. Formerly in New England they were so numerous that a bounty was paid for wolf-scalps, in order to encourage the destruction of the animal who loves fresh lamb, and is not averse to young children. It is said that the dishonesty of the hunters was such as to compel the town officer, who paid the bounty, to slit the ears of the scalps, so that they might not be stolen and offered again. In the old Colonial days the heads of the wolves that had been killed were placed on the outside of the meeting-house, between the windows.

In Missouri, where wolves are still numerous, wolf-scalps are received in payment of State taxes. Recently, a legislative committee burned 1,200 scalps which had accumulated during two years, worth, at $5 a head, the amount allowed in taxes for each scalp, $6,000. The reason of their accumulation was that they were the Treasurer's vouchers that such an amount of taxes had been received.

A Bad Habit.

A farmer can get into no habit worse than that of borrowing tools, and for this reason: First, one who owns tools does not like to lend them, and thinks less of the man who borrows. Second, one never comes to learn how to use borrowed tools, nor to keep them in order; and third, he who borrows never can be a good farmer. It is true that a young man, just starting, may be allowed to borrow some, but he should not establish the habit; or again, a man may borrow a new implement to see how it works. A man who borrows is not as likely to use a tool as carefully as if it were his own, and consequently does not do careful, nice work. What can a man be thinking about when he borrows a steel plow, keeps it several days or a week, and brings it home as will be most likely the case, so dull as to be unfit for use? The owner can only take it to the shop, and at his own expense get it sharpened. If a man lends tools to one, there are several neighbors who will want to borrow; and thus it is, a harrow, for instance, may be going the rounds through the neighborhood all the season. It is every way desirable to cultivate what is called "good neighborhood," but this can not be done where borrowing is practised.

AUBURN INDIANA, MAY. 6, 1875

At last Attorney Gen. Williams has resigned, and Judge Edward Pierrepont is to be his successor. What will Mrs. Williams do now that her occupation is gone?

Story, of the Chicago Times paid $25,000, for defaming the character of a young lady a few weeks ago. A few such results may have a good effect upon the Times.

Mr. Pierrepont, the new Attorney General, contributed twenty thousand dollars to help elect Grant the second time, and at last he is rewarded. A few years ago this thing of buying an office was never thought of, much less attempted, but things have changed of late.

A South Carolina Radical, who was defeated for Congress in the last election, comes forward and states that the outrages on the revenue officers in that state lately perpetrated, were the work of negroes as well as whites.—This slightly alters the case. If the darkies begin to shoot, the President will not send troops to quell the disturbance. In that case he could depend on the state authorities.

Senator Morton is an eminent statesman of the Republican party. He has been the apostle of oppression and revenge. He has championed every infamy or usurpation in the South that called itself a government. Therefore when he pronounces New Orleans a dead city he speaks his own condemnation and that of his party. Dying New Orleans represents the ignorance, the cupidity, the folly and the crimes of Mr. Morton's party.

During the debates in Congress on the inflation of the currency, B. F. Allen and several other reputed Chicago millionaires were often quoted among the wealthy men of the country who wanted more currency. Al'en has since failed, and some of his colaborers have business with the sheriff. Such men were doubtless very honest as well as earnest in wanting more currency. They needed it badly.

The prospects of a grasshopper crop in the west is, unfortunately, far better than that for most of the cereals and fruits. It seems to be established that, unless there is a late frost sufficient to kill all vegetable life, the grasshoppers will soon have things their own way. A heavy frost at this time might kill them, but it would also kill everything else, so that the remedy for one evil becomes the source of another.

Beecher's witnesses have sworn Tilton all over that Communist procession. They have had him marching with Mrs. Woodhull, and riding in a carriage with somebody, and carrying a flag, and in all sorts of places. Jno Swinton shed some light upon their inaccuracy yesterday. He swore that he marched arm in arm with Tilton in that procession. If all Beecher's witnesses were equally accurate he would have a storng case.

The telegraph announces the death of Count de Waldeck, the celebrated French traveler and artist, at the extraordinary age of one hundred and ten years. There is no telling how much longer he might have lived had he taken up his residence her in America a century ago, when our Government was about being formed.—A man with such seeds of longevity within him ought to have grown up with our country.

Every now and then we hear of some disinterested patriot who holds two positions under the government and draws two salaries. The gentlemen of this class are most generally persons holding both a military and civil position, but the Court of Claims has decided that hereafter no person shall receive more than one salary. If any person desires to perform double work he may, but he can receive but one salary.

They say Gen. Williams of the Northern Indianian, talks of commencing a libel suit against Gen. Packard, of the Laport Chronicle, for defamation of character. Gen. Packard charges Gen. Williams with being defaulter to the State of Indiana, and Kosciusko county; and that he had been sued by Attorney-General Denny to recover a large sum of money unlawfully retained by him, as Clerk of the Kosciusko Circuit Court. Gen. Packard cannot substantiate these charges.

The New License Law.

Attorney General Buskirk, in response to numerous inquiries concerning the new license law, has rendered an opinion construing certain portions of the act to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors. &c., approved March 17th, 1875, as follows:

1. That after the close of the regular session, in June next, of the board of county commissioners of a county, it will be unlawful with n such county for any person or persons, directly or indirectly, to sell, barter or give away, for any purpose of gain, any spirituous, vinous or malt liquors in less quantities than a quart at a time, or sell or barter any intoxicating liquor to be drank or suffered to be drank in his or their house, out-house, garden, or the appurtenances thereto belonging, without first procuring from the board of county commissioners of such county a license, as provided for in the act, having given 20 days' notice, &c.

2. That the holder of a permit under what is popularly known as the "Baxter law," after the close of the session of the board of county commissioners in June next cannot lawfully sell, barter or give away, for any purpose of gain, spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, in less quantities than a quart at a time, or sell or barter any intoxicating liquor, to be drank or suffered to be drunk in his house, outhouse, garden, or the appurtenances thereto belonging, unless he shall have procured a license under the act of March 17, 1875.

When John C. New was appointed treasurer of the United States, a very ugly story was put in circulation affecting Mr. New's moral standing. It is to the effect that some years ago he took into his family a girl named Nellie De Loss, a sort of protege of a Rev Mr. Kistler. The girl was very pretty and attractive, and at last she alleged that she had been to Mr. New something more than a friend. Mr. Kistler told the same story. Mr. New, chose to regard these allegations as an attempt at blackmail, and the result was that Mr. Kistler now languishes in the north Indianan prison. Miss De Loss has just written a letter to Mr. New, which has been published. She affirms in the most solemn manner that she yielded up her love and her honor into the keeping of Jonn C. New, and that he had promised himself to her. When tired of her he threw her off and ignored her existence. The letter is a most harrowing recital of the wretchedness of a poor lost girl, who by giving all, has lost all; and if it is entitled to any credit it is and should be a crushing blow to the aspiring banker. Villainy loses none of its repulsiveness when it lurks in high places.

The Hon. William D. Kelly, more popularly known as Pig Iron Kelly, of Pensylvania, after an extended trip through the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida, gives an emphatic denial to the charges and statements of Republican newspapers and orators for years past against the South. What gives this testimony the more point and significance is the well known fact that Judge Kelly has been constantly one of the most extreme men of his party in Congress, going as far as the farthest in his support of measures of repression, and represents one of the strongest Republican districts in Pensylvania, for the South. He says that he mingled freely during his trip with the people of all parties and both races and that he now understands the condition of the South better than he ever did before. Wise views have been completely changed. He reports a general condition of good order and of kindly feeling, and says that there is no necessity whatever, for troops or force bills. He declares hereafter, he takes very little stock in stories of Southern outrages, especially if they are reported as occuring in the sections he visited. He states that these accounts are not only gross exaggerations but in many cases deliberate falsehoods; and sums up by saying that the only vote he regrets, is his vote for the Force Bill at the last session Judge Kelly speaks very gloomily of the financial condition of the South, which he attributes largely to the ruinous financial policy of the last Congress. His views have made a decided impression, and really leave the Republican party without a leg to stand upon for their war against the South.

Plymouth Church had a great accession of new converts on Sunday. There were one hundred and five of them by count; and of this large number eighty-two were women and only twenty-three were men.

The Auburn Band wore a blue uniform, not so striking on parade, but in music it made good the deficiency. The Maysville band was not uniformed, but made a creditable appeaance in the parade and was not slow on music.—[Independent.

WE made a brief call at the Auburn Art Gallery, in Ensley's block, and found our enterprising friends, Messrs. WHAT a strange penchant some people have for gossip, and we regret to say the fair sex seem to be more inclined this way than the lords of creation. Now, there is no particular harm in a little quiet gossip about your neighbor, as to their prosperity, good luck, and kindly ways, but when their short comings is all that can be found to talk about, these conversations ought to be abandoned.

Spleen.

EDITOR COURIER.—The conductors of the Waterloo Press have never professed much friendship for the Grange movement, but have on several occasions shown that they were enemies of the order, and last week they gave another exhibition of their spleen. The burden of their complaint now is that Grangers send off for wagons, implements, etc. Now this may be all wrong, and I do not, at this time, intend to argue the question, pro or con, but, I would ask, why are the farmers singled out for denunciation, when so many others are guilty of the same crime, if it is a crime?

Does not the merchant send out of the county for boots, shoes, ready made clothing, cloth, hardware, horse shoe nails, plows, harrows, harrow teeth, and frequently for wheat, flour, corn, oats, potatoes, etc., etc., when there are shoemakers, tailors, foundrymen, blacksmiths, farmers, etc., etc.; in the county who could manufacture and grow these articles? But the merchants are not denounced for starving out the mechanics.

And has not the particular manufacturer named by the Press, done as much as any other one in the county in starving out home mechanics, and home industries? Once upon a time, and not far back, we had several plow factories in this county; but where are they now? "Gone where the woodbine twineth," and mainly because the Press' much injured manufacturer brought on foreign plows and undersold the home manufacturers; and has not he—this pet manufacturer—frequently brought in foreign farm products and sold them in competition with home farm products? He has sure, but then it is his ox that is gored now, which makes all the difference in the world, you know.

Then, Mr. Editor, we farmers are getting rather inquisitive. We see lots of healthy, well dressed men, in all our towns, whose only visible means of support are in retailing manufactured goods and wares, which they have sent out of the county for, and who appear, to our unsophisticated eyes, to be making an easy thing of it, and we wish to "know how it is ourselves" you know.

I will just say, in conclusion, that the Patrons of Husbandry prefer to buy of home merchants and manufacturers, other things being equal, and if the citizens of the towns or others will organize manufacturing companies, with sufficient capital to be able to put in the best machinery, so as to be able to manufacture as cheaply as others,—freights always being in their favor—they will find the Patrons ready and willing to patronize them. And, sir, the building up of such manufactories will improve the towns much faster and more permanently, than for each citizen to keep a little shop and retail a few peanuts, pills, law, etc.

But the Patrons do not consider themselves bound to patronize every sickly establishment that does all its work by hand, and especially those that employ painters to get up and exhibit caricatures of Patrons, and that sends off for all articles that can be sold cheaper than the homemade or home grown article.

PATRON OF HUSBANDRY.

May 3d, 1875.

"Washed White as Wool."

Maj. C. C. Nelson, who appears in the light of a public benefactor, will visit Auburn next week in the cause of common humanity. He is manager of Hall's Force Pump Washing Machine Co., and will be here with a corps of men, teams, and wagons, and make a through canvass in this vicinity. The pump is one of the greatest inventions of the age, its novel principle being that the washing is done by agitating the water and not the clothing, thus saving wear and tear. The pump itself is a simple device, consisting mainly of a cylinder five and a half inches in length. Maj. Nelson, who is a thorough going business man, never does things by halves. He ships his machines by hundreds of dozens to the principal cities and from these as central depots he distributes them thro'-out the county towns by means of large number of wagons. Extra inducements are offered dealers, and as the agent is in direct communication with the factory, his terms are most favorable. Maj. Nelson does a wholesale business altogether, rarely or never selling less than a dozen machines to a customer.

From Corunna.

CORUNNA, May 4th, 1875.

As summer advances business begins to revive, and apropos of this we notice that our wide-awake dry goods merchant, Mr. Knour with S. J. Loomis, Kendallville, is stocking up for the summer trade. Mr. K. being our leading grain merchant, informs us that Corunna is improving as a grain market, and will furnish your readers with some interesting statistics respecting the shipments of produce from this station for the year 1874—75.

There has been some transactions in stock during the past ten days, mainly in hogs, Messrs. McMullin and Quince being the dealers.

Tom Kinney has embarked in agricultural pursuits; having rented a farm in Fairfield township he will devote his attention to tilling the soil hereafter.

Corunna, located at the highest point between Toledo and Chicago, derives its name from an illustrious source. When we reflect that a Cortez first planted the golden cross in the halls of the Montezumas, and that his prototype caused King Grant (who, if we mistake not was threshed at Great Bethel, etc.) to back down in the late Cuban row,—is it any wonder that we are making history?

If the town is not full of greasy Spaniards it has a preponderance of radical fanatics, which signifies about the same thing; however there are honorable exceptions in this case.

Like the withered and hateful hags on the blasted heaths of Scotland, these pestiferous things make their appearance whenever an opportunity presents itself to plague and pester the community in which they chance to roam at will, and like the fabled Upas it is death to pass its shadow.

We regret to say that the devil is running a muck in Corunna.

If a person reforms and keeps step to moral music,—no matter whether he happened to drive a baggage wagon during the war, played "seven-up" on a gunboat, swears that Colfax is a Christian statesman and that Grant never drinks or deals in bull pups and horses,—avers that democrats as a class are semi-barbarians and ought to be hung: we say if honest he is entitled to wrestle with the angels in that undiscovered country far away.

But nevertheless he will go down on the slate as a radical.

The only topic of interest in our village at the present writing is the saloon question, and out of which some excitement has been created. No doubt there is a storm brewing and serious trouble may be expected. The opposing parties are arrayed in deadly conflict against one another, and if the leader of the so-called temperance reform party persists in his course, he will not only involve himself, but others who have something at stake. Saloons are to be deprecated, but the law will take its course and punish the offender.

The foregoing thoughts were suggested while viewing the situation from a stand point as "a looker-on in Venice," but we do not purpose to give an impartial history of current events in our pencil jottings.

OLD GRIMES' HEN.

BY A. M. DAWSON.

At last that speckled hen has gone,
That hen of hens the best,
She died without a sigh or groan
While in her downy nest.

Through summers' heat and winters' snow,
For ten long years she lay,
At morn and eve, old Grimes an egg,
But none the Sabbath day.

She had a nest behind the door
All neatly lined with hay;
Her back was brown and speckled o'er
With spots inclined to gray.

When e'er the rain came pelting down,
Or thunders dreadful roar,
She hid herself in Grimes' hat
Until the storm was o'er.

[illegible] years [illegible] almost,
She still looked young and hale,
And, like Job's turkey, she could boast
One feather in her tail.

She never deigned the barn-yard beau
His face to look upon—
But loved that one whose long shrill crow
Was heard at early dawn.

An aged cock, who oft had told
His descent with a sigh,
From one that cried when he was old,
His master did deny.

When poor old speckle closed her eye,
He jumped the fence and cried,
He bid the poultry all good-by
And then laid down and died.

PHIL BLAKE'S EXPLOIT.

The growing city of Granopolis was excited. Its three stores, five saloons, and a dozen or more of scattered "residences" fairly glowed—not under the broad beams of the August sun, so much as under the inspiration of the moment. For to-day the last tie was firmly laid, the last nail driven into the grain depot, extending townward from the bridge that spanned the somewhat narrow and rather muddy current of the Wildcat; and to-morrow the happy citizens would be blessed with the sight of the furious locomotive turning the curve of the hills, full in sight of the town, and steaming past the stubble-fields flanking both sides of the track—rushing, as it were, full into their welcome arms. To this effect were the enthusiastic speeches delivered to the thirsty crowd assembled on the following day to swelter in the heat and await the oncoming passenger train; speeches given by Dr. Burns, the big man of the place, whose little white cottage, nearly hidden by its orchard, on the slope of the hill facing the river, and its well-kept grounds, to say nothing of the owner's prosperous air and Miss Susie's fine piano, the boasted ornament of Granopolis, seemed to give credence to the report that sheep ranches were more lucrative to their fortunate possessor than the practice of his noble profession. Given, also, by Philip Blake, one of that tide of good-for-nothings whose hands turn naturally to anything, especially to raking up the ashes and reinvigorating a county paper, well-nigh dead of inanition. This handsome specimen of such a class, swept onward with the progress of the railroad, first an overseer, then a book-keeper, had undertaken such a task at Granopolis, and had, to his own surprise, found himself unusually willing to pursue it in the dull town, finding his only gleam of a brighter atmosphere in Susie Burns' eyes. Speeches were given, also, by the most prominent tradesmen and saloon-keepers—men who have found their business wonderfully increased by the inhabitants of yonder canvas dwellings, which have sprung up like mushrooms along the line of the road, and who trust to find a still further profit in the business always thronging to the "terminus"—dignified title; evidenced already, they proudly assert, in yonder imposing structures—the red-wood depot and the frame of the ten-roomed hotel—which scorch the eyes of all beholders.

Now, men look at their watches constantly; a hum of expectation runs through the crowd; a bell is heard, a sharp whistle—hurrah! here it comes, rounding the curve in grand style, and with flags flying, amid cheers and wavings of hat and handkerchief—for the softer sex have turned out to a woman—here it comes, panting and snorting, and stops short, amid the crowd edging off on each side like some proud, impatient yet tractable thing, its work completed, awaiting the praises of its master.

A party—a wonderful thing in that work-day town—was to be given on that night at the Burns residence. To it were bidden the young farmers of the neighborhood, their wives, sisters and sweethearts. Philip Blake, who, as editor, occupied a higher position than ever before, some employes of the railroad, the few clerks of the stores in town, and a few old cronies of the Doctor and his long dead wife. The house was decorated to the utmost extent of Susie's knowledge; all the rooms were thrown open to the guests, and in the long, cool kitchen were spread tables covered with country dainties. Dr. Burns was thoroughly hospitable when hospitality did not interfere with his comfort, and to-night was in his most genial mood, happy in the prosperity of the little town where Fate had cast his lot, and in the near prospect of incorporation, which would probably add to his emoluments the honorable office of Mayor. Susie, with her sweet, innocent face, brilliant complexion, and great liquid eyes, made a charming hostess in her utter forgetfulness of self and anxiety that every guest should find each moment full of pleasure. So at least thought Phillip, as he lounged over a photograph album, seemingly oblivious of the fact that every girl in the room stole looks at him in the pauses of the dance and every heart throbbed with hope when he rose at last to seek a partner. Susie had been playing for some time; he leaned over the piano and said: "Here comes old Simms with his fiddle; do leave this tiresome playing to him, and have one good dance yourself. Why, you look tired to death already." She loved to dance, and gladly resigned the task of playing to the old man, whose great delight it was to show off his proficiency in the art; yet she did not like the tone of her partner. He certainly was the handsomest and best dressed man in the room; his manners, too, were those of a gentleman—yet how different. Here her thoughts wandered off to the young medical student, the son of her father's dear old friend, who had visited them two years ago, and then gone East, promising to return when he should graduate, and she was suddenly recalled by her partner's voice, as they joined hands and "went down the middle," for the old-fashioned reel was the favorite dance in the unfashionable town.

The evening wore away and the guests departed one by one. The Doctor fell asleep in his easy chair and only Philip Blake loitered by the open window gazing at the myriad stars and listening to the faint rustle made by the sultry breeze among the leaves in the orchard. A lonely bird, frightened at some distant sound, roused itself from its leafy cover, uttered a melancholy cry and fluttered heavily to another tree. The young man watched its aimless course, saw it sink directly among the branches and likened it, somewhat bitterly, to himself; his lonely, uncared for life, his aimless existence—there the likeness stopped. No friendly shelter, no resting place, close-folded by love for him. He knew himself to be unworthy of the fair girl who stepped softly about the room, rearranging the scattered furniture, laying the stamp of a sweet and quiet guiding spirit upon everything she touched; he had not meant even to tell her how he loved her, yet the spirit was upon him, and calling her to his side he held her fast, and in the solemn quiet falling from the stars, he poured out all his soul to her; told her of his mistake in life, but that, if she would only trust him, love him a little, he would begin to live in solemn earnest for her sweet sake and for the sake of God. Love made him reverent, and purposes and desires undreamed of before fired his soul with energy and purpose. She could not stay the tide of his glowing words, but even as he spoke his eager eyes read her answer in her earnest and piteous ones, and he knew that his pleadings were in vain. She had no need to tell him so; she only sobbed out her regrets, bitter and useless; and he, with the chivalry that true manhood teaches, silenced the pain in his heart till she was somewhat comforted, and then went out into the lonely street, and so down to the river's edge, wondering what next. This was the first cup of disappointment, which life had forced him to drink; hitherto no advantages or triumphs had seemed to him worth the pains taken to gain them, and the chief faults of his nature were his sluggishness of temperament and his passive acceptance of circumstances, which had more than once led him into difficulties which, in a less generous or less naturally honorable man, would surely have proven the high road to ruin. Hitherto he had avoided the meaner vices of those companions with whom fate had thrown him, and whom he had not tried to avoid; now he felt that his future life would hold the image of one sweet girl, which, like an amulet, would keep him pure. He did not blame her, only himself, for the hasty speech which could never be recalled, and his was not a nature to turn bitter under disappointment. "Well," he thinks, "life has something left still, and I am not one to throw it away for the sake of a woman, if she be the one of all the world for me."

How hot it grew, while he paced up and down! The breeze which had been gradually increasing for the last hour, blew now with fury from the west—a scorching wind, like that blowing over acres of fire. Stay; what was that cloud upon the hill-top, that fiery tongue creeping across its rim, licking along the stubble-fields, wrapping the dry fences in blazing garments. What is this fierce glare that lights the heavens through half their circle, and turns all the earth to the sickly hue of blood! And this crackling sound, as of a thousand demons, treading down the dry stubble of the fields! Fire in the fields, thought Philip; and to-night, of all nights with such a wind, and this frightful heat for three days past! Well, it's got to burn; there's no stopping it now. Thank heaven, it's on the other side of the river, that's all. He watched it a moment, then, with a sudden pause of heart, followed by a spasm of beating, he saw the growing column waver, tremble, the smoke blown southward toward the town; then, with a furious plunge, the moving mass swept downward toward the river's bank. Heavens! the wind has changed! He knew the bridge lay right in the way of the destroying army; that once caught, then the depot, then the whole town must go, and Susie—

Only a moment, and his clear, strong voice rang out, "Fire! fire!" They heard it even to the doctor's, on the hill; and men, women, and children came pouring out; the old man raised from the slumber in his chair, and the young girl who had sobbed by his side, in her thin, white dress; many, startled from their sleep, came with wrappers thrown loosely about them, or with garments awry. All thronged down near the bridge where Philip stood, and where the men were hurriedly discussing the danger, only too evident now. On swept the royal element, searing the few trees in its route, leaping creeks, and stealing down to the edge of the river, catching on the festoons of wild roses and wax berries, hissing on the damp mud, retiring for a moment, then renewing the assault; now creeping close to the ground, shrouded in the dense mass of smoke, now leaping high in air with hellish exultation.

The discussion was of short duration. "Men," cried Dr. Burns, "the bridge must go down. Bring axes, you that want to save your homes!" And he seized one near at hand himself and swung it on high, when a workman hurried up and interfered. "Dr. Burns," he cried, "I hearn 'em say there's a construction train coming in at twelve to-night for to lay them switches yender, and now it wants only ten minutes of twelve." Dr. Burns dropped the axe. "Telegraph," he shouted. The man shook his head. "Too late, sir," he said; "she's left the last station half an hour ago." The men looked at one another with faces from which all hope had suddenly died out, and sobs were heard distinctly from the group of women huddled together, the mothers clasping their children closely.

"To your homes, then," shouted the doctor; "save what you can, and when we shout to you hurry to the Bend"—a bend in the river which he evidently hoped they might reach, while the men stayed to fight the fire. But there was a sudden movement in the crowd, and Philip Blake stepped forward with somewhat of his careless air, yet with a manly bearing that sat better upon him than his usual nonchalance. "Stay here, sir," he said, "and cut down the bridge; I will go and stop the train." A sigh of relief went up from all, and many women wept and murmured blessings upon him. The men made haste to provide him with a red handkerchief tied to a slat; he threw off his coat and vest and pulled his hat over his eyes. One man spoke at last. "It's sure death, Phil, and no good to come of it." His answer was short and to the point. "D—n you!" Then he caught a pair of pleading eyes, and saw that Susie held him a handkerchief soaked at the faucet near by. "Put this over your face when you meet the smoke," she said. "God bless you, Phil!" He bent his head as reverently to the blessing as if it had come from an angel, then turned quickly, squared himself for a run and was gone over the bridge almost before he had started, and in three minutes more the planks were torn up, the rafters severed, the last man swam back in haste, then the bridge fell with a terrible sound, and they were saved. Men can work rapidly with the fear of death before their eyes.

Philip heard the sound but did not pause. With the handkerchief close about his face, the smoke was killing him. He bent low, but ten thousand fiery-headed demons plucked him by the sleeve, whispered horrible nothings in his ears, crisped his hair, danced in lurid procession before his eyes, thrust red-hot irons down his throat. On he pressed, his feet blistering at every step, the torture of thirst consuming him, and the thought tugging at his brain: "All in vain; oh, to be burned alive here, and no one ever to know." It seemed to him that he was crawling; sometimes he would lose himself for a minute, and wake with a horrible start to find himself still running. At last, after what seemed to be hours, but must have been only a second, for his clothes had not even caught the blaze, though his face and body were badly burned by the fierce heat, he left the wall of flame behind him, neared the curve of the track, and with his brain in a whirl, his eyes half blinded, struck his foot upon a pebble, and fell prostrate.

A sudden trembling of the earth beneath him—a deep rumbling roused him. Oh, heaven! here it was, bearing down upon him, a great mass of blackness, with one terrific glaring eye, a moving mountain, threatening destruction to all in its way. What was he here for? Something about that giant form, and he—oh, could he never remember? He knew it now; he was on his feet in a moment, and shouting with all his force. Trying to shout, rather; all his efforts producing only a dry rattle in his throat. With desperate energy he seized a handful of stones and flung them at the train as it came abreast of him. They broke the window and rattled about the head of the engineer, who, looking out, saw by the passing train the blackened and wounded remnant of a man, frantically waving a stick from which fluttered something which had once been a red handkerchief. The short sharp whistle of "down brakes" ran out on the air, and the train stopped within hail of the eager crowd on the opposite bank of Wildcat river. Some went ahead and viewed the danger escaped, others went back and found Philip lying in the roadside insensible.

He was conscious that night of intense pain and of men who trod softly, and tended him gently, whose horny hands touched him tenderly, and of one whose untiring attendance was more skillful, and whose voice was more pleasant than theirs. When, later on the day after, the train passed in over the new bridge, he was too weak even to ask why they cheered so loud outside, or to know that it was his name people were pronouncing so often and so gratefully, he turned to the manly face that smiled upon his, and was satisfied. The excitement had hurt him more than the flames or the falling bough of a tree that had broken his arm, and when health came slowly back he felt too glad to care that even his handsome face was a thing of the past. Then his neighbors began to come in, and the women sent him flowers and dainties, and many a one left her task to lighten the long days for him. But the young doctor was the one to whom he turned always, and when he was able to sit up in the pleasant September weather, the young man came to him and said, "Congratulate me, Phil.; to-morrow is my wedding day," he somehow did not need to ask who the bride was, but taking both his friend's hands in his two poor, wasted ones' he said: "I do congratulate you heartily. You have won the very best wife in the world, and you are the only man living worthy of her."

Twenty Thousand a Year Not Enough to Marry On.

Says a New York paper: New York is crowded with rich unmarried men, afraid of the expense of supporting these gilded butterflies. There is a bachelor at the Sixth Avenue Hotel whose income is $20,000 a year, and still he says he can't afford to get married. He's a proud fellow, and says as a single man he can have the best horses, best room, and best box at the opera. "If I should get married," he said, "I should have to stint myself or overdraw my income." "How is that?" asked a friend. "Well, now, come into the parlor, and I'll show you. You see, ladies are extravagant now-a-days. They dress so much more than in Europe. I mean, they don't wear rich diamonds like the women of Florence and Milan, but they wear such rich dresses, laces, shawls, and furs. Now, I'm proud, and I should not want my wife outdressed, so I have to keep out of the marriage business. Do you see that lady there?" he said, pointing to a fashionable caller. "Yes." "Well, she has on a $400 panniered, wattaued, polonaised, brown, gros grain dress, and I wear a $60 coat. She wears a $1,200 camel's hair shawl, and a $500 set of sable, while I wear a $70 overcoat. She wears a $70 bonnet, while I wear an $8 hat. She wears $200 worth of point applique and point anguille, while I wear a $6 shirt. Her shoes cost $16, mine $12. Her ordinary morning jewelry, which is changed every year, not counting diamonds, cost $400, mine cost $50." "Well, how does it foot up?" "Why, the clothes she has on cost $2,225, and mine cost $206, and that is only one of her dozen outfits, while I only have—say three. The fact is," said he, growing earnest, "I couldn't begin to live in a brown-stone front with that woman, and keep up appearances to match—carriages, church, dinners, opera and sea-side, for $20,000. I'd have to become a second-rate man, and live in an eighteen-foot house, or withdraw over to Second avenue, and that I'll be hanged if I do!" and he slung his fist down into a nice silk hat in the excess of his eagerness.

The Death Rate—Great Increase During the Past Year.

From facts collected by medical men in all parts of the world it appears that a sudden and heavy increase of the death rate among adults marked the winter of 1874–5. In the Southern States of this Union and in Northern Europe the same disclosures are made by the records of vital statistics. They all agree in the main parts of their reports, and declare that unprecedented changes from the normal state of the weather occurred during the past cold months. The weather was cold and moist. That combination produced pulmonary disease and pneumonia. At the same time it made the class of ailments extremely difficult to cure. Diphtheria was also prevalent in an unusual degree. In some sections it amounted to an epidemic, and scores of people were carried off by it in a short time. Dr. Harris, Registrar of Vital Statistics in New York, reports that in that city the total percentage of deaths will be from 12 to 15 per cent. additional, and in special classes of diseases most fatal the ratio has been doubled. In reference to diphtheria the reports from Edinburgh, Glasgow, London, Liverpool, Dublin, Vienna and Hamburg show that the ravages have been widespread and fatal. Paris has a lower per cent. of deaths from this malady. This is accounted for by the excellent sanitary regulations in force in the French capital, and the rigid manner in which they are carried out by special officers appointed for that purpose. The physicians say that persons in the constant habit of taking strong liquors are in great danger from diphtheria. In these persons the mucous membrane of the throat is weakened to a fatal extent, and, as a matter of course, cannot resist the double assault of a cold atmosphere, and that heavily laden with moisture. In this section the weather is unusually trying upon people from the 1st of January to the 1st of April. One storm followed another in rapid succession, and in most places the transition was so sudden as to produce consequences of a very unpleasant if not fatal character. No attention to clothing could prevent the action of the damp, rasping air upon the throat and lungs, and hence the increase in this family of complaints. Among those who were compelled to live in damp houses and go half clad the ratio of mortality was of necessity greater. The winter of 1885–6 was marked with heavy mortality rates, but not so heavy as those of 1874–5, which are now being presented to the world in the shape of regular-collected vital statistics.—Pittsburgh Commercial.

A Natural Mathematician.

Mr. Edward H. Coursey, of Piney Neck, was born in 1796, and is now, consequently, eighty-one years of age. Mr. Coursey is a remarkable man. Figures are mere playthings for him. He can solve the most difficult problem, and has yet to find a sum he cannot get the correct answer to. His talent for figures is entirely natural, never having attended school as much as a year in his life. He does his sums not by any arithmetical rules, but by rules of his own, but always gets the correct answer. He has made, too, somewhat of a reputation, and receives sums through the mail from almost every State in the Union, which he works and answers by mail. He is quite notorious, also, for the difficult sums he puts to others, and particularly the school masters, whom he especially delights to puzzle. His latest is as follows: "A farmer having twelve ditches to cut, of different lengths, employs four men to do the work. To the first he agrees to pay $1 per rod; to the second $1.25 per yard; to the third $1.75 per rod, and to the fourth $2.18¾ per rod. When they finish the ditches and come to be paid off, each man receives the same amount of money for each ditch. How many rods did each man cut in each ditch; how much money did each man receive for each ditch; how long was each ditch, and how much did it cost per rod to have the ditches cut?"—Centerville (Md.) Observer.

The Age of Paper.

We read of the Stone Age, the Bronze Age, and the Iron Age, as marking the eras in the progress of civilization among mankind, and it is now suggested that a suitable designation of the present era is the Paper Age. When we consider what an immense amount of paper is used every day, on which is printed the news of the previous twenty-four hours, also the many articles that are made of this material, it must be acknowledged that paper is pre-eminently characteristic of this period of history.

From a light fan to a heavy car-wheel, the greatest variety of things is now made paper. The manufacture of paper collars, paper boxes for various purposes, and of envelopes, is especially extensive, and important. In Germany alone, it is calculated that nearly a thousand millions of envelopes are manufactured yearly, and, curiously enough, the introduction of postal cards has not caused a diminution of the number. One of the most recent applications of paper, is for the construction of small casks or barrels. These are made in a cylindrical form, of straw paper, so pressed and glued together as to be extremely hard. These barrels are said to be much superior to wooden ones, being at the same time lighter, more durable, and cheaper.—Youth's Companion.

Last summer Thomas C. Jones was elected Clerk to the Court of Appeals in Kentucky by a majority of over 50,000, but what is called a Contracting Board, instituted under the laws of that state, decided that he was ineligible for office under the constitution because he had accepted a challenge to fight a duel. Jones declined to surrender the place into which he had been installed, and a suit was brought against him for usurpation of office. The suit having been carried in the highest State court, has been decided in favor of Jones on the ground that the Contesting Board had no jurisdiction in the case, as the deprivation of the right to hold office is a punishment which can be inflicted only by a court after a trial by jury, and in this case, the defendant had never been legally convicted of being concerned in a duel.

Combined Ice-Boat and Fire Engine.

Messrs. Creighton, of Abo, Finland, have built and engined a remarkable little craft for the Russian government. She is 82 feet long, 14 feet beam, and draws 6 feet. She is fitted with a pair of ordinary high pressure engines with 13-inch cylinders, and 18-inch stroke. To fit her for discharging the duties of a fire engine she is provided with two steam pumps, double-acting, with steam cylinders 8-inch stroke and 9-inch diameter, while the pumps are 4-inch diameter. The steam pressure is 60 pounds.

The vessel is specially intended to maintain communication between the island of Cronstadt and the main land. For a considerable portion of the winter the ice will carry any weight that can be put on it, but in the spring and autumn the ice, though too strong to prevent the use of ordinary boats, will not carry horses or sleighs. During the prevalence of westerly winds the ice, though broken up, becomes densely packed. The ice-boat is built of unusual strength, her skin being of 7-16-in. and ½-in. best boiler plates, double riveted throughout, her frames being of correspoding strength. In work she is driven straight at the ice, on which the bow runs until her weight breaks down a large mass, while at the same time fifty sailors roll her to keep her free from accumulations of ice on her sides, and this rolling is kept up all the time she is under way. She often sticks fast, nevertheless, and has to back one hundred yards or so before she goes at the ice again with a rush. Some idea of the difficulties of this navigation in winter may be gathered by the fact that while in summer the passage is done by steamer in thirty minutes, the ice-boat is often seven hours in making it.—Engineer.

Big Words.

A citizen of Baltimore has been hunting up some big words, and publishes them in the American for the benefit of the getters-up of spelling matches. The first word offered is said to be the longest word in the English language, used often in old plays, and placed in the mouth of Costard, the clown in "Love's Labor Lost," act V., scene 1., "Honorificabilitudinitatibus."

The next in Pilgrims of the Rhine, by Bulwer, "Amoronthologosphorus."

The next from Rabelais, "Antipericatametanaparbeugedamphic - Ribrationestoordecautium."

The next is the name of an officer now in Madrid, Don Juan Nepomuceno de Burionagonatorecagageazcoecua.

The next is a town in the Isle of Mull, "Drimtaidhvrickhillichatten."

The next, "Jungefrauenzimmerdurchschwindsuchttoedlungsgegenverien."

"Nitrophenylenediamine" and "Polyphrasticontinomimegalundulation," are two words that recently appeared in the London Times and Star.

"Sankashtachaturthivratodyapana."

"Swapandhaksharimanamantrastora."

The names of two productions of Sanscrit literature.

"Lepadotemachoselachosegaleokraniolelphanodrimupotrimmatokichlepikossuphophatoperiserrtlsktruonopteg kephlokigklopeleiolagoossiralobaphetmganopterugon."

This last word is the largest in any language. It may be found in the "Ekklesiazousai" of Aristophenes, a very excellent comedy, and placed in the mouth of one of the actors. It consists of 169 letters, and makes seventy-seven syllables, and must have created some laughter when spoken. Some actors of the present day would hardly risk it.

Awful Affliction.

The following conversation was overheard the other day among a lot of school-girls, who had congregated in front of a house. Each one in turn appeared to be holding up the domestic skeleton which afflicted their homes. One told how her little brother had broken his leg; another about how sick her mother was, and still another told about how drunk her father would come home every night. In short they all appeared to have some grief to hold up, all but one little beauty, who seemed only unhappy to think there was nothing that she could tell to excite the envy and sympathy of the rest. She listened to the recital of all these troubles as long as she could, and finally expressed herself in this way: "Well, girls, we all have our troubles. Some have sick brothers, and drunken fathers, and ugly mothers. Some of us have got measles, and small-pox, and scrofula. We've got something awful in our family." "What is it?" asked several. "My little brother Benny's left-handed."

Sale of a Wife.

A correspondent of the Utica Observer writing from Rome, N. Y., tells a curious story of one Hezekiah Wright, living a few miles from that city, who lately sold his wife to one Torrence. The agreement between the parties is reproduced as follows: "The agreement witnesseth—That I, Hezekiah Wright, of the first part, for the consideration of three bunches of shingles, one-half acre of unharvested corn, and one-half of an acre of unharvested potatoes, do sell, assign and transfer all my right, title and interest in and to my wife, Mary Wright, to Joseph Torrence, of the second part." [Signed and sealed.] After the instrument in writing had been drawn, the same was read to the wife of the seller, who witnessed the same, and agreed to become the property of the purchaser, and accordingly gathered her personal effects and took up her abode with Mr. Torrence.

A Chicago poet, upon hearing that Nilsson was about to erect cow sheds upon her Peoria lots, has burst forth into the following verse: "Christine, Christine, thy milking do the morn and eve between, and not by the dim religious light of the fitful kerosene; for the cow may plunge, and the lamp explode, and the fire-fiend ride the gale, and shriek the knell of the burning town in the glow of the molten pail!"

The Ohio State Journal tells of a village clergyman who, visiting a parishioner suffering from a lingering disease, expressed to his wife a hope that she sometimes spoke to him of the future. "I do, indeed, sir," was the reply. "Often and often I wakes him in the night and says: 'John, John, you little think of the torments as is prepared for you.'"

PAT'S CRITICISM.

There's a story that's old,
But good if twice told,
Of a doctor of limited skill,
Who cured beast and man
On the "cold water plan,"
Without the small help of a pill.

On his portal of pine
Hung an elegant sign
Depicting a beautiful rill,
And a lake, where a sprite,
With apparent delight,
Was sporting in sweet deshabille.

Pat McCarty one day,
As he sauntered that way,
Stood and gazed at that portal of pine,
When the doctor with pride
Stepped up to his side,
Saying: "Pat, how is that for a sign?"

"There's wan thing," says Pat,
"Ye've lift out o' that,
Which, be jabers, is quite a mistake;
It's [illegible] and it's nate,
But to make it complete,
Ye shud have a foine burd on the lake."

"Ah! Indeed! pray then tell,
To make it look well,
What bird do you think it may lack?"
Says Pat, "Of the same
I've forgotten the name,
But the song that he sings is 'quack! quack!'"

Having made no will, the octoroon wife could only claim the wife's usual share of the property. The estate was worth about $1,000,000. The children are contesting her right to anything, basing their suit on the fact of Mrs. Milliken being part negro, the California law declaring that "all marriages between white persons and negroes or mulattoes are illegal and void."

BLOODY ISLAND.

The Famous Dueling Ground Opposite St. Louis—Some Noted Affairs of Honor.

When Louisiana became a territory of the United States in 1804, by purchase from Napoleon the First, St. Louis was the capital of Upper Louisiana. It was only a thriving village, with its storehouses and cottages scattered along the rocky bank of the Mississippi. But with the change of government came a greater change; new faces brought new ideas. The trading Yankee and the chivalrous Southern jostled the emigrant from Great Britain and the continent. Human life had always been held cheaply; but not before had the peculiar doctrines of the code duello been reckoned superior to the code Napoleon, then the common law of the country. The lawyers of St. Louis were the first to give the go-by to the law. In 1817 Thomas H. Benton and Charles Lucas were practicing attorneys in the Territorial Courts. Lucas holding the office of Attorney-General. In the trial of an ordinary case sharp words and personalities were used by both lawyers. Benton, always a vindictive man, challenged Lucas; but the challege was declined, Lucas assuming that he would not be held responsible for words used in professional argument. Benton, intent upon satisfaction, continued to insult the General in such away that soon after Lucas sent him a challenge, which was promptly accepted. The place of meeting agreed upon was an island in the river just opposite St. Louis. This island, afterward famous for its duels, was a long narrow strip of land, densely covered for half its area with young cottonwood trees. The island had sprung into existence since the days of the Spanish rule, and its tenure of existence was yet dependent upon the great river that had created it. It was a sort of neutral ground, convenient of access, yet almost beyond the reach of the law and its officers.

The hostile parties just named met on the island with their seconds, exchanged shots, and Lucas was wounded in the neck. The surgeons then interfered and the duel ended. One would think that after such an exchange of illegal arguments the dignity of the law would be respected in future, but such was not the case. A few weeks later the same parties met again in the same thicket of cottonwoods, and this same Benton killed Lucas. The little narrow strip of sand with its thickets of cottonwoods had now become part and parcel of the history of those days. Not a pleasant history to study, either; too many tales of bloodshed and crime; too much of lawlessness and rapine. And now that long sand-bar became Bloody Island; a most proper name for the scene of such sanguinary deeds.

A few years later another affair of honor came off beneath the shade of the cottonwood saplings on Bloody Island. In 1823 an article appeared in the Missouri Republican reflecting upon the official conduct of Gen. Rector, who was then Surveyor-General of Illinois and Missouri. In the absence of Rector, his his brother promptly demanded the name of the writer from the editor. Joshua Barton, a brother of David Barton, Judge of one of the Territorial courts, was the writer named. Rector challenged Barton; the challenge was accepted, and they met on Bloody Island. Barton was killed at the very first fire.

But now comes the most sanguinary chapter of this fearful record. It was seven years later and St. Louis had become a city. Wealth had come with increase of population. The great Territory of Louisiana had been cut up into smaller parcels, and one of these had become the State of Missouri. Bloody Island remained nearly the same. The floods of mid-summer deposited their yearly contributions of sand and driftwood, and the sand-bar of earlier days had increased somewhat. It had a more permanent look. The cottonwood saplings had become trees. Visitors in search of a restorative for injured honor would find abundant shade. There was no fear of having the sun in their eyes when practicing human at targets. This last duel was another case of satisfaction by proxy. Nicholas Biddle was the President of the United States Bank. His management of that institution was sharply censured by his political enemies, and Spencer Pettis, a prominent citizen of St. Louis, was one of those offending. Maj. Thomas Biddle, a brother of Nicholas Biddle, was a paymaster in the army and then stationed at St. Louis. He determined to punish Pettis for his criticisms of his brother's financial shortcomings. Going to the hotel where Pettis boarded, at a very early hour, before any guest was awake, he learned from a colored servant the location of Pettis's room. He found him asleep. Snatching off the covering he proceeded to cowhide him in bed. Pettis was ill and made little or no resistance. But when he regained his health he went before a Justice of the Peace and made affidavit to the facts just mentioned. The Justice put Biddle under bonds to keep the peace; and believing that Pettis meant mischief, he put him under bonds also. Public opinion was adverse to Biddle's attack upon Pettis, and Biddle was eager to set himself right before the public. When they met before the Justice, Biddle offered to accept a challenge if Pettis would send it. The challenge was sent. The place of meeting Bloody Island.

It was a hot August afternoon that they met under the cottonwoods of Bloody Island to settle this question on injured honor. The river bank at St. Louis was lined with people eager to know the result; for the duel was no secret and its merits were freely discussed by all. Biddle was very near-sighted; so the distance agreed upon was only five paces; and there the two men stood pistol in hand almost breast to breast. When the word was given, both men fired at the same instant. The loud report rang out and the keen-eyed ones on the distant river bank saw the little puff of smoke that floated up above the trees. With the report of the pistol both men fell; the surgeons rushed forward to their work, and the seconds were as eager to assist them, but their principals were past the skill of surgery. Both men were mortally wounded. A few minutes later the excited throng upon the other bank of the river saw people bearing the wounded men to their respective batteaux, which were rowed rapidly across the river. Pettis died the next morning and Biddle two days later. That hot Friday afternoon saw the last of the bloody scenes enacted there to retrieve injured honor. Bloody Island long ago ceased to be an island save in name, and a great dyke bound it fast to the Illinois shore. Then came other dykes and railroads, with depots and all the paraphernalia of commerce and travel. The cottonwoods disappeared and buildings sprang up. Long before that the batteaux and canals had given way to the ferry-boats. A few trees that shaded the victims of injured honor still remain; but what is left for them now? Not one trace of the old times. Wheezing ferries, noisy locomotives, impatient, dusty travelers; and last of all, a giant bridge of steel binding the island fast to the other, the Missouri shore. Traffic, bustle, noise, perhaps pleasure; but not a trace of that earlier honor is left to Bloody Island.

Had to Pay.

A number of persons assembled at the depot of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, about 9:30 o'clock yesterday morning, to see President Grant and his party on the occasion of their departure for Boston, Concord and Lexington to attend the centennial anniversary at the latter place. President Grant, Vice-President Wilson, Secretary Robeson, of the Navy Department; Gen. Belknap, Secretary of War; Secretary Delano, of the Interior; Ex-Gov. Jewell, Postmaster General; Gen. Babcock, President Grant's Private Secretary, and the Chief of Staff of Gov. Gaston, of Massachusetts, reached the depot a few minutes before 10 o'clock, and not being aware of the injunction placed upon the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, restraining the officers from issuing free passes to the Presidential party, President Grant, escorted by Gov. Gaston's Chief of Staff, proceeded to the door of exit to the cars, little dreaming of an impediment to their progress. The doorkeeper, pursuant to instructions from headquarters, politely informed them that it would be necessary to procure tickets before passing to the cars. As the party consisted of ten persons, the payment of $60 was unexpectedly called for; whereupon the representative of Gov. Gaston manifested in plain terms his indignation in regard to the affair, and expressed his views in regard to what he considered a gross insult to the chief magistrate of the nation, who was left standing in an unenviable position near the door of exit, while the tickets were being obtained, probably occupying from five to ten minutes. Mr. Bishop made his appearance in the office about the same time, and explained how he had been precluded from extending to the Presidential party the usual courtesies over the road.—New York Times.

A SECOND FATHER MATTHEW.—Who is there that does not respect the memory of Father Matthew, the great champion of temperance? Innumerable societies bear his honored name; but there is one man who has struck a more sure deathblow to intemperance, and that man is DR. J. WALKER, an old California physician, who has discovered in nature's "meek and lowly herbs," a medicinal "tonic" and gentle stimulant that completely takes the place of the fashionable alcoholic poisons called "tonics," so popular as a compromise between strong drink and cold water, and does away with the mania for drink, and in reality cultivates an involuntary disgust for the same. It even does more: It acts upon the entire physical system, purifies the blood, and produces hale, hardy health. The discoverer of this great medicinal stimulant is surely entitled to the thanks of a whole nation, and it is not extravagant to entitle him "a second Father Matthew." 33

THERE could scarcely be better evidence of the extraordinary excellence of the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs than the fact that they are so largely exported to Europe, where they are so highly appreciated as to find large sales in competition with instruments made there by labor which does not cost half as much. These are the only American organs largely exported.

AS BROAD AS CIVILIZATION.—The agent of the Wilson sewing machine company will, in a few days, sail from San Francisco for Chili, in South America, where he will open a branch house and exhibit the world-renowned Wilson shuttle sewing machine at the grand exposition to be held at Santiago under the auspices of that government. By this step the Wilson sewing machine company will complete the circuit of the globe. They have already immense agencies in China, Japan, British Indies, England, France, and throughout South America. Supreme in its superiority over all other sewing machines, the Wilson goes on widening its field year after year, carrying the blessings of a cheap, durable, and perfect sewing machine to the remotest haunts of civilization. Machines will be delivered at any railroad station in this country, free of transportation charges, if ordered through the company's branch house at 197 State street, Chicago. They send an elegant catalogue and chromo circular free on application. This company want a few more good agents.

DISEASED LUNGS ARE GREATLY ON THE INCREASE IN THIS COUNTRY.—The sudden changing of weather has done much to give rise to Consumption. But thousands bring it on by their own imprudence, such as wearing damp clothing and going from the warm room into the cold air and checking the perspiration, which causes irritation of the Lungs, and then matter or phlegm will collect, which nature will try to remove by coughing. If nature does not raise the matter with ease, and stop the inflammation, tubercles will soon form and consumption will soon follow. Allen's Lung Balsam will cure consumption, if it is only taken in time. For sale by all Medicine Dealers.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is very strongly recommended by the Medical Faculty and is largely prescribed among their Female Patients. It is worthy of all confidence, as may be seen from the following testimonials:

DR. G. B. CHAPMAN, Plattsmouth, Neb., writes: I have under treatment a lady, who, for the past seven years has been afflicted, and, after trying several physicians without receiving benefit, is gaining rapidly on your Favorite Prescription.

ATLANTA, Ill.

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—I have not a word to express my gratitude to you for your advice and assistance in my case. There is not one who has used your medicines since they have been brought here, but that can say with me they have been greatly benefited. Since I have been so helped by its use, six or seven around me left off all doctors and other medicines, and now use it in their families, after being cured of the same disease as mine. You do not know what a wonder it created in our city, by its restoring my sister I wrote you about, for she had been under the care of three of our best doctors, but could not sit up but for a few minutes at one time. I begged of her to try your medicines, and before she had used half the bottles she could go all around the yard; and has now just come home from a visit five miles away.

VINEGAR BITTERS

PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL

DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA

EUREKA

VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

NO MIDDLE MEN with us; this is the secret of our Immense trade. We buy at first hands and sell direct to the consumer; hence, we save our customers the profits of the speculator, jobber and wholesale merchants. These profits amount to from 10 to 20 per cent. Our customers get the benefit of them. Take Teas, for instance, the profits on that article are so great that the price is often doubled before it reaches the consumer. Every time it changes hands there is 10 to 20c. per pound added to it. This, of course, the consumer has to pay. Of course the retailer will endeavor to persuade you that his Teas are worth the money, that they cost him so and so. Well, this is all true, but the trouble is he has paid too much in the first place and can't help himself. He purchases from the wholesale grocer, and the wholesale grocer has to add his 20c. All these extra profits our customers get the benefit of, and it is just the same as Coffees, Sugar,s Spices, Canned Goods, Oysters, &c., as on Teas. No Middle Men with us. They would starve to death if they had to live on the profits they make of us.

The spelling furore demonstrates how little Americans Noah Webster.

J. W. McKay is pushing the work right along on his new residence.

W. D. Rickel has returned home again after quite a visit to the Buckeye country.

We have heard nothing of late in regard to the new railroad project. Why is this?

The Woolen Mills are in a flourishing condition just now, and we may look for a large trade.

Try the COURIER for three months and see how you like it. It will only spend you fifty cents.

J. Orr, of Corunna, has moved the old saloon building occupied by Jno. Hebel to the lot next to the bank.

The bardocket was printed at the COURIER office, and there is a large number of cases to be tried.

One woman of mental activity can if she has any ambition, keep ten families miserable eleven months in the year.

Now we would like to see the marshal have the streets cleaned up in good style and the sidewalks repaired all over the city. Wake 'em up.

Maybe you like some drink, but now I vas gotten mad like-hell, and you better make yourself right avay out, so help me gracious.

Gail Hamilton says that eight out of ten people are great liars. Gail has been spending too much time in Washington.

Mace Long, of Fort Wayne, will locate among us in a short time, for the purpose of selling liquors and will conduct a fifst-class saloon.

The COURIER Job rooms are just about as correct as you find them. Any kind of work can be had and it is all done in the best of style. Give us a trial and be satisfied.

The chances are, that we have a wet season. It will be a good time for those who have hitherto hesitated to set out trees for fear of drouth, to put out all they need.

One of our jours was made a present of a "stomach pump" last Friday. He has use for the machine every now and then, and it will be of great value to him when over-loaded, if he don't pump the daylights out of it to-day.

A Milwaukee baby has been named "Zero" in honor of the cold day on which it was born. The woman who marries that boy when he grows up will assuredly come to naught. Mark these words.

R. H. Gilbert, formerly one of our fellow townsmen, called on us last week. He still remains in the fruit business, but has some notion of starting a temperance paper with J. C. Loveland, Esq. as pardner. Good luck to the paper.

They are harvesting the barley crop in California, but yet that is no reason why an Indiana man should be discouraged from repairing his sidewalk and paying his grocer's bills. We can't all live in California and raise barley.

You can't trust human nature, especially Chicago human nature, and John Lane, of La Crosse, knows it, after living with Mrs. Lane twenty-seven years without a cross word, he came home the other night to find that she had eloped with a Chicago man.

The new law with reference to allowing bounty on fox and wolf scalps fixes the bounty for wolf scalps at $20, and for those of foxes at $5, provided that the animals killed are at least six months old. If under that age the bounties allowed are $3 and $1.50 respectively. These bounties, of course, can be paid in the counties where the animals are killed.

Buck Beer was, for the first time, placed on tap, at several of our saloons in this place on Saturday last. All of the boys took it in, and about eleven o'clock in the evening you could see them start for home in parties of two or three, the middle person having a sort of fountain in his mouth, from which was emitted a most gorgeous and brilliant stream of—puke.

Couldn't do it.

A prisoner at the Detroit Police Court called an acquaintance the other day to swear to his general good reputation and when the man had taken the stand the lawyer asked: "Are you acquainted with the prisoner's reputation?"

"Yes sir."

"And do you swear that it is good?"

"No, I can't," replied the man after a moment's thought. "I won,t swear to the reputation of any man who sits in his house and blows a brass horn all day and half the night."

And he stepped down.

If we are to have any saloons at all let them be, what is commonly called, first-class. A man in this business don't want to be so close fisted that he will hug a nickle all night, and spend an hour the next morning, goggles on, to see if its genuine. Such men have no buisness to sell liquor. Their hearts are hardened, and their sole aim is to become wealthy, consequently they care for nobody, or how they get money.

The Plymouth Democrat says: "It is a generally admitted fact that the wheat crop of Marshall county bids fair to be a comparative failure, except in the townships of Bourbon, Tippecanoe and German. In exposed positions the wheat was badly winter-killed, and what little was left of it has since been spring killed. We anticipate the present dull prospect may be materially improved when warm weather comes, if it ever does come.

The present rage for spelling scholos revives an anecdote of Gen. Scott. He had drawn up the rough draft of an order, in which the word "wagon" occured. The general insert'd one "g" too many, and his clerk, on discovering it, timidly asked what authority he spelled "waggon" with two "g's." "On the authority of Lieutenant General Scott, commanding the armies of the United States, sir," thunder the old General. The clerk at least, thought the authority sufficient.

The other day a seedy-looking old chap entered a wholesale house, leaving the door open behind him. A clerk noted his carelessness and called out: "It's ten degrees below zero." "I did think of buying about $10,000 worth of goods," said the stranger as he halted, "but if this is the way you treat——" "Hold on! hold on!" exclaimed the clerk walking up, "its only five below—three—two—it's way up above, and we've got to keep open that door or pull our coats off! Right this way, sir. Now then what is it?"

We are in position to corroborate the truthfulness of this paragraph, clipped from the Norristown "Herald:" When a man hands an editor an article for publication, and asks him to "fix it up" because he "wrote it in a hurry" and "had'nt time to revise it," you may know that he commenced the article directly after supper, and wrestled with it until after midnight, rewriting it fourteen times, destroyed a quire of foolscap, and "blessed" his pen every two minutes. That's the way they generally write an article when they are "in a hurry" and have no time to revise it.

This spelling school furore has been of great help to at least one Detroiter. He has been courting a girl for three years past and hadn't the courage to speak his mind. As they were seated on a sofa the other night she referred to the spelling school excitement and added:

"Matrimony is an awful long word to spell, isn't it?"

He leaned over, grasped her hand, and the next morning he had arrangements made to be married on the Fourth of July.

Garret city seems to be attracting the attention of some of our people at present. Several have been down there to investigate, and some have made purchases, on which they expect to realize a large advance. If the R. R. Company should build shops and employ as many hands there as is anticipated by interested parties, it will be quite an important place. But railroad companies are doubtful and uncertain institutions.—National Banner.

The purchasers at Garret begin to feel sick about now, and wish the pollowogs had swallowed the burg last summer.—We learn, from a reliable source, that no shops will be built until next fall. We think this is a bad move on the part of the B. & O. men, as everybody will now loose confidence in the location of these shops at Garret. The promise is wore out, and we'll wager a nickle on the shops being built at the Auburn Junction. It may be they'll have a plug round house at Garret to run their engines in when they need cleaning up, but that's about all. Garret is gone; yes, and the blackbirds will sing where she lies.

The Courier has the reputation of being the boss.

Humbugs.

As this State has been, and is still being overrun by a class of peddlers who pretend to sell cloth at about half their apparant value, we take the opportunity, as many others have before us, of warning our friends against having anything to do with them—they are swindlers and humbugs; and their cloths are worthless. These goods are cut up into patterns of a certain number of yards, and the swindlers claim that "under a new law" Congress allows such cut goods to come free of duty provided they are sold direct to the actual customer. True, they may be smugglers, but their story about the new law is bosh; no such law has ever been passed, and it is not probable that it ever will be. Much the best way is to let such peddlers alone and buy only of reliable dealers. Several parties in this vicinity have recently been "taken in" by these humbugs to the tune of from sixty to one hundred dollars.—[Wolcotville Register.

A Little Mixed.

A shock-headed youth went into Morris' music store, Saturday afternoon, and softly scratching the skin of one leg with the foot of the other, asked if Mr. Morris had the new songs.

"Certainly," said the gentleman, stepping spryly back of the counter; "which one do you want?"

"Have you got that air piece called—called—' here the young man paused and stared wildly about the store, and then suddenly added—"called— Gray Hair in the Butter?"

"Whats that," said Mr. Morris, rubbing his hands in painful abstraction.

"Gray Hair in the Butter," replied the young man, changing legs.

"Perhaps," kindly suggested a gentleman who has boarded for twelve years "our young friend means, Silver Threads Among the Gold."

"That's it; by gum," shouted the young man in a burst of pleasure.

Mr. Morris had it.

The Man Who Wanted Information.

Yesterday noon while all the people around the office except the "head reporter" were at dinner the smell of smoke suddenly became apparent, and a fat man, smoking a big pipe, came toiling up stairs. When he had recovered his breath and taken a seat he inquired.

"Is der big editor what knows exery-ding in?"

"No—gone to dinner," was the reply.

"Und he shall come back purty soon?"

"In about two hours."

"I can't wait so quick as dat, I haf to go to a funeral."

"He is a great preacher, and he lives in Brooklyn."

"Zo? Und what he do?"

"He got one of these tobacco boxes with a needle in the cover, and carried around in his pocket. When a man tried to open it the needle went into his thumb about twenty-five feet."

"Is dat possible?"

"Yes and he had his vest-pocket made so deep that a cigar would go clear out of sight, and he kept it full and deceived the public."

"My zoul! but is dat zo?"

"Yes, and he kept an old wild-cat bill in his wallet to lend out when a man wants to secure the lone of a dollar for a few minutes."

THE CALIF AND THE DEVIL.

An Oriental Tale.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

A pious Calif unaware
Was sleeping past the hour of prayer,
When, of a sudden, Satan came
And woke him up. "In Allah's name,
Arise!" he said, "and go and pray;
The dawn is deepening into day,
And still thou liest here in bed!"
"And who are you?" the Calif said;
"No matter who or what am I,"
The stranger said, in curt reply;
"'Tis quite enough for thee to know
My counsel's good; so, prithee, go
Straight to the mosque; nor longer stay
Sleeping the sacred hour away!"
"Your act seems kindly meant, I own;"
The Calif said; "but in your tone
There's something wrong; methinks I hear
In that the Devil's mocking sneer;
And then, despite your words of grace,
Pardon! I do not like your face!"
"Mere fancy, sire!" the stranger said,
(Tossing in scorn his haughty head);
"I'm not the being that [illegible] paint
With hoof and horns and swinging tail,
To turn the cheeks of children pale;
(A copy of the pagan Pan)
But—as you see—a gentleman;
Who—doubt the statement as you will—
Keeps something of the angel still."
"You are The Tempter—that is clear,"
The Calif said; "and yet 'tis queer
You bade me rise and go and pray!
Tell me what wicked motive lay
Beneath advice so seeming good?"
"Ah!" said the fiend, "what likelihood
Is there that Satan tells the truth?
Yet, would you know the very sooth,
Pray listen (may it be in vain!)
'Twas but to harm you I was fain
To wake you up for morning prayers;
For well I knew if, unawares,
You slept too long, your penitence
Would soon wash out the slight offense;
Whereas, if thus from year to year
You kept your conscience wholly clear
In trifles; and could scarce detect
One fault of ritual neglect—
Puffed up with vanity and pride,
In mortal sin you might have died!"

LOVE OR PRIDE?

I.

Great purple shadows swept across the hay-fields; the distant landscape was becoming indistinct, and the moon was slowly rising in the heavens.

After awhile the twilight deepened into as much of darkness as there would be in the summer night, and silence fell upon the earth. Then a girl stole noiselessly across a small garden, and stood beside a gate that led into the adjoining church-yard. A yew-tree spread its dark branches wide above her, but the silver tints that were slanting down upon the tall gravestones, and bring out the delicate lines of the old church spire, touched also her white face, making it whiter than usual. She did not start as a tall figure approached from the farther side of the churchyard. She had evidently been expecting some one, and when she heard the words—

"You are out late, Miss Jervis"—

She quietly answered—

"I was waiting for you; I wanted to say good-by to you before you went away."

"I thought you had done that already," replied the young man with some bitterness.

"Not quite," returned the girl, wearily; "you were too angry for me to say it as I wished."

"Had I not the right to be so?" he asked. "Ever since I have been at Shelford you have been deceiving me. I believed you to be as earnest as I was myself, and now—" He paused.

"And now?"

Her voice had a sharp ring in it as she repeated his words, as though she would give denial to what he had said; but her face looked like stone in the moonlight, white and immovable, as she continued—

"I did not understand that you could really be in earnest, otherwise I might have told you before what I have told you to-day."

"You did not believe in me—you looked upon me as heartless—as a deceiver. You do not believe in me now."

"I do."

"What do you believe?" he asked impetuously; "nothing good, or you would not give me the answer you have given me."

"Everything good, except the knowing what is good for yourself. I want you now to say good-by to me without any anger in your heart. The day will come when you will perhaps bless me for what I have had courage to do to-day." And she held out her hand.

The young man hesitated. "Is there no hope?"

"None."

Her voice rang low and clear through the summer air. Again he hesitated, then suddenly taking both her hands in his, he bent down and kissed her for the first time.

She gave a faint cry, and disengaged herself.

"We part in peace."

And with these words she turned and fled, not looking back, or perhaps she might have repented her decision.

Once in the house she sat down in the empty sitting-room, made light as day by the moonbeams. The old dog rose as she came in, and when she threw herself into a chair he laid his head in her lap.

There came a sound of clattering of plates in the kitchen on the opposite side of the narrow passage, and her mother's voice sounded sharply, giving her directions about supper.

Presently she entered.

"Where have you been, Ally? How ill you look! and you're all shivering! Come into the kitchen, child; Anne's gone off to bed, and there's a bit of fire in the grate. It might be winter instead of midsummer, to feel your hands."

Alice rose mechanically. She walked dreamily into the little kitchen, where her mother drew a chair to the fire for her.

Presently a ruddy, good-humored-looking youth entered, saying—

"Let me have my supper here, mother. The fire looks pleasant, though it is summer time."

Mrs. Jervis opened the oven door and took out a covered dish that had been kept warm there. Alice, watching her as she placed it on the table and laid a knife and fork beside it, instinctively roused herself, and taking a jug from the dresser went to the cellar to draw some beer for her brother.

It was a relief to her to perform this menial service. It seemed almost an answer to the question she had been asking herself over and over again since her conversation with Mr. Scrope in the morning. She was even glad that all around her looked so commonplace, so poor—poorer and commoner than ever to-night. And a bitter feeling rose in her heart and made her almost indignant that some people should be so much more favored in a worldly point of view than others.

When she went to her room, instead of undressing, she opened the window and gazed out toward the yew-tree under which she had parted with Mr. Scrope, and then suddenly untwisting her long hair she turned to the looking-glass, not with any feeling of vanity, but in order to find what had so attracted him.

It was more than a handsome face that answered back her gaze, one which showed an amount of earnestness and intelligence not often met with. Of this she was no judge herself, neither of the continual change of expression which Mr. Scrope had begun by curiously observing, and ended by being thoroughly interested in. He was passing the long vacation at Shelford, reading and fishing, and had made the acquaintance of William Jervis on the banks of the river, and through him, whom it was a condescension on the part of Mr. Scrope to notice, of Alice herself.

Alice perhaps understood the footing on which they stood better than her brother, and the innate pride in her nature caused her to accept it with reservations. She felt the gulf between them and measured it by the world's standard. Therefore when Mr. Scrope made his somewhat startling offer she, in spite of her surprise, was not unprepared with her answer.

And now that she had given it, she asked herself if she had done right.

Mr. Scrope was an only son; a brilliant future was before him; a world of which she knew nothing was familiar to him. Could she, who was accustomed to the littlenesses incident to circumstances somewhat above actual poverty, move with propriety in circles accustomed to every luxury? Would his relatives, so far above hers, accept her and her belongings? She answered, "No." Mr. Scrope had argued—what matter since it rested with him to give her place and position in the world as his wife? But that she knew would be a separation for him from all former associations, and her own unfitness to move in her lover's sphere would make her a clog upon the life of him to whom, before she knew it, she had given her heart.

Such had been the train of argument she had pursued, and she had struggled free from the prospect open to her not without pain, and had dismissed it as a dream of beauty that had naught to do with waking hours. And now——

But it was over. The morning rose, and she went about her tasks as usual, perhaps even more energetically, since she needed an outlet for her pent-up feelings. Mingled with pain there came a sense of happiness in the knowledge of Mr. Scrope's love. To have possessed it—nay, perhaps to possess it still—carried her into another world, in which, however, she must always be alone, since all that had passed must forever remain her own especial secret.

II.

Mr. Scrope went abroad; and after a time he returned home to begin his career.

Alice Jervis pursued her homely and monotonous life. She grew quieter and graver, and worked more diligently. She believed that she had decided rightly as regarded Mr. Scrope's happiness, and the sacrifice she had made for his sake made her feel that she had a right to be interested in him, and she lived in the excitement of seeing his name in the papers and in gaining every particular of him within her grasp. She smiled when she read his name among the presentations at Court or noted his presence at Court balls. At such times she looked down at the shabby dress and the poor appointments surrounding her, and wondered what sort of an appearance she would have made in other circumstances.

At length she saw another announcement. Mr. Scrope was going to be married.

She turned pale, and put down the paper.

And yet she had expected this announcement—had looked for it day after day. Nevertheless, she felt a strange pang, which as long as he was unmarried she had escaped.

Down by the river, where the water-flags hoisted their yellow standards among the reeds, and where the forget-me-nots blossomed along the banks, she sauntered, listening to the murmuring waters, whose burden was "Past, past, past." Even Rover appeared to understand it, for he looked up into her face and whined.

The great gray bars of clouds spread across the setting sun and blotted out the sunlight; but still Alice paced up and down under the pollard windows until the evening was far advanced. Night was setting in around her; the light and life were over. She had scarcely realized until the present moment how present Mr. Scrope had been in her every thought.

The morning after reading the news in the papers another very startling piece of information came to her—

She was an heiress.

By one of those strange chances in life that are so common nowadays, her mother's brother beginning life as an artisan had amassed a princely fortune. And he had left it between Alice Jervis and her brother.

And Alice Jervis sat down and wept bitterly. To her it had come as a mockery. Her lot in life was cast; what did she want with money now?

In due time she read of the marriage itself; she cut it out of the paper and placed it in her pocket-book. It was all over.

III.

Three years slipped away. Three travelers entered an hotel in a little foreign town. One, a beautiful woman, a little past her first youth, whom one knew in a moment, in spite of the improvement that had taken place; but her brother was scarcely to be recognized. A tutor and three years of foreign life had caused a marvellous transformation. The third, an elderly lady, was not much altered, excepting that her dress was handsome as heart could desire.

They took their places at the table d'hote, and exactly opposite to them sat a lady and gentleman. The latter looked wearied, and his short black moustache twitched with the curvings of the restless mouth beneath it. The lady was fair, fashionable and vivacious.

Alice Jervis started. She would have moved, but William Jervis, all ignorant of past events, had exclaimed:

"Mr. Scrope!"

Mr. Scrope looked across, wondering at the friendly recognition from an apparent stranger. Then his eye fell upon Alice and he started, but quickly recovering himself he bowed, saying:

"Pardon me if I did not at first remember you."

Mrs. Scrope had turned in delight towards William Jervis.

"The first English voice, excepting my husband's, that I have heard for three weeks. I do not understand Italian and have consequently had no one to talk to but Mr. Scrope. Can you imagine anything more dreadful?"

Then turning to her husband she said, "You must introduce me to your English friends."

"Mrs. Scrope—Mrs. and Miss Jervis," said Mr. Scrope, his look riveted on Alice.

The face that had never left his memory in spite of his marriage, had grown to a higher beauty than even he had imagined to be possible. And, though he knew it not, it had come about through her striving after an ideal that she deemed worthy of him.

Stilling the pulses that throbbed so painfully Alice conversed with him as with an old acquaintance, and yet the remembrance of their parting on that moonlight night was vividly present to both of them.

Mrs. Scrope talked incessantly, the more especially as William Jervis was a lively talker, with a frank, half-jesting, half-deferential manner that had something very winning in it.

Alice Jervis watched Mrs. Scrope narrowly, and wondered why Mr. Scrope had married her. And instinctively the answer came, because he did not care very much about her, but found that the alliance would add lustre to his career. There was something paradoxical in the idea, but it passed with her. She had argued that if Mr. Scrope had really cared for herself, to care much for Mrs. Scrope was impossible.

So they met, and so they parted, in the little out of the way Italian town; and Alice had seen Mr. Scrope once more. Was she glad or sorry?

The Scropes returned to England—the Jervises remained abroad. And they heard nothing more of one another.

IV.

Exactly why she had come there she could not tell. It was more to gratify an old longing than for any definite reason, though she had persuaded herself into the belief that she had business at Shelford. At any rate, upon the anniversary of that day, eight years ago, when she had waited under the yew-tree to say good-by to Mr. Scrope, Alice Jervis stood with her hand on the wicket-gate, quietly reviewing her life, and once again asking herself whether love or pride had had the greater part in her decision.

The branches of the yews were waving gently, the roses were rustling their silver-tipped leaves, and the white moonlight fell upon the graves. Still with her hand upon the garden gate, she looked toward the church, trying to believe that the years had stood still, and she was there waiting for Mr. Scrope.

She was turning away when a dark figure approached her and a well-remembered voice said:

"Miss Jervis!"

"Mr. Scrope!"

"Yes; I was waiting for you. I wished to see you before you went away."

Almost her own words in their last interview.

She looked up at him half fearfully. It was so strange to see him there at that hour of the night, and an almost superstitious awe crept over her.

"I wanted to tell you that you have ruined my life so far. I heard that you were at Shelford. I knew that you would be here to-night, and I have come to ask you if you repent the past, and are willing to atone for it."

Alice shrank back.

"Mr. Scrope," was all she could say.

"The inferiority, if there be any, is on my side," he said; "you have improved the past—I have wasted it. Yet the wasting of it I lay to your charge. I knew you better than you knew yourself. I wanted a wife who would understand me and would give me sympathy. You could have done this and you refused it. Will you refuse it now?"

Bewildered, and yet indignant, Alice shrank further away from him.

"Mr. Scrope," she said, "I bid you go back to your wife. I bid you to repair the brilliant prospects you seem so wrongly to have marred."

"I wish I could," he answered sorrowfully, "My wife is dead, Alice, or I should not be here to-night. She died two years ago. You are hard and unjust as you have ever been."

"Dead!" stammered Alice. "How could I know? I have but just returned to England." She moved nearer to him; she held out her hand, "Forgive me," she said.

And their eyes met; and Mr. Scrope, looking down into hers, stooped and kissed the quivering lips for the second time in his life.—Jean Bonœur.

GEN. PERKINS, of Kentucky, a ranting demagogue was once canvassing that State with Tom. Marshall in a hotly contested election. He was boasting one day that his father was a cooper, that he didn't belong to the kid-glove aristocracy, etc. His great fondness was for whisky, and the more he drank the prouder he became of being the son of a cooper. Marshall, in replying to one of Perkins' speeches, said: "Fellow-citizens, this man's father may have been a very good cooper, I don't deny that, but I do say gentlemen, that he put a mighty poor head into that whisky barrel.

A SNAKE AND ALLIGATOR FIGHT.—A snake fight was advertised at Palatka, Fla., and the gathering of spectators was very large. A large rattlesnake and an adder were put into the arena together, but neither would attack the other. Then a young alligator and the rattlesnake were tried, and an encounter immediately began. The alligator was bitten four times, but he finally crushed the snake to death between his jaws, and subsequently died of the reptile's poison.

A BOSTON young lady, desirous of obtaining the autograph of the poet Whittier, and fearing that an ordinary request would be disregarded, wrote to him asking if he knew the authorship of the poem entitled Beautiful Snow. She received the following reply:

"MY DEAR FRIEND—I really don't know. We have had so much of it this winter that I am not disposed to agree with the unknown author in his praise of Beautiful Snow. Thy friend,
"Amesbury, Mass. JOHN G. WHITTIER."

Some Curious Things in Housekeeping.

Every branch of science, says Scribner's Magazine, has its marvels; but, expecting to meet in nature with wonders that baffle knowledge, we are not so much astonished at these as at the startling facts that are forced upon us from day to day in social life. Some of the most surprising of these confront us in the developments of the science of housekeeping. They are entirely beyond explanation, and would be beyond belief if they rested on mere assertion; but as all of us, unfortunately, have tested them by our own senses, we accept them with wonder, and with some show of resignation.

Take an important branch of housekeeping—cookery. How inexplicable are some of the results of culinary study. A woman with whom we once lived for a time had kept house for thirty-five years, had never had a servant, and had, during that time, as she informed us, "baked twice a week regular." Consequently, to go into the statistics of the matter, bread had been baked in that establishment 3,640 times. Deducting 240 for occasional sickness or absence of the mistress (a large allowance, for she was healthy, and seldom went from home), and we have 3,400 times that this woman had made and baked bread.

She used good flour, and yet her bread was invariably damp, sticky, and unfit for a savage to eat, and no Christian stomach could possibly digest it with comfort. Now surely this was a wonderful thing! By what methods unfathomable to ordinary reason could she have avoided in thirty-five years' practice learning how to make good yeast, how much to work the dough, how long it should stand to get light, what temperature the oven should be, and the proper length of time to bake it? How could she help doing it right the three thousand four hundredth time? It would seem that a vast amount of labor would be necessary to do it badly! She was a woman of average good sense, and, no doubt, conscientious. She had no aspirations and no "mission," and read nothing but a weekly religious newspaper. Her whole mind was in her housekeeping, and here was the result!

Another woman, now over fifty years of age, has cooked more or less, generally more, since she was twelve. She has a special liking for lamb-chops, and has cooked them very many times. And to this day she serves up liver-colored chops, fried, and swimming in a greasy liquid! Merely looking at them will give a right-minded man dyspepsia. This woman has eaten lamb-chops elsewhere, cooked according to the best civilized methods, and has praised them; but each time she returns serenely to her frying-pan and grease. Now upon what hypothesis can this be explained? Can it be possible that there are human beings so constituted that their bodies and minds act independently, so that the sensation of taste has no mental effect whatever? For in these instances the results were not the effect of carelessness or indifference—they both thought the horrid abominations were feasts for the gods.

And not the least curious things in these cases is that these poor cooks have sharp eyes for the faults of the butcher and the baker. The butcher knows better than to offer a stale or tough chop to No. 2; and if the baker were to serve No. 1 with such bread as she makes herself she would refuse to pay for it, entirely unconscious of the reflection she would thus cast upon herself.

Why do some housekeepers continue, week after week, month after month, and year after year, to use raw flour for "thickening?" Would it not be reasonable to suppose that after a number of years—say ten—the raw flour, and the stickiness of the compound, would suggest to them the possibility of altering their manner of preparing it?

We have suggested but a few things that happened to occur to us, and these belong to only one branch of housekeeping; but if we were to pursue our inquiries into other departments we should be met at every turn with phenomena similar to the above. They indicate the existence in the midst of home life of marvels that science has so far failed to explain, and for which reason can find no law.

A College of Music in New York

The rumors of a proposed College of Music, endowed largely by unknown gentlemen, are verified. A well-known merchant of New York, a bachelor upwards of 80 years of age, has given $1,000,000 and signed a will bequeathing all the rest of his estate, valued at $4,000,000, except a life interest in about $250,000 of estate to several relatives. The character has already passed one branch of the Legislature. The Trustees have not yet been selected, but the names of Cornelius Vanderbilt, W. B. Astor, D. A. Kingsland, Dr. Elmer, Chas. D. Tiffany and Mr. Witthaus are mentioned as probable members of the board. The college is to be dedicated to the daughters of America, but is not to exclude males. The building will occupy a site of 300 by 200 feet and the ground is said to be that occupied by the Hippodrome. An effort will be made to secure Richard Wagner at the head of the institution and Theodore Thomas and Doctors Pearce and Damrosch are mentioned as members of the faculty. Work on the permanent building commences next fall, but the school will be started before that time in temporary quarters.—New York Tribune.

Ants That Bury the Dead.

It has been discovered that there are some ants which actually bury their dead. Recently a lady had been obliged to kill some ants, the bodies of which lay about on the ground. Presently a single ant found its dead companions, and examined them and then went off. Directly it returned with a number of others and proceeded to the dead bodies. Four ants went to each corpse, two lifting it and the other two following, the main body, some two hundred in number, following behind. The four bearers took their office in turns, one pair relieving the other when they were tired. They went straight to a sandy hillock, and there the bearers put down their burdens, and the others immediately began to dig holes. A dead ant was then placed in each grave, and the soil filled in. The most curious part of the proceeding was that some six or seven ants refused to assist in grave-digging; upon which the rest set on them, killed them, dug one large hole, and tumbled them unceremoniously into it.

An Item for Housekeepers.

In cleaning table-lamps, remove the shade carefully before you soil your hands with the oil. Provide a bottle of warm water a little above blood heat, and in this first wash the glass chimney, then pour the oil from the fountain, and remove any sediment from about the brass work; screw up the wick, and if it is not long enough for the time it may probably be required to burn replace it with a fresh one, by means of the stick. Having washed all the brass work, wipe the parts carefully, screw everything in its former position, and take care, in replacing the wick, that the small notch at the side of the brass enters the groove which is sunk to receive it; turn it up and down once or twice to make sure that it works freely; then prime it (that is, singe the top), replace the fountain (filled with oil, chimney and shade; the lamp is now ready for use. Purchase the best oil, as the inferior qualities emit an offensive smell, and produce so much sediment that the delicate works of the lamps are quickly clogged, and the current of air impeded, which causes it to burn dim. Occasionally it is necessary to wash the shade. This should be done in clean, luke-warm water, with the admixture of a little soda, which removes all the stains and does not injure the appearance of the ground glass. The glass chimneys will sometimes crack with the heat, particularly in frosty weather. This may be prevented by scoring a small notch in the glass at top and bottom.

Don't Eat Save When Hungry.

Dr. Hall declares unhesitatingly that it is wrong to eat without an appetite, for it shows there is no gastric juice in the stomach, and that nature does not need food; and not needing it, there being no fluid to receive and act upon it, it remains there only to putrefy, the very thought of which should be sufficient to deter any man from eating without an appetite for the remainder of his life. If a tonic is taken to whet the appetite, it is a mistaken course, for its only result is to cause one to eat more, when already an amount has been eaten beyond what the gastric juice is able to prepare. The object to be obtained is a larger supply of gastric juice, not a larger supply of food; and whatever fails to accomplish that essential object fails to have any efficiency toward the cure of dyspeptic diseases. The formation of gastric juices is directly proportioned to the wear and tear of the system, which it is to be the means of supplying, and this wear and tear can only take place as the result of exercise. The efficient remedy for dyspepsia is work—out-door work—beneficial and successful in direct proportion as it is agreeable, interesting and profitable.

A Lover Equal to the Occasion.

The Cedar Falls (Iowa) Gazette tells this: "A young lady living a few miles out of Cedar Falls took it into her head to go to Kansas to teach school, and a young fellow that had been keeping company with her went to Nebraska to make himself a home. Well, the young lady thought she would come home, so she sent her side-saddle and some other things on before she started, but by some accident she was taken to Sioux City, where she had to stay all night. In the meantime the young man had got up a house, and finding it lonesome work living alone, sent for his two sisters. He went to Sioux City to meet them on the same evening that the young lady arrived there. Looking through the register to find his sisters' names he came across the name of his former sweetheart; so, his sisters not appearing, hunted up the young lady and talked business so well that they were married the same night, and started for his home the next morning. Names—Hattie Raymond and Jean Emerson.

Speculation Extraordinary.

Numerous applications have been received at the United States Treasury at Washington from various parts of the country, for the first sheets of fractional currency printed with the new signature of Mr. New, the new Treasurer. These applicants express the belief by offering a premium, that they could sell the "stamps" with the new signature at a large advance to the public for keepsakes. Similar applications have also been received for the last sheets printed with Spinner's signature before he goes out of office. This rage for speculating upon the petty foibles of the people is taking an unusual turn in this matter, since neither signature is in the handwriting of the Treasurer, and all are simply printed fac-similes. But a fool and his money are soon parted.

Steam Power.

Dr. Engel, Director of the Prussian Statistical Bureau, has been endeavoring to ascertain the amount of steam-power in use in the world. The returns are fragmentary, but Dr. E. estimates that there are at least 150,000 stationary engines with from three millions to three and a half millions of horse-power, 50,000 locomotives with an aggregate of 10,000,000 horse-power, and 5,225 ocean steamers. The United States leads the world in the number of stationary and locomotive engines, but Great Britain is credited with having more steam vessels and more tonnage than all the rest of the world.

THE Slawson Courier is enterprising in gleaning the local news. Two weeks ago it said:

"Mr. Kellogg's boy window is very beautiful with its numerous plants."

After the paper was issued the error was discovered, and amended in the next number as follows:

"What we tried to say in our last issue was that Mr. Kellogg's bay widow was full of beautiful plants. It is so rarely that our argus-eyed assistant permits a typographical blunder to creep into the paper that we freely forgive him this time."

This was on Friday, and the editor of the Courier hasn't had his clothes off since, while the argus-eyed assistant is supposed to be somewhere in Merrill's woods, five miles north of the town, bareheaded, and with only one boot.—Danbury News.

THE FIRST COUPLE.

When bright with woman's glance and grace,
Fair Eve to Adam's love was given,
He gazed upon her beauteous face,
And thought that earth indeed was heaven.
Each day some new delight appeared,
Each hour some new attraction sprung
And found each link of life endeared,
At last he found—that she'd a tongue.

Close hid within those ruby gates,
With all those pearly guards to screen it,
He heard her tongue—tradition states—
An hour or two before he'd seen it.
She teas'd, as only woman can,
A power they have kept for ages long—
Her plan was still the better plan,
Her tongue by far the better tongue.

Despite her charms that sweetly beamed,
Poor Adam thought, before a week,
That though perfection else, it seemed
A great mistake to make her speak.
Yet was she precious to his heart;
And as for faults—why, she was young;
He would not with an atom part,
No—not a jot, except her tongue.

COMMON sense is an element in which many persons are sadly wanting. Common sense implies sound perception, correct reason, mental capacity and good understanding. It is not to be acquired entirely by education; it is a sort of instinct. It may be polished and made more acute by experience. There is a great deal of sound philosophy in a little common sense sometimes, and the exercise of it upon certain occasions would save many men from subsequent humiliation.

HERE is Sardou's latest fling at American girls. The scene is at a fair; Lucretia (with a little note book in her hand)—"One kiss or two?" Robert (surprised)—"I should prefer two." Lucretia (writing in her note book and then offering him her bare shoulder)—"Take them." Robert (surprised)—"I—I—" Lucretia—"Oh, I am getting up a charitable subscription, and every kiss costs a dollar." Robert gives two gold pieces to Lucretia, and kisses her shoulder twice. Shocking, isn't it?

What the Word "Bee" Means

The term "bee," now so generally applied to spelling classes, has for a century or more been used in connection with quiltings, corn-huskings, apple-butter boilings, and other pleasant gatherings of country people, where the hum of busy industry reminded one of the activity of a bee-hive. When the quilt was completed, or the corn all husked, the young people generally amused themselves with dancing, playing games, etc., and, among other pleasant amusements, spelling classes were introduced. To these old-fashioned country customs may, we think, be traced the origin of the term "bee" in its application to orthographic contests.

BIRDS IN THE BLAZE.—Birds, like horses, are terrified by the sight of a conflagration, and so lose all sense of self-protection that they rush into, instead of away from, the flames. Hundreds of birds, attracted by a late fire in Greenville, Miss., came wheeling and circling over the town, "making a picture of great beauty;" but many of them approaching too near the blaze, fell into it and were consumed. Sagacity poorly supplied the place of intelligence, in their case.

Counting Uncle Sam's Money.

Mr. John C. New, who will succeed Treasurer Spinner, at the end of the present fiscal year, has arranged to return to Washington about the middle of June to give his personal attention to counting the money on hand in the Treasury preparatory to assuming responsibility and entering security. The counting will be thorough and will embrace an examination of every form of money for which the Treasurer of the United States is held responsible. It will be made under the direction of the Secretary and the immediate supervision of officers detailed from the Secretary's office, the Register's office, and the office of the Treasurer. As this count will be made to fix the legal responsibility for the Treasurer, the outgoing and incoming Treasurers may make such arrangements touching the count as they may deem proper. The new Treasurer is the party most directly interested, and the thoroughness of the count will depend entirely upon him. If he should make the demand, every piece of money, from ten-cent notes to notes of the largest denomination, will have to be counted separately. Such a count would involve an immense amount of labor and occupy nearly three months' time.

The coin will probably be weighed and receipted for without special examination. The reserve, which is about $40,000,000, will, it is presumed, be counted and accepted in bundles. The reserve is under the direct custody of three officers, detailed respectively from the offices of the Secretary, Treasurer, and Register. It is kept in a safe secured by three locks of different combinations, each of the three officers having charge of the fund being supplied with a key to one lock. Thus the presence of three persons at the same time is necessary to open the safe. These three officers meet daily at 1 o'clock p. m., and if the Treasurer wishes to draw money from the so-called reserve the amount is furnished upon his requisition. The money in reserve is done up in packages of separate denominations, in amounts convenient to the requirements of the daily business of the Treasurer's office, and those packages are not broken until they are transferred to the custody of the Treasurer, and they are not considered in his custody till removed from the safe. A large amount of this reserve is in fractional currency, and should a thorough count of that be demanded by Mr. New, it will involve much time and labor. It is expected that he will be satisfied with verifying the amount by packages, and will not require each piece to be handled.

In the ordinary course of business the packages are sent out and receipted for by the Sub-Treasurers and bank officers, and a mistake was never known to have occurred in the Treasury count. A count was recently made in the office of the Sub-Treasurer at Philadelphia, by experts detailed from the Treasury Department, and in counting $600,000 paper money, in which were included notes of every denomination, the difference between the books of the office and the experts was found to be one ten-cent note. With such emphatic evidences of accuracy it is not presumed Mr. New will insist upon every package being broken and counted in detail. If he will accept the packages of the reserve and other packages similarly prepared and marked, without requiring a detailed count, the balances of Treasurer Spinner can be verified and transferred in from four to six weeks. It is an open question whether the Treasurer can be legally held responsible for the money locked up in special charge of three officers who have exclusive control of its deposit and issue. The Treasurer's bond is made to cover that fund, but many officers of the department think he would not be held by the courts for any deficiency that might be discovered in that fund as it is at present guarded. It may also be said that it is very doubtful whether it would be possible for any money to be abstracted from that fund.

The last count of the money in the Treasury was made about three years ago, when the defalcation of an employe was suspected, and was made at the request of Treasurer Spinner. It was a very thorough count, and was conducted under the supervision of officers of the Treasury, George W. Riggs, and two or three other bankers of Washington. It revealed the amount of the Johnson-Marden defalcation, which will be sufficiently recalled without further mention. Gen. Spinner was personally responsible for the amount, but he was relieved of the loss by special act of Congress. The business of the Treasury will suffer no inconvenience by the coming count.—Correspondence of the New York Times.

Madame Jerome Bonaparte.

In Scribner's for May there is an interesting account of "The Baltimore Bonapartes," by E. L. Didier, accompanied by striking portraits of Jerome and Madame Bonaparte, their son and grandson. We quote as follows:

"Madame Bonaparte is still living in Baltimore, at the age of ninety years. She says she has no intention of dying until she is a hundred. She has been to Europe sixteen times, and contemplates another trip this summer. This old lady has more vivacity and certainly more intelligence than many of the leading women of fashion of the present day. She expresses her opinion upon all subjects with great freedom, and sometimes with bitterness. She has little or no confidence in men; and a very poor opinion of women, the young ladies of the present day, she says, all have the "homo mania." All sentiment she thinks a weakness. She professes that her ambition has always been—not the throne, but near the throne. Mr. Patterson, her father, died in 1836, at an advanced age, in possession of a large fortune. In his will, which is one of the most remarkable documents that has ever been deposited in the Orphans' Court of Baltimore, he says: 'The conduct of my daughter, Betsey, has, through life, been so disobedient that in no instance has she ever consulted my opinion or feelings; indeed, she has caused me more anxiety and trouble than all my other children put together; her folly and misconduct have occasioned me a train of experience that, first to last, has cost me much money'—in this, he means the marriage of his daughter to Jerome Bonaparte. The old gentleman left her, out of his wealth, only three or four small houses and the wines in his cellar—worth in all about ten thousand dollars.

"Madame Bonaparte is very rich; she has made her money by successful speculations, and by her life-long habit of saving. For years she has lived at a boarding-house in Baltimore, seeing very little company. Her costume is ancient, and there is nothing about her appearance that suggests the marvelous beauty that led captive the heart of Jerome Bonaparte. Her eyes alone retain some of the brightness of former days.

"For forty years, Madame Bonaparte kept a diary, in which she recorded her views and observations of European and American society. Some of her remarks are severely sarcastic. A well known Boston publishing house, it is said, recently offered ten thousand dollars for the manuscript volumes, but Madame refused to sell them at any price, and has committed them to the custody of her younger grandson, Charles Joseph, recently a law student of Harvard, now a rising member of the Baltimore bar. They will probably be published after the writer's death."

Pumpkins as Media for Libel.

The Paris correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph writes to that journal: "Before the Eighth Chamber of Correctional Police a knotty question was tried a few days ago. Is a man's garden a public place in view of the libel laws, and can the vegetables growing there be properly described as organs of publicity? A market gardener of Clamart raised these inquiries. He owns a plot of ground wherein, among other delicacies, he has planted pumpkins. That nutritive, but rather tasteless, vegetable requires no attention. The market gardener gave himself little heed about his pumpkins, seeing them thrive and swell day by day. Last September it occurred to him that the fruit must be nearly ripe, and at early dawn he went to examine. The first pumpkin startled him; some hand as patient as malignant had inscribed upon it his opinion that M. Bernard was, in fact, something which no gentleman would desire to be. During the pumpkin's tenderest age of innocence had these words been traced, and they had grown with its growth, retailing their calumny larger and larger every day. M. Bernard turned up another, and found a like inscription. Every pumpkin in the plot bore its libel. Furious, the market gardener sought his enemy and served him with a summons. The case came on for trial, but there was a want of proof. One of the witnesses cited, after listening attentively to the course of evidence, perceived on a sudden what it was all about, and exclaimed innocently: 'Why, it was I who scratched the pumpkins.' Promptly he found himself in the dock, and now we have had the second trial. Counsel for the defense argued that there had been no publication of the libel, such as is contemplated by the law. The Court, however, decided otherwise, since the garden was proved to have no hedge about it, and the pumpkins had for months exposed their calumnies to any one who chanced to look at them. And so the engraver of vegetables was condemned to £8 fine.

WHEN any antidote or remedy for any particular class of disease obtains a wide-spreading notoriety, it is but reasonable to suppose that it must merit the popularity it receives. It is within our province to mention that DR. J. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS, so long and favorably known as the safest and most reliable remedial agent for the cure of Liver, Kidney, Bladder and Glandular Diseases, Mental and Physical Debility, and all complaints emanating from a corrupt state of the blood, etc., are in great demand. So satisfied are we of the intrinsic worth of this medicine, that we do not hesitate to notice it in our columns. It is well to mention that this medicine is compounded of roots, herbs and flowers of California, and has no fiery material or alcohol used in its preparation. We can add no better eulogium than the fact that we use it constantly in our own family, and each member thereof partakes of it, when necessary, according to directions.—New York Paper. 34

A SKILLFUL ENGINEER.—M. Seguin is dead. He built the first railway in France (from Lyons to St. Etienne); he invented iron wire suspension bridges and the tubular boilers of locomotive engines, by which invention railway trains have been able to attain their present great speed, for the tubular boiler generates steam rapidly enough to supply the vapor as fast as it is wanted. He lived to attain the age of eighty-nine years. His mind had decayed some years before his body. He was a pupil and a nephew of Montgolfier, the paper maker, so well known by his connection with aerial navigation.

"BY strict attention to misery," as the Cincinnati Commercial neatly puts it, Henry Breamer collected about $20,000 in his life. He never gave away a cent in his life, married three wives, and studied economy with such excellent purpose that his funeral expenses, including everything, cost only $8.75.

NICHOLS, SHEPARD & CO.'S "VIBRATOR" THRESHER. The BRILLIANT SUCCESS of this Grain-Saving, Time-Saving THRESHER, is unprecedented in the annals of Farm Machinery. In a brief period it has become widely known and FULLY ESTABLISHED, as the "LEADING THRESHING MACHINE." THE NICHOLS' SHEPARD & CO. VIBRATOR. GRAIN RAISERS REFUSE to submit to the wasteful and imperfect work of other Threshers, when posted on the vast superiority of this one, for saving grain, saving time, and doing fast, thorough and economical work. THRESHERMEN FIND IT highly advantageous to run a machine that has no "Beaters," "Pickers," or "Apron," that handles Damp Grain, Long Straw, Headings, Flax, Timothy, Millett and all such difficult grain and seeds, with ENTIRE EASE AND EFFECTIVENESS. Cleans to perfection; saves the farmer his thresh bill by extra saving of grain; makes no "Litterings;" requires LESS THAN ONE-HALF the usual Belts, Boxes, Journals, and Gears; easier managed; less repairs; one that grain raisers prefer to employ and wait for, even at advanced prices, while other machines are "out of jobs." AUBURN INDIANA, MAY. 13, 1875

Let us pray. The Beecher trial is soon to end. A few more days and the greatest scandal on record wil have ended.

Henry Wilson is meeting a more cordial reception in the South than Gordon and Lamcer met in New England a few weeks ago.

One hundred years ago Ethan Allen, the celebrated infidel, captured old Fort Ticonderoga in the name of Jehovah and the Continental Congress.

Ex-Gov Gratz Brown, of Mo., has retired from politics and gone to building houses Twenty-two handsome stone front residences stand in his name on the tax list of St. Louis

There is a poetic flavor about the dispatch this morning which tells us that "Mr. Beecher stood on the floor, almost hidden behind a vase of lilies, and prayed." It reminds one of Adam hiding in the garden of Eden when he heard the Almighty calling.

In the election of General Ben Hill, of the Ninth District of Georgia to Congress, the Democracy have a large reinforcement of brains in that body. General Hill is, without doubt the ablest debater south of Mason and and Dixon's Line, and he has no superior north of it.

The total vote at the late election in Indianapolis was 17,000. That is pretty good on a population that does not exceed at the furthest 60,000.— It is one to less than four inhabitants In Cincinnati the ratio is one to seven But the Gazette which saw fraud in the latter, sees none in the former.— The reason is, that the Republicans carried Indianapolis and did not carry Cincinnati.—Enquirer.

Carl Schurz, came near going to the Fatherland in the steam ship Schiller, which was wrecked off the coast of Sicily on Friday night. He had engaged a passage in the unfortunate boat, and was only prevented from going aboard, in order to attend the dinner in his honor at Delmonico's. Man is indeed the creature of circumstances.

Gen. Green, of Memphis, has written to and invited three prominent men who were against him in the war, to participate in the decoration of the graves of all soldiers, and these Union men have accepted. Thus step by step are we getting back where we were a few years ago, with friendly feelings for all sections, in spite of the great party of hate that has been laboring for years to widen the breach and retard the progress of our great country.

Ex-Senator Pratt, of Logansport, has accepted the position of Commissioner of Internal Revenue, tendered last week, by the President. We have always regarded Mr. Pratt as a fair politician, and generally honest when allowed to take his own course. With New for Treasurer, Orth in a foreign position, Shanks among the Indians, and Pratt in the above department, Indiana Radicals ought certainly to be satisfied with their share of the public pap.

The croakers are calling to remembrance the fact that fifty years ago there was winter all the year round in Massachusetts, and December was as pleasant as May. Snow, in that memorable year, persisted in falling in July and August. It is thought that the same thing might be repeated this summer. But patience! There is still time for the thermometer to run up, even in the Northern states, to one hundred degrees in the shade, and a possibility of having a summer so hot as to call forth a longing for the return of winter.

The Centenial celebrations began with a great deal of courtesy toward England, and so far was the idea of forgoing old animosities carried that Bright and Gladstone were invited to be present at Lexington and Concord and the London Times praised the kindly letters which they wrote excusing themselves from attending the celebrations. Now, however, the Times is out in an accusation against the "embattled farmers" to the fact that they scalped the dead British and cut the ears off the wounded; and a New York paper retorts with the assertion that the British murdered a woman with a baby at her breast. If this thing continues we shall be fighting the revolution over again in good earnest, and by the time the Centenial of Yorktown arrives, it will take another hundred years to establish harmony with the mother country.

According to the official statement of the public debt the reduction during the last nine months has amounted to about eleven million. At this rate it will only take us about one hundred fifty years to square the thing off. In the mean time we shall have paid to bondholders in interest ten thousand million. It is a valuable thing that requires ten thousand million in order to pay two thousand million. If the debt was in greenbacks it wouldent cost any thing, but then the bondholders who run the Republican party will not allow it to be put in that form. It must be in the hands of a few who desire to make large sums out of it.

Judge Kelly has gone through the South and comes back declaring that there is no vote of his congressional career which he regrets more than his vote on the force bill. A Times correspondent says: "He has come to the conclusion that the southern people as a class are peaceable and law abiding. He thinks the South ought to be let alone, and, if they are aided to avoid bankruptsy, that they will forget all party differences between them and the people of the north. He was doubly convinced of this by witnessing the observance of the confederate Decoration day Aiken, S. C. The Graves of friends and former foes were decorated alike and nowhere did he notice any of the bitter feeling that was the out growth of the war. He comes home with a most heartily kind feeling toward the South.

The New York World is one of the most thoroughly edited papers in country. Its writers are finished scholars, and their productions read more like the elaborate and polished efforts of the magazine contributors than the editor who has no time whatever to prune and correct his first rude sentences. The World is a remarkably able paper, particularly in all that relates to belles lettres. In matters of history, literature, art, music, and the like, its opinions are authorative. With all these valued attainments its statement that good spelling is not a particularly desirable accomplishment must strike its reader with surprise. After premising one may spell and spell and be a niny still it makes this astonishing remark: "It is safe to predict that if all the prize winners of the winter, now reposing on their dictionaries, were called upon to write an original paragraph of six sentences, not one in ten would produce work unmarred by poverty or disconnection of thought or inelegance of style." It must be admitted that the assertion that good spellers are good for nothing has some foundation in fact. It has been the experience of us all to meet now and then an exceptionally good speller, a sure shot on all the words with which he had tussled during his school boy days inside the cover of his Webster or his McGuffy; but it generaly happens that such a speller is by no means certain when you take him off his own ground. Set him to write sentences and he will fail to spell correctly the words he has not scaned in his book. To this extent the World's sweeping assertion is sustained by facts.

The young folks gave a reception for Rev. Mr. Fisher, last Tuesday evening, at the residence of Jno. L. Davis. It was unknown to Mr. F. until he reached the house. A good time was had, and some touching remarks, to the young folks who were assembled there, was delivered by the above gentleman.

Rev. A. Marine, of Fort Wayne, called on us yesterday He is regarded as one of the most eminent divines as well as one of the most popular lecturers in the state. We have not heard what caused the starting of the row.

We are beginning to believe that the great Plymouth preacher is guilty. We are almost ready to say that he is a fool if he isn't. We have never doubted the Bible story about that good man who left his coat tail in the hands of a woman who tried to corner him, but we'll be hanged if we believe the Brooklyn preacher could possibly be innocent when so many women have been hugging and kissing him.

Question in Arithmetic—Twelve persons stopped at a hotel over night. On asking their bill the next morning, they found it to be twelve dollars. Capt. J B. White of the Fort Wayne, Fruit House, was elected an Alderman of that city last week. If there is one person more than another who we would like to have for our dad, it would be the Captain. They are very peculiar in conferring favors in our neighboring town. You can't be county clerk, but then you may be Alderman, even if you don't want to be. Capt. White will make a good counciiman, but the misfortune is he takes the place of an excellent officer Mr. Hamilton. There are other wards the Captain could represent better than they are now represented.

The wheat grown in this section of the country is not gradable with that of the eastern states, as Red or White; but is of special qualities, which is now designated as "mixed Amber." This will hereafter be graded, according to cleanliness; as No. 1 or No. 2 Mixed Amber—both of which will command a higher price than No. 2 Red. WE learn that Wm. Hoffman, living about two miles north of the city, has gone insane. He was noticed first by one of the neighbors, where he called and made the remark "That the Lord had told him he must canvass for a Bible." This was considered a rather strange remark, but nothing was more thought of because he is usually reticent in his business affairs. A short time afterward he was noticed in the yard tearing the clothes from his person in a furious manner. He continued getting worse for some hours, and it took several persons to manage him. His insanity is caused from too close an application to study.

MR EDITOR: Allow me through the columns of your paper, to thank the young people of Auburn, for the pleasant entertainment, and happy surprise, given me at the residence of our esteemed citizens Mr. and Mrs. Jno. L. Davis, on last Tuesday evening. It is with heart-felt gratitude that we receive this expression of kindly feeling, and friendship, from those in whom we take an especial interest. It is doubely pleasing when the circumstances that called it forth are considered. May a happy bright, and prosperous future be the lot of you all, is the sincerer wish of your true friend.

THE SCHOOL CHILDREN—We are indebted to Superintendent Barns, says the "Waterloo Press," for the following official statement of the enumeration of school children, in the different townships and incorporated towns in the county, on the first day of the present month. Great Western Sensation.

That most mighty and pompous landlard who strutted and pursed out his paunch to such swelling proportions because the school ma'ams soiled his pottery has again come to the front. I posted up some bills of our show which is to take place in Auburn on the 18th, whereupon his majestic Swineship pulled them down and tore them into a thousand pieces. Nevertheless we are going to show. Our varieties will take place and among the newest novel attraction and side-splitting scenes of our "sensation" will be an effigy, properly dressed out, who will strut about overlooking his hotel and sing about the school ma'ams. Let all turn out and they will see the old fellow rigged out in all his trimmings. We shall give special time and be at a great outlay of money in order to properly represent this character.

O. HAMILTON.

ONE of the nicest things in the world is law. Several "reformed drunkards" hoop up some of the saloon men every time the weather is too bad for "squash" planting, and have every infant in the burg subpoenead to appear forthwith and tell what State and county he lives in, and a few more questions of about the same importance. If it was'nt for the quil and gray hairs around the desk, one would think that a game of "base tag" was about to begin. They are all after the temperance banner, but these boys who have to work hard every day foot the bills as a general thing. One of our hands was taken from the office a half day for simply nothing, and knew no more about Cy Baughan's business than a hog does about skating. This way of doing things makes a great deal of trouble sometimes, and we think if some of these old lallagags would keep their own affairs in good shape, and not meddle so much with their fellow man, they would stand double the chance to see that far off country, where they will be at rest and the saloon busines ausgespeiled.

The Future.

The following is known as "Mother Shipton's Prophecy," was first published in 1488, and re-published in 1541. All the events predicted in it, except the last two lines, which relate to the future, have already come to pass. A young lady in Ohio sends us this remarkable production which is as follows:

Carriages without horses shall go
And accidents shall fill the world with woe,
Around the world thoughts shall fly
In the twinkling of an eye.
Water shall yet more wonders do;
How strange, yet shall be true,
The world upside down shall be,
And gold be found at root of tree.
Through hills man shall ride,
And no horse or ass be at his side.
Under water men shall walk,
Shall ride, shall sleep, shall talk.
In the air men shall be seen,
In white, in black, in green.
Iron in the water shall float,
As easy as a wooden boat,
Gold shall be found and found,
In a land that's not now known
Fire shall yet more wonders do;
England shall at last admit a Jew.
The world to an end shall come,
In eighteen hundred and eighty-one.

Why did'nt the old lady make it 1821. It would rhyme just as well, and then the whole thing would have been past by this time. Between the Millerites and old women we are kept on the rack about all the time. Let us have peace

THE Amateur Dramatic Troup of Albion, presented the drama of the "Ticket of Leave Man" last Saturday evening, at Ensley Hall. A terible spell of weather took place about five o'clock, and from that time on during the night, copious showers fell in quick succession This prevented a large attendance, yet a very good audience assembled, and everything went off pleasantly. Of course there were imperfections—what amateur troupe has them not? There were several characters well represented Mr. & Mrs. Green Jones, excelling in this respect. May Edwards had the form and expression but did not throw as much life into the character as it will admit of. Hawkshaw was good, and Bob Brierly ordinarly well rendered. In the bar-room scene where Brierly discovers Hawkshaw where the finest effect in the whole piece can be produced, Bob was too tame. Maltby was not the jovil, blustering fellow, as he should have been. Mrs. Willoughby was excellent, and Sam, Moss and Dalton good.—The hall is a bad one in acoustics and it requires an effort to be heard distinctly. But take it all in all they did well, and showed some good dramatic talent.

The New Washing Machine.

The washing machine to which we referred last week, was given a trial at the Swineford House last Saturday, to ascertain its merits, in this important branch of domestic economy. We watched the operation with a good deal of interest, as we felt that if the machine performed all that was claimed for it, then our wives and daughters could hail the dawning of a new era. Forty-eight pieces of soiled linen were put into a tub of water, and the force pump put to work upon them. The working of the pump is the easiest part of the washing more so than ringing them through a clothes ringer. The machine, which weighs about five pounds, consists of a handle like a broom stick, with a small cylinder at the end, containing a valve, which forces the water down when pressed upon, and up when pulled out.—This machine is set around over the clothes, as they lie in the tub, and pressed down into the water, and drawn out. This is the whole operation of washing In thirty minutes the thirty-eight pieces were washed white as wool, and on the line. This includes a first water, then a second water brought to a boil, then rinsed, then blued, and finally wrung and placed on the line.

There is no doubt in our mind as to its being the best washing machene now extant. It will save time and labor, and do as good washing as by hand. You see it work and you will pronounce it the most simple and yet the most thorough in its work, of anything yet presented. Maj. Nelson the manager is here with several teams, and is stopping at the Swineford House. He asks no money until you are satisfied, and never takes any notes.

We learn that Union and Smithfield grangers have consolidated.

A negro named Joe Reed shot and instantly killed Policeman Robert Frazier, while in the execution of his duty as an officer. The murderer was arrested and taken to jail, but so incensed were the citizens at the unprovoked murder that they marched on the jail and broke into Reed's cell. He was seized, a rope fastened around his neck, and hurried to the suspension bridge, from which he was thrown, not with the intention of hanging, but, the rope breaking, he fell to the rocks beneath, ninety feet, and from thence into the river. He was shot once on the way and again at the bottom.

THE TILTON-BEECHER TRIAL.

SEVENTY-NINTH DAY.—With the conclusion of Tracy's testimony the defense "rested," and the prosecution began their rebutting evidence. Mr. John Swinton, formerly of the New York Times, testified that Tilton walked with him on foot in the Communist procession of 1872, and did not ride in a carriage with Woodhull, or carry a banner. The plaintiff's lawyers expressed a willingness that Mrs. Tilton should be sworn, but Mr. Evarts declined to profit by the suggestion.

EIGHTIETH DAY.—Just before the opening of the court, Mrs. Tilton caused something of a sensation by rising in her seat, and, handing Judge Neilson a paper, requesting him to read it aloud in court. The Judge stated that he would take the matter under advisement. The contents of the paper were not made public. Several witnesses were examined, nearly all of whom swore that Tilton did not march in the Roussel procession with the Woodhulls. Franklin Woodruff, one of Moulton's partners, was called, and contradicted Gen. Tracy's testimony in several particulars.

EIGHTY-FIRST DAY.—Mrs. Tilton's letter to Judge Neilson was a declaration of her own innocence and an appeal to be heard in her own behalf. Judge Neilson replied that Tilton was a competent witness against a third party because there is no express statute in the way; but Mrs. Tilton was not allowed to testify against her husband because the New York law of May 10, 1867, declares a wife to be incompetent as a witness for or against her husband. However, Mrs. Tilton derives all the benefit of having her appeal published, while at the same time escaping the perilous pitfalls of unsympathetic cross-examination.

EIGHTY-SECOND DAY.—Stephen Pearl Andrews and Henry C. Bowen were the only witnesses who testified in rebuttal. Andrews testified that Mrs. Woodhull derived the facts in the scandal case from Mrs. Cady Stanton before Tilton was introduced. John Wood, the printer of Mrs. Woodhull's paper, testified that the scandal article was not set up until long after the colored witness, Woodleigh, swore he saw slips of it with Tilton and Mrs. Woodhull. Andrews wrote the article, and his information came from Mrs. Stanton. Bowen was then called and contradicted Beecher on several material points. He swore that he had discharged Tilton before the latter demanded the preacher's abdication; that Beecher had no hand in the removal of Tilton, and that there was no cause for remorse on the part of Beecher for Tilton's downfall. Witness remembered the tripartite agreement, and the payment of the $7,000 check, and there was no connection between these two matters. Bowen also testified point blank that the letter from Tilton to Beecher demanding the latter's abdication of the Plymouth pulpit, of which he (Bowen) was the bearer, was delivered at Freeland's, whereas Mr. Beecher swore that the note was delivered at his own house.

EIGHTY-THIRD DAY.—Mr. Bowen resumed the witness stand. He was subjected to a severe cross-examination by Mr. Evarts, but adhered to his story with remarkable pertinacity. His amendments to the tripartite agreement, as explained by him, showed that he shrewdly avoided committing himself to an avowal of Beecher's innocence of the charges laid at his door. He simply "withdrew" them; and in place of declaring the innuendoes false, he "regretted having made them." His settlement with Tilton was simply a business arrangement, and was not promoted or retarded by what Beecher did, nor did it have the slightest relation to the matters in controversy between Beecher and Tilton.

INTER-STATE COMMERCE.

Important Decision—The Supreme Court Declares that Congress has the Power to Regulate Inter-State Commerce.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in deciding the capitation case between the State of Maryland and the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, went somewhat outside of the record to give an opinion upon the general power of Congress to regulate inter-State commerce. The decision cannot fail to attract attention throughout the country, as it practically anticipates a case in the Granger interests, and decides that Congress under the Constitution has the power to regulate commerce between the States. The case of the State of Maryland against the Baltimore and Ohio road was a claim of Maryland for $500,000 from that road under a provision of the charter of that road which provides that a certain capitation tax should be annually paid to the State in consideration of the charter. The railroad entered the plea that the provision is unconstitutional in that it is an impediment placed by Maryland in the way of commerce, and an obstruction to the passage of citizens of other States through Maryland. The Supreme Court ruled that the agreement to pay the capitation tax is a valid contract, and not unconstitutional. The passage in the decision relative to the general power of Congress over transportation is something in the nature of an obiter dictum. The Court, in substance, says: It is often difficult to draw the line between the power of State over commerce and the provision of the Constitution. It is indisputable that the State cannot impede commerce in their attempts to regulate it. The question practically is where the regulation of commerce of a State ends and the obstruction to travel begins. The chief remedy of the public against excessive tolls is in competition. The question whether Congress has the power to regulate inter-State commerce has occupied the most powerful minds of the country. This power was exercised in completing the old Cumberland road and the Pacific railroad. It is to be hoped that no occasion will again arise to make the exercise of this power necessary, and that the States will not be so regardless of their own interests as to endeavor to impose restrictions upon travel. If the States do this they may expect that Congress, to protect the citizens of the nation, will exercise to the utmost degree its constitutional power to control inter-State commerce. The progress of merchandise must be unimpeded. Commercially, this is one country, and the general interest of the whole country demands that there shall be no interference with the due progress of commerce. No local interests can be permitted to interfere with this great principle, but the rights of the States must also be protected. Hence, the court decides that the charter of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad was a legitimate, reasonable, and constitutional contract with the State. The opinion is unanimous, with the exception of Justice Miller, who dissents. His dissent goes to the points of the main case, however, and does not refer to the general statement as to the power of Congress over inter-State commerce.

Giant Powder.

The use of giant powder in blowing up the ice on the river in this city, says the Rochester (N. Y.) Express, has attracted considerable attention to this dangerously powerful explosive, as many are anxious about its composition and qualities.

Its proper name is Dynamite, but it is better known in this country as Giant Powder. No. 1 contains 75 per cent. of nitro-glycerine, 24 per cent. of infusorial earth. No. 2 has much less of nitro-glycerine, and the deficiency is supplied by niter, saltpeter and rosin. It looks like dirty corn meal, and gives no sign to the eye of the resistless power it contains. It does not explode like gunpowder, but the entire mass, however large, bursts at once, as if each recoil of each grain took place at the same instant. It shatters the hardest rock as if it were the most fragile of things, and rends wrought iron and steel as if they were rags. The lightest charge of it in the heaviest rifle or ordnance, tears the gun into a thousand pieces. It is as good in water as out. The only practicable means of exploding it is by a large and powerful percussion cap. Strange to say fire and heat will not explode it; it can be poured on a red hot plate, or a red hot poker can be thrust into it and it will not explode; or it can be thrown from any height upon rocks until the boxes are broken, and it will not explode.

The secret of its safety lies in the fact that the absorbent is soft, compressible and elastic, whereby the powder becomes a cushion on which all blows are defended. Hence the greater the quality, the greater the safety.

FINANCE AND TRADE.

Weekly Review of the Chicago Market.

FINANCIAL.

Matters in the money market remain without any important change. The offerings of currency are quite large, and there is no trouble experienced in obtaining favors for A 1 paper at 10 per cent. interest. Eastern exchange, 50@75c premium. Government bonds firm and in good demand, with values steady.

BREADSTUFFS.

The grain markets have attracted considerable attention from speculators during the past week, and an extensive speculative business was transacted. The markets, however, have been very unsettled, values being subject to frequent and quite severe fluctuation. Generally speaking, however, the prevailing feeling has been one of firmness, and the closing quotations invariably show an advance as compared with the figures current at the opening. The movement has been mainly on speculative account, and the movements of operators were governed more by local speculative influences, and the manipulations of local speculators had more to do with the subsequent changes in values than the advices from Liverpool and New York. It was a well-known fact that all the markets had been largely discounted for May delivery, and as these contracts approached maturity there was a general desire on the part of the short sellers to provide for them, the active competition between this interest being the principal cause of the subsequent advance. True the receipts were large, but this fact had only a nominal influence on the market, as the daily arrivals were generally intended for delivery on previous sales. Shippers were buying with more freedom than during the preceding week. The corn trade attracted a large attendance of operators, and, at times, was quite excited. During Saturday the markets were weak, and about 1c decline was sustained on wheat and corn—the deliveries on May contracts being liberal, while parties having grain coming to them were selling out, showing a disposition to realize. There was more doing in June and July, operators preferring the deferred options.

The following tables shows the prices current at the opening and close of the past week:

SEEDS AND HIGHWINES.

There was an unusually active business transacted in Hungarian seed during the week, and prices were considerably higher. Clover sold at $6.50@7.00 for medium, and closed at about $6.85 for prime. Flax quotable at $1.80@1.90 for good to prime crushing. Hungarian sold at $1.35@1.62½ and closed at about $1.60 for prime. COOPERAGE, LUMBER AND WOOD.

There was a fair demand for the different descriptions of cooperage, and the market was steady at about former prices. Offerings moderate. Pork barrels quotable at $1.10@1.15. Lard tierces $1.30@1.35. Pork barrel staves $18.00@22.00 per 1,000, and lard tierce staves $20.00@28.00 per 1,000. Dinner.

Dinner, both in the nature and quantity of its components, must be regulated by the constitution and judgment of individuals; who, however, bearing in mind a constant and consistent discrimination with respect to aliments, should be careful to study the peculiarities of their constitution and digestive powers, and to adapt their diet to them. We may, however, very well add, that those who are chiefly employed in mental occupation, and not exposed to much bodily labor, require less animal food than such as are in the continual exercise of corporeal strength, and should consequently, avoid excess in that particular; with this exception, that an hysteric or hypochondriac tendency seems to require animal food, which, however, should be freely joined with the vegetable. We may here, also, properly remark, that no error is in this country more common or more dangerous than the neglect of bread.

This valuable edible is the safest, and most nutritious of vegetable aliments, and the best corrector of animal food; by its plentiful use alone, the bad consequences of an excess of the latter may be obviated. The tables of the French appear to be supplied as freely with animal food as those of the English; yet that people, by a greater use of bread and dried acid fruits, prevent the ill effects of a heavier diet, and preserve a cheerful buoyancy of spirits, to which the generality of our phlegmatic islanders are strangers. The English, therefore, who are so much devoted to animal food, should particularly moderate its effects by a liberal use of bread and other vegetable matter; since vegetable food is necessary to secure, not only health, but long life. In infancy and youth, we should be confined mostly to it; in manhood and the decline of life, we should more freely use animal nourishment; and in old age, we should return to the vegetable. Vegetables and milk, indeed, are strong antidotes to scurvy, and putrid and inflammatory fevers; nay, in the former disease, milk alone will frequently do more good than any other remedy.

He Bet Because the Odds Were Great.

A son of the faderland, says an exchange, went into Barney Galligan's saloon the other day and called for a drink. Barney observed how blooming he was with the "rosy" already, and shook his head, saying: "You have had enough." "Enough of whad, I guess?" asked the Teuton. "Enough to drink." "Who is running my machine, you or I?" "You are, and you are running it in the ground."

"I bade you ten dollars dat I am a liar," said he, slamming his hand down on the bar.

"There is no bet there," said Barney, smiling.

"Gife us a drink."

"No, you are drunk now."

"I bade you not."

"Well, I will bet you fifty dollars to one that you are drunk," said Barney, while quite a number of bystanders gathered around to see the fun.

"Good enough, I bade you," said he, pulling out fractional currency enough to make up a dollar. "Now, who will you leave it mid?"

"I'll leave it to yourself. Are you not drunk?"

"Yes, by jingoes, I am," said he, mournfully, "dake der dollar."

A friend of his happened to be in the crowd, and upbraided him for deciding against himself.

"But it was the druth."

"Well, supposing it was; what did you want to be fool enough to bet for, then?"

"I couldn't help it—der odds was so gread," he replied, turning away, more in sorrow than anger.

Jim Fenton on "Cupalos."

In Dr. Holland's "Story of Sevenoaks," in Scribner for May, Jim Fenton, the backwoodsman, pops the question and proposes to build a hotel. In the following passage we get at his ideas on the subject of ornamentation:

Jim's love had wrought a miracle in the night. He had said nothing about it to his architect, but it had lifted him above the bare utilities of a house, so that he could see the use of beauty. "Thar's one thing," said he, "that thar hain't none on us thought on; but it come to me last night. There's a place where the two ruffs come together that wants somethin', an' it seems to me it's a cupalo—somethin' to stan' up over the whole thing, and say to them as comes, 'Hallelujer!' We've done a good deal for house-keepin', now let's do somethin' for glory. It's jest like a ribbon on a bonnet, or a blow on a potato-vine. It sets it off, an' makes a kind o' Fourth o' July for it. What do ye say, little woman?"

The "little woman" accepted the suggestion, and admitted that it would at least make the building look more like a hotel.

Railways.

The total length of the railways in the United States is nearly 75,000 miles, or over three times the diameter of the earth. It would occupy a passenger five months' time, traveling night and day continuously, at an average speed of twenty miles an hour, to go once over all our railways. At the average speed of the fastest ocean steamers it would require eight months' time.—Scientific American.

The British Parliament and the Press.

Mr. Sullivan, a member of the British House of Commons, a day or two since gave notice that, in order to bring about a change of the anomalous condition of the press and the House, he intended to daily notify the House of the presence of strangers. This seems somewhat singular in this country, where the legislative halls are free to the public. Theoretically, all persons except members and the necessary officers are excluded from the hall while the House of Commons is in session. There is a small gallery in the hall, fenced off by a wire grating. Admission to this gallery, which will seat but comparatively few persons, is obtained by tickets from members. The hall of the House of Commons itself is a dingy, inconvenient room, of very limited proportions, and not capable of seating more than one-half the members. When the attendance is large, those not able to obtain seats must stand or find refuge in some of the various small ante-rooms adjoining. The attendance of strangers is tolerated by practice, but prohibited by rule. Officially the House is not aware of the presence of reporters; and the publication of debates is in violation of law, a law which is not, however, enforced. British statesmen, like all others, have great ambition to be reported, but none of them have the courage to propose a legal authorization of the publication of the debates. Under the rules, it is sufficient for a member to call the attention of the House to the presence of strangers, when business is suspended and the gallery is cleared. It requires no motion for this purpose; as soon as the Speaker is informed that there are strangers present, he must order their exclusion.

The reporters for the London papers are admitted to a part of the strangers' gallery upon tickets issued to them by the Speaker; but this is in an unofficial way, and gives them no right. They are regarded just the same as any other strangers, and must go out. In fact, their presence is a double violation of law, because it is unlawful to take notes or publish any of the debates of Parliament, the House having in its history repeatedly declared such publication to be a breach of the privileges of the House. This old rule rests upon the assumption that the publication of the debates is an abridgment of the freedom of debate, that it tends to make the member responsible for what he says.—Chicago Tribune.

Wall Street, Present and Past.

Wall street, so much derided by commonplace cities as the devil's exchange, is at this moment a mirror of what is taking place everywhere. Instead of a dozen heroes in its Pantheon, there is but one—Jay Gould. He has nearly broken Daniel Drew, the head of the bears. Rufus Hatch, whose operation with Michigan Southern stock in 1867 netted $2,185,000, has been exploded by Gould, and has sailed for Europe. Henry Keep has been five years asleep under a $100,000 mausoleum, and his wife has found a husband for the $4,000,000 he left her in Judge Schley, of Georgia. Vanderbilt no longer visits the street, and his stocks hold their high figure from the integrity of the man; that is, Vanderbilt will not permit his own stocks to fall on his friends, although the condition of the Lake Shore railroad seems to be anything but sound. Jim Fisk died the brawler's death he coveted. Horace Clark passed away with the serenity he had lived. I saw Leonard Jerome, a few days ago, lunching in the park, passé and indifferent. He was the Sardanapalus of the street, and under his domination Pacific Mail sold at 329. With more intelligence than any other broker, educated at Princeton, he lost millions by foolishly remaining up town at pleasure on the day his company held its annual meeting. He is now worth about three-quarters of a million, which he husbands as closely as he can, and avoids the street. Tom Durant dropped out of prominence very much for the reasons which exhausted Jerome—pleasure and extravagance. There are no such times, at present, for rabid speculation as in the period of the war and succeeding it. Dr. Shelton, the hermit operator, who used to appear late in the autumn from his country estate, and carry 75,000 shares at a time, bearing gold meanwhile, is only a tradition now. Amasa Stone and Alexander Mitchell, who are great railway officials, sent in their orders at times, but have grown conservative.—"Gath" Townsend.

Ice in the Atlantic.

The steamship Nova Scotian, which arrived at Baltimore on Wednesday, from Liverpool, via Halifax, reports that at 8 a. m. on the 14th of April, in latitude 42 deg. 20 min., longitude 49 deg. 10 min., an immense ice-field was met in the Atlantic. The steamship skirted its edge for five hours, and altered her course to escape it. From the mast-heads, as far as the eye could reach with the aid of glasses, an unbroken stretch of ice was to be seen extending for many miles. There was in it many small icebergs, and a number of vessels, some of them long distances from the outer edges, and seeming to have been caught there a long while before. There were a ship, two barks, a brig, and other vessels so far in that they could not be made out. This ice had come down from the Arctic regions, and the imprisoned vessels had doubtless come many miles with it, and will not be liberated until the warmer waters of the Gulf Stream melts them out. The steamship also report that eight American fishing schooners had been forced to seek refuge in the harbor of Halifax, where they were driven by the heavy fields of floating Arctic ice.—New York Times.

A DREAM BEFORE THE TRAGEDY.—Speaking of the tragic death of the late Mrs. Margaret Bingham, murdered in East Boston, the Zion's Herald says: "A clergyman relates to us a singular incident which came directly to his knowledge. The night before her death she told one of her friends she had suffered from a terrible dream which she could not throw off. She dreamed that she was murdered. She remarked that she was not afraid to die, but was terribly shocked at the idea of such a form of death. How singular, at times, these mysterious mental pictures of coming events cast their shadow upon us. Or was a divine whisper preparing the soul for the hour of extreme discipline?"

GOSSIP OF THE DAY.

AMERICA possesses the fastest war ship in the world, the new steamship Tennessee being capable of achieving a speed of fourteen miles an hour.

HENRY M. SMITH, better known in Chicago as "Jubilee" Smith, and formerly managing editor of the Tribune of that city, now occupies a similar position on the Brooklyn Union.

IN England, the other day, a pugilist who killed his opponent in the ring, was let off with a week's imprisonment, the court remarking that it was a fair fight. In England, the other day, a boy was fined nine shillings and six-pence for whistling in the presence of a clergyman in a public market, the court remarking that it was an impious outrage.

THE San Antonio (Texas) Herald gives the following notice to its subscribers: "Hereafter we shall publish the list of the names of those who go a-fishing on the Lord's day and fail to send us a string of trout. Perch and suckers have too many bones in them to allow us to forget that the moral element of our population look to the press to eradicate this growing desecration of the Sabbath."

THE Legislature of New York, has enacted a law providing that persons sentenced to the penitentiary for life shall be conditionally released at the end of fifteen years, provided their conduct has been such as to warrant clemency; that they are to have their liberty for ten years, at the end of which time, if no other charge is brought against them, they are to receive pardon. If they are convicted of crime during the ten years, they are to be remanded to prison to serve out the life sentence.

SINCE his accession to the Chief Magistracy, President Grant has had in his Cabinet two Secretaries of State, Washburne and Fish; four of the Treasury, Stewart, Boutwell, Richardson and Bristow; two of War, Rawlins and Belknap; two of the Navy, Borie and Robeson; four Attorney-Generals, Hoar, Akerman, Williams and Pierrepont; two Postmaster-Generals, Creswell and Jewell; and two Secretaries of the Interior, Cox and Delano.

MR. L. W. CUTLER, of Denver, Col., was recently tendered the nomination of City Sexton, and in his letter of declination says: "The idea of groping among tombstones and communing with ghosts and goblins for a livelihood causes a cold chill to run down my back. No, gentlemen, I must refuse. I would rather be a toad, and live upon the vapor of a dungeon,' than wait for my fellow-man to die that I might grow fat. Please leave me to pursue the quiet walks of private life."

EX-CONGRESSMAN BOWEN, of South Carolina, who was convicted of bigamy a few years ago, sued the Charleston News and Courier recently for libel, the objectionable matter being the charge that he had instigated the murder of Col. White some eleven years ago. The editor was acquitted, but the evidence brought out on the trial was so strong that the authorities felt warranted in arresting Bowen on the charge, who has been held to bail to await the action of the grand jury.

THE New York Graphic suggests that a good way of celebrating our centennial anniversary would be for each land-owner to plant an elm, oak, or maple on his ground, so that a century from not our descendents may sit in the shade of them and drink to the shades of their ancestors. Poetically and practically the notion is an excellent one, since it now only gratifies sentiment, but would do much toward compensating for the loss of trees which we are continually cutting down and never replacing.

THERE is one Chicago gamin who, it is safe to bet, has "hooked" into the circus for the last time. In crawling under the canvas of Howe's show, in that city, the other day, the small boy in question unwittingly crawled under the lion's cage at the same time, and as he rose to his feet one of the kings of the forest extended his paw and caught him by the cheek, lacerating it in a fearful manner. The smell of blood rendered the animal furious, and it was with some difficulty that the huge brute could be induced to release his grip.

THE design of the twenty-cent silver piece authorized by the act of Congress of March 3, 1875, has been selected and approved. The obverse design contains a sitting figure of "Liberty," with the word "Liberty" inscribed on the shield, the whole surrounded by thirteen stars. Beneath the figure the date "1875." On the reverse the figure of an eagle surrounded by the inscription, "United States of America," and beneath the eagle the words "Twenty Cents." The edge or periphery of the coin will be perfectly smooth, in order to distinguish it from the twenty-five-cent coin, which bears a reefed or fluted edge.

MADAME PATTERSON BONAPARTE, says a writer in Scribner's for May, is still living in Baltimore, at the age of 90 years. She has no intention of dying until she is a hundred. She has been to Europe sixteen times, and contemplates another trip this summer. She is antique in costume, not attractive, and bitterly cynical; thinks all sentiment a weakness; has little or no confidence in men, and a very poor opinion of women; the young ladies of the present day, she says, all have the "homo mania." She kept a diary for forty years, and recorded her opinions about European and American society. It will be published after her death.

THE feeling throughout the whole country against the recent postal law which, while partially restoring to members of an adjourned Congress, the old franking privilege, doubled the charge of transient matter to the general public, grows stronger as the passage of time emphasizes its injustice. Even the non-political papers consider it a topic for legitimate comment, as witness the following from the agricultural editor of the Southern Plantation: "It is a sad commentary upon our system of government to know that private monopolies can influence a national legislature and induce it to pass bills detrimental to every class of citizens."

POLITICS AND POLITICIANS.

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS says the next President will be a newspaper man.

MR. DORMAN B. EATON, of the late Civil Service Commission, claims that civil service reform is not dead, but sleepeth.

THERE was once a Pennsylvania legislator who laid by $30,000 in one session. When he was asked how he managed this with a salary of $1,000, he said that he saved it by doing without a hired girl.

THE Prohibitionists of Pennsylvania have been roused into fresh action by the repeal of the Local-Option law. A State convention has been called to meet at Harrisburg on June 20.

IT is positively stated that the position of Attorney-General was offered to ex-Senator Carpenter, and he declined; also that Gen. Butler would have been given the place had not two Cabinet members decidedly objected.

CHARLES H. HARDIN, Governor of Missouri, is a native of the State, and a member of the Hardin family long distinguished in the history of Kentucky. He is a lawyer by profession, and his success was so great, that he was enabled to gratify his philanthropic desires by founding Hardin College, of Mexico, and endowing the institute with $37,800, in money and land.

THE Louisville Courier-Journal has this queer way of describing the intemperance of a journalist: "It said that Parson Brownlow, having become a Knoxville editor, has laid in seven dozen pen-holders and four quarts of ink. As it has heretofore been his custom to write with a red-hot pitchfork dipped in aqua-fortis, we should like to know what he is going to do with pen-holders and ink."

THE new License law of Massachusetts will have a fair trial in Boston. Mayor Cobb declared his intention in his first inaugural of enforcing rigidly any temperance legislation that might be adopted. Under the stringent law lately passed, the Mayor has the appointment of three Commissioners specially charged with carrying out its provisions. He has promised to find energetic and faithful men for this service.

IT has transpired that the late John Mitchell was an American citizen, having obtained naturalization papers in the District Court on the 8th of May, 1860. He took the oath of allegiance, forswearing and abjuring all allegiance and fidelity to every foreign power, and especially to Great Britain and Ireland, and was accorded his naturalization papers. When he sailed for Ireland it was under the protection of a passport of an American citizen, for which he applied to the State Department.

THE following is the letter of resignation of Attorney-General Williams, and the reply of the President:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
WASHINGTON, April 22.

The President:

I cannot dissolve our official relations without thanking you for the many acts of friendship and confidence with which you have honored me, and expressing for you personally my very high regard and esteem.

Very respectfully, GEO. H. WILLIAMS.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, April 22.

The Hon. George H. Williams, Attorney-General United States:

DEAR SIR—In accepting your resignation of the office of Attorney-General of the United States to take effect on the 15th of May, 1875, as tendered by your letter of the 22d of April, allow me to express my appreciation of the ability, zeal and efficiency with which the trust confided to your charge has been performed. My sincere friendship accompanies you in the new field of life you have chosen, and my best wishes for your success. Very respectfully,

U. S. GRANT.

WHILE our thermometers were recording all the way from ten to forty degrees below zero, the opposite extreme was experienced in Australia, the weather in the vicinity of Victoria having been hotter than for a dozen years. The mercury reached 111 degrees in the shade and 150 degrees in the sun in January. The heat was so great that the country was burned over two hundred of miles, destroying grass, fences, and in many cases buildings. One man lost a thousand sheep from this cause.

THE Lake Erie and Louisville railroad being in the hands of a receiver, it is reported that the Lake Shore and Baltimore and Ohio railroads are each trying to get possession of it.

INDIANA NEWS.

CASTLE has a divorce suit of $10,000 alimony. The parties are Wm. Snyder and his wife.

THERE will be less saloons in Floyd county under the new liquor law than under the Baxter law.

No one could have prophesied, when the first spelling school was held at Greensburg, in this State, what a run it would have.

OVER seven thousand dollars in premiums will be offered by the Tippecanoe County Agricultural Association at the next annual fair.

A FIRE at Tousey & Wiggins' warehouse, at Indianapolis, last week, destroyed about 20,000 of hams. Little damage was done to the building.

THE Vincennes Sun says the enumeration of school children in that place shows the number to be 2,852, an increase of 700 over last year.

DIGGING for coal has been given up at Oaktown. The ground was explored to the depth of several hundred feet, but no coal of a sufficient thickness was found.

MRS. ABRAM LEWIS, a Hebrew lady of Indianapolis, one morning last week clambered to the roof of her residence and precipitated herself headforemost to the pavement below, fracturing her skull. The cause of the act is not known.

THE rates of freight from Evansville to New York, via the Evansville and Crawfordsville and Vandalia lines, have been reduced from 43 cents per hundred to 37½ cents. A proportionate reduction to other Eastern points is also announced.

THE Logansport Pharos says: "To-day Trinity Episcopal Church paid the balance due on their church edifice and parsonage. Under Rev. E. J. Purdy's rectorship they have built a $20,000 church edifice and a $5,000 parsonage, and to-day they do not owe a dollar."

CASE KINDER, returning to his home near Frankfort, Clinton county, in an intoxicated condition, fell from the coupling-pole of his wagon, astride of which he was seated, his head falling between the spokes of the hind wheel. When discovered, the spokes of the wheel had beaten his head to a jelly, and the horses were jogging along with their dead driver still holding the lines.

A BLOODY affray occurred at Milford, in which Mrs. Lockhart, wife of Levi Lockhart, was seriously and almost fatally injured. It appears Mrs. Lockhart found her husband intoxicated on the street, and took him home, when an altercation took place between Mrs. Lockhart and a brother of her husband, Benton Lockhart, which ended by the latter throwing a stone at the woman, which struck her in the face and knocked out one eye. Benton Lockhart has fled to avoid arrest.

EVERY one in this State has heard of the Morgan county gold fields, and while all our home scientists agree that the precious metal exists there and in the adjoining county of Brown, they have hitherto restrained any mining fever that might have broken out in this community by asserting that the article could not be found in paying quantities. But now comes a miner who says he has accumulated twenty-two ounces of the virgin gold since he has been at work, during the past nine weeks, and the value of this, at $20 an ounce, would be $440.

THE Lafayette Courier says: "Governor Hendricks, on behalf of the trustees of Purdue University, has interviewed the President touching the appointment of some competent military official, who shall have charge of the military instructions in the Purdue University. It was also asked that a government signal be put up at the University, and that this official have charge of it also. The President favored the movement, but said it was only in the power of congress to grant the request. Upon the assembling of congress the matter will be brought before it."

THURSDAY being the twenty-first anniversary of the organization of the Logansport Fire Department, it was made the occasion of a grand tournament and gala day by the firemen. The city was beautifully decorated with flags. Delegations and visiting companies, with apparatus and bands of music, were present from Kokomo, Delphi, Peru, Wabash, Tipton, Frankfort and Noblesville. A procession, including all the fire companies, the mayor and city council, paraded. In the contest of steamers, to start with cold water in boilers, run 150 yards, throw water through 100 feet of hose, a distance of 50 feet, the prize was won by the steamer City of Kokomo; time, 11 minutes 45 seconds. The prize for hose companies, to run 150 yards, attach a nozzle and put the hose to the engine, was won by the Independents, of Logansport; time, 29¼ seconds. The exercises concluded with a grand ball.

THE annual session of the Indiana Institute of Homœopathy convened at Plymouth Church, Indianapolis, on Wednesday, with the following members in attendance: J. Hoyt, Terre Haute; J. M. Parks and T. P. Wilson, Cincinnati; W. L. Breyfogle and A. MacNeal, New Albany; S. Cook, Greensburg; M. T. Reynolds, Franklin; D. Falley, Lafayette; H. W. Taylor, Crawfordsville; W. S. Morgan, Jamestown, and Drs. Hunt, Hayes, Boyd, Hoyt, Reynolds, Otis, Eggert, Haggard, and Complin. Dr. Elder read a paper on hyperesthesia of the vagina, O. S. Runnels on carcinoma uteri, and W. L. Breyfogle on our ears and how to take care of them. An election of officers for the ensuing year was held with the following result: D. W. Eggert, President; Drs. J. A. Compton and S. McGuire, Vice-Presidents; O. S. Runnels, Secretary; J. R. Haines, Treasurer; Drs. Elden, MacNeal, Hunt, Conliss, and Bahrenburg, Censors.

Job Dowling's Funeral.

S. S. Cox writes the following: Many years ago I was one of a party in Washington city, when South and North vied with each other in convivial life. Another of the party was Gen. Dawson, member from Western Pennsylvania, whose homestead was Albert Gallatin's old home. He was an admirable story-teller. I recall somewhat sadly, now that he is gone, how well he illustrated the laziness of a class of Virginians. The story was a part of his Congressional canvassing. On one occasion he got across the Pennsylvania line into a little village of Virginia. He was in the midst of a group around the tavern. While treating and talking, a procession approached which looked like a funeral. He asked who was to be buried? "Job Dowling," said they. "Poor Job!" sighed the General. He was a good-natured, good-for-nothing, lazy fellow living on the few fish he caught and the squirrels he killed, but mostly on the donations of his neighbors. "So poor Job is dead, is he?" "No, he ain't dead, zactly," said they. "Not dead—not d—— Yet you are going to bury him?" "Fact is, General, he has got too infernal all-fired lazy to live. We can't afford him any more. He's got so lazy that the grass began to grow over his shoes—so everlasting lazy that he put out one of his eyes to save the trouble of winkin' when out a gunnin'." "But," says the General, "this must not be. It will disgrace my neighborhood. Try him a while longer, can't you?" "Can't; too late—coffin cost $1.25. Must go on now." About this time the procession came up, and halted, when the General proposed if they would take Job out he would send over a bag of corn. On this announcement the lids of the coffin opened and Job languidly sat up; the cents dropped from his eyes as he asked, "Is the corn shelled, General?" "No, not shelled." "Then," said Job, as he lazily lay down, "go on with the funeral!"

A Dead Weight of Lead.

Oscar Barton was a bad boy of Somerville, Tennessee. He was only nineteen years old, and therefore, a boy, but he did man's work about town. He was a walking arsenal of small arms—had at various times fired himsel off, and killed a good many people. He had one good trait, however. He always told people about when there was danger in him, so they could defend themselves if they desired so to do. That was certainly very kind of Burton. He was honorable in all his assassinations to that extent.

Last August there was a rumor that the negroes were about to attack Somerville, and Oscar Burton armed himself for the defence of the town. He went out like David did against the giant of Gath and swore death and destruction to any man with a black face he might meet. The black men kept out of his way. The Sheriff of the county and the Sheriff's two brothers, went forth to take Burton into custody. Burton killed the Sheriff and one of the brothers and crippled the other brother for life and was not taken. In the skirmish he was riddled with bullets and filled with lead. Nobody thought he could possibly survive, but he did, and the lead he carried gave him more weight. This was all the inconvenience he experienced. T. N. Doyle, a young man of 21, and a clerk in a store at Somerville, occupied the same room for some time with Burton. Doyle was summoned before the grand-jury and testified that Burton carried concealed weapons. The next day Doyle told Burton what he had done. He excused himself by saying that he could not swear to a lie when the question was asked him under oath, and said he would make all the reparation he could by paying Burton's fine if he was fined. It was on Sunday that Doyle made the explanation to Burton. Burton became incensed and told Doyle that he did not want to kill a man on Sunday, but would postpone the killing until the next time he met him; honorable to the last. Doyle knew his man and placed himself on guard. On Monday he saw Burton sauntering across the street, towards the store, with his hand in his bosom. Doyle got a heavily-loaded double-barrelled shotgun and stepping into the door, fired upon Burton in the street. He fired both barrels in quick succession, both charges entering Burton's breast, tearing it wide open. Burton fell. Doyle advanced on him with a revolver and fired several shots into him to make a sure thing this time. Oscar Burton is dead. On his person were found not less than five loaded navy revolvers. Doyle was arrested, but he has all the sympathy in Somerville.—St. Louis Republican.

VALUABLE AUTOGRAPHS.—Count Enzenberg, formerly resident Minister of Hesse at Paris, is a collector of autographs, and has in his album three of unusual interest. The first is of M. Guizot, who writes: "In the course of my long life I have learned two wise things—one is to forgive much, the other is never to forget." M. Thiers wrote underneath: "A little of forgetfulness does not injure the sincerity of the forgiveness." Prince Bismarck wrote below these two sentences the following: "I have learned in my life to forget much, and make myself much forgiven."

THIS is too funny. The London Daily Telegraph, after reading the police-court reports of the Detroit Free Press, condemn the levity of American magistrates, but solemnly weighs the matter thus: "We may not approve of jocularity in a magisterial court, but, on the whole, it may be questioned whether the mirthful readiness of the American Judge may not be preferable to the solemn injustice which local courts in England so frequently witness."

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

The Old Barn.

A misty twilight filled the country barn,
  And gathered in gray shadows o'er the mows;
While thread-like sunbeams pierced each gaping seam,
  And lit the manger of the feeding cows.

With childish games we played among the hay,
  Of hide-and-seek behind the sheaves of grain;
With bursts of childish laughter, free and light,
  As we can never hope to laugh again.

O, how the echo of our shouts would ring
  From roof to stable through the joyous day!
The cows would cease their feeding and look up,
  For wonder at our revelry, so gay.

We'd play mad games with pitchfork and with rake,
  Fright'ning the brood hen cackling from her nest;
We'd bowl with pumpkins 'cross the threshing-floor
  Till evening trailed her sable in the west.

No spot so wondrous as the old gray barn,
  Where Don, the farm horse, stood, and peaceful cows
Chewed solemnly their cuds, stanchioned secure
  Beneath the shadow of the dusky mows.

The swallow left her nest beneath the eaves,
  And twittered o'er us while we romped at play,
As though she [illegible]
  And shared the joy that made our laugh so gay.

But deep within the calm eyes of the cows,
  When past the manger in our play we trod,
Something within their sinless depths appalled,
  And made us think of mystery, and God.

Something we could not solve, nor comprehend,
  Which hushed our laughter and our boisterous play;
Till solemn awe possessed our little souls,
  And, one by one, we sighed and crept away.

O, for one blessed hour of the pure joy
  Lived in the old gray barn beneath the hill!
O, for a single laugh like that of old,
  Whose deathless echo never will be still!

The breath of lands is not more chastely pure
  Than such loved memories, wafted from our youth;
They come like doves from consecrated bowers,
  Loved messengers of innocence and truth.

Around the Farm.

SWING-FRAME cultivators and gang-plows are machines which we advise all to give a trial before buying. They are generally ungovernable machines, and do not work true and steadily.

NOTING the possibility of having another dry season, would not farmers find it to their advantage to sow carrots or parsnips which root deep? These crops are very profitable on good land, and are relished by all kinds of animals.

CLEANSING maple sirup is condemned as useless by Nelson Ritter in the Country Gentleman. He says it does not make the sugar any whiter or clearer. To make sugar light colored he advises stirring constantly while cooling. If sap is strained and kept clean, no cleansing is necessary.

THE Journal of Agriculture plainly intimates that suspicion is rife, in the minds of many, that the big prices paid, or rather said to be paid, for Duchesses and members of other fashionable families of short-horn cattle, exist only in the imagination of those interested; or, to speak plainly, are simply fictions and misrepresentations. Perhaps the sales are made upon the popular "chromo" plan, and a valuable "chromo" check given to the purchaser of the cow, calf, or bull as a discount. Such "back action" is easily possible.

A CROP of Swede turnips which yielded 46¼ tons, of 2,240 pounds to the ton, or 51¼ tons of 2,000 pounds, per acre, was grown last season by an English farmer, Mr. Whittingham, of Ashley Hall, near Altrincham. The land was drained marsh, plowed in drills 25 inches apart, and fertilized with 20 tons of lime manure, 336 pounds of ground bone, and 168 pounds of guano per acre. "The seed had been ground upon the farm from well-selected bulbs," as had been the custom for many years.

A PERSON who has benefitted by his experience makes the following suggestions as to protecting trees from the ravages of mice: "For the past twenty-five years, whenever snow falls in sufficient quantities on bare ground, I have been in the habit of stamping it down hard, around the trunks of my fruit trees, and have never had a tree injured by mice since I began the practice. Mice are found most beside walls or fences in old fields, containing bog or old grass, and they make roads immediately on the top of the ground, and attack the trees at the bottom, working up. Any hard substance round the tree, pressed close to the ground, will prevent the mice from reaching the trunks. I have also used coal ashes with good success."

FEED FOR WORK-HORSES.—For draft work with a walking-gait, whether on the farm or in the city, the best ration is corn and oats, or corn and barley ground together, and mixed with moistened cut hay. In this case, ten pounds hay, ten pounds of the mixed meal, and one-half pound of the oil-meal, or eight pounds of the meal with four of fine bran, costing, in most places, not over twenty-five cents per day. A few potatoes, carrots, beets or parsnips, are excellent for the health of the work-horse. For horses not at work, or having only a little exercise, sixteen pounds of early cut hay, four pounds oats, with a few roots, or a little oil-meal will keep them in fine condition and good health. Such horses may also be kept on clover and timothy hay, without grain, if that is cheaper; but no animal should be kept throughout the winter on dry food alone. Variety of food should be provided, as far as this can be done with economy.—Live Stock Journal.

About the House.

UNSLAKED lime is excellent for cleaning small steel articles, such as jewelry, buckles, and the like.

A SLATTERN always makes a poor cook. The woman who don't dress herself has never yet succeeded in dressing a beef-steak properly.

SOAPSTONE hearths are first washed in pure water, and then rubbed with powdered marble or soapstone, put on with a piece of the same stone.

DOUGHNUTS.—One pint milk, one cup shortening, two of sugar, one of yeast, three eggs, two spoonfuls cinnamon. When risen fry in hot lard.

SODA CAKE.—One-half cup of butter, one and a half cups of sugar, two cups of flour, one-half cup of milk, three eggs, one-half teaspoon soda, one teaspoon cream tartar.

GINGER CAKE.—Take one tablespoonful of ginger, one of lard, one even of saleratus, half pint of molasses, half teacup water; knead soft, roll thin, and bake in a quick oven.

SILVER CAKE.—One cup of butter, two cups of sugar, three cups of flour, one cup of milk, the whites of three eggs, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of cream tartar.

SPOTS can be taken out of marble with finely powdered pumice-stone, mixed with verjuice. Cover the spots and allow the stuff to remain for twelve hours, then rub clean, dry, and rinse.

A GOOD broom-holder may be had by laying your broom down with the brush flat, and boring a hole through the top of the handle with a three-eighths bit. It will not cost a cent, and you can hang your broom on any common nail.

TO REMOVE THE GLOSS FROM BLACK SILK.—When this gloss is caused by constant wear, moisten the silk with a sponge, lay a damp cloth over it, and pass a hot iron quickly over the cloth several times till it is quite dry.

TWO OUNCES of common tobacco boiled in a gallon of water is used by the Chatham street dealers for renovating old-clothes. The stuff is rubbed on with a stiff brush. The goods are nicely cleaned, and, strange to add, no tobacco smell remains.

PORK CAKE.—One pound of pork, chopped very fine; two cups of sugar; one cup of molasses; one pint of water; one pound of raisins, chopped not very fine; one tablespoonful of cloves; one nutmeg; one teaspoonful of soda. If it is iced it will keep some time.

TO PUT A GLOSS ON LINEN.—Add to the starch a little sugar or white wax or butter; iron in the usual way. Then pass a damp cloth over the linen, lay it on a smooth board, and polish with a polishing-iron made for the purpose and sold in house furnishing stores for about a dollar.

Bathing Children.

Some mothers, writes a physician, think when their children get beyond two or three years of age, the frequent entire bath can be dispensed with. If some of the main facts of physiology were well known and understood, every one would perceive that cleanliness of the skin is one of the conditions of good health. It happens when bathing is disregarded, that the lungs, kidneys or bowels have more than their appointment of work. If these are strong and healthy, they may bear the tax with little apparent injury, but, in most cases, a lowering of the vitality and tone of the nervous system ensues. Large bath tubs are pleasant and convenient, but not indispensable to the proper cleansing of the skin. A speedy sponging of the body in warm water, followed by friction in pure air, is all that is necessary.

When disinclined to use water, I find a thorough application of the flesh brush to the whole person an admirable substitute; especially on retiring, it relieves nervousness, equalizes the circulation, and induces quiet sleep. Mothers, above all, should see that their children are well bathed. If their skins are kept active and healthy there will not be half the danger from fever, cold and eruptive diseases. If your little one is cross or troublesome, and finds no occupation that pleases him, try the effect of a bath; sometimes it is magical, and if tired, he will go to sleep and awake bright, cheerful and happy. Do not, though, as I have seen some parents do, plunge a child into water, when he screams and shrinks from it, thinking you are doing a good deed. Nature must be the guide; if your child has a nervous constitution, a shock of this kind is only exhausting and injurious.

Branial Banquet.

A most suggestive lecture was delivered in New York City last Saturday by Dr. L. S. Lambert, President of an insurance company. The doctor has given much attention to the subject of brain-feeding, and has on several occasions enlightened the public in various ways as to the proper diet for colossal minds, or those that would like to be colossal. As preliminary to the lecture of Saturday, he invited a number of social guests to a branial banquet on Friday evening, and spread before them the following bill of fare:

Bill of Fare (Branial Food)—Relish (Russian fashion). Toasted crackers and toasted cheese. Second course—Oysters on half shell and cold cabbage. Third course—Sardines. Fourth course—Codfish and cream. Fifth course—Oyster salad. Sixth course—Stewed tripe and green peas. Seventh course—Calves' brains on toast. Dessert—First course—Oat groats and cream. Second course—Pancakes (oat, buckwheat, and Graham meal). Third course—Boiled custard. Fruit—Apples and oranges. Drinks—Coffee and buttermilk.

All the guests at the close of the repast testified to their appreciation of it. They said the food was most palatable and excellently prepared. Perhaps the most obvious reflection upon the proceedings relates to the leveling tendencies of the times. It has been said that the only aristocracy in America is an aristocracy of intellect. Are we to be deprived of that also? It seems so, indeed, if genius is to be sought in codfish and cream, and calves' brains are to be sucked in from the outside like Roederer and "Carte Blanche.—Chicago Tribune.

Cleaning Stains.

Mud, especially that of cities, is a compound of vegetable remains, and of ferruginous matter in a state of black oxide. Washing with pure water, followed, if necessary, with soaping, will take away the vegetable juices; and then the iron may be removed with cream of tartar, which itself must, however, be well washed out. Ink stains, when recent, may be taken out by washing, first with pure water, next with soapy water, and lastly with lemon juice; but if old they may be treated with oxalic acid. Stains occasioned by smoke, or by sauces browned in a frying-pan may be supposed to consist of a mixture of pitch, black oxide of iron, empyreumatic oil, and some saline matters dissolved in pyroligneous acid. In this case several re-agents must be employed to remove the stains. Water and soap dissolve perfectly well the vegetable matters, the salts, the pyroligneous acid, and even the empyreumatic oils in a great measure; the essence of turpentine will remove the rest of the oils and all the pitchy matter; then oxalic acid may be used to discharge the iron. Coffee stains require washing with water, with a careful soaping at the temperature of one hundred and twenty degrees Fahrenheit, followed by sulphuration. The two latter processes may be repeated twice or thrice, chocolate stains may be removed by the same means, and more easily.

THE proposed trip of the Prince of Wales to India will cost $1,250,000.

Granger Headquarters!

NO MIDDLE MEN with us; this is the secret of our immense trade. We buy at first hands and sell direct to the consumer; hence, we save our customers the profits of the speculator, jobber and wholesale merchants. These profits amount to from 10 to 20 per cent. Our customers get the benefit of them. Take Teas, for instance, the profits on that article are so great that the price is often doubled before it reaches the consumer. Every time it changes hands there is 10 to 20c. per pound added to it. This, of course, the consumer has to pay. Of course the retailer will endeavor to persuade you that his Teas are werth the money, that they cost him so and so. Well, this is all true, but the trouble is he has paid too much in the first place and can't help himself. He purchases from the wholesale grocer, and the wholesale grocer has to add his 20c. All these extra profits our customers get the benefit of, and it is just the same as Coffees, Sugar,s Spices, Canned Goods, Oysters, &c., as on Teas. No Middle Man with us. They would starve to Death if they had to live on the profits they make of us.

One effect of the "spellozooty" which has been raging during the past six months, is seen in the fearful name adopted by a show which is now on a tour throgh northern Indiana,. "Cirqzoolodon." Hhorrible!

With the advent of the circus we may expect the usual sneak thieves dead beats and swindlers. See that your doors and windows are properly secured against their ivasiont,—and, we might add your pocket books also.

Goverment troops have captured about twenty Indian chiefs, known to have been leaders in some the worst mossacres of recent years, and they have taken them to Fort Leavenworth for treatment. They should have prompt and adequate punishment for their crimes.

A man who owns a cat of the Beecher gender, that is addicted to making pastoral calls, and serenading his Elizabeth at all hours of the night, and standing on fences with his back up, who don't keep that cat shut up will have a cat funeral pretty soon.

The Columbia City Post accuses Rev. Mr. Stilwell, who came from Logansport and canvased Columba City and Churubusco for an illustrated bible, with having made indecent overtures to respectable ladies of the above named places. The Post denounces the Rev. gentelman in severe terms.

When a man wears his hair long, has a dark rolling eye, wears his coat buttoned tightly across his waist, so that the bosom will bulge out, and write poetry, he may still marry the daughter of a man who was a presidential candidate. Woman, are Conundrums which you can't answer yourselves.

A man who yesterday dropped two cents worth of mail matter into the post office box, and had to pay six cents to do it, went over and stood by one of the windows and said: "May Hannibal Hamlin, of Maine, have the bilious colic the ague, the gout, the jaundice, corns, bunions, boils and the buckwheat scratches from this daynoon for the next fifty years to come!"

Auburn boys seem to advance in education whether they attend school or not. A boot black who couldn't change a ten cent piece a year ago, was recently heard remarking: Jno. Rogers, if you ever corrogate your brow at me in that way again I shall temporaily deposit my box on the pavement, and cause the blood to congulate under your left optic. Hear me, John.

"How would you feel, my dear, if you were to meet a wolf!" asked an old lady of her grandchild, with whom she road "Oh, grandmamma, I should be so frightened!" was the reply. But I should stand in front of you and protect you," said the old lady. "Would you grannie?" cried the child, clapping her hands with delight. "That would be nice! While the wolf was eating you I should have time to run away."

An Alabama politician, J. S. Perin by name, has 'fessed all his iniquities. He has told how the truly loyal men took United States troops and went about terrifying voters, and how the United States Marshals carried bogus warrants with them, threatening to arrest any inconvenient voter, and how he, the vallent J. S. Perin, fired a pistol bullet through his hat and said the Ku-klux had attempted to murder him. This was all done to secure the election of that ingenious rascal, Spencer, to the United States Senate. The testimony on the Beecher trial has just shown that he was a constant visitor at Victora Woodhull's house.

Danbury Spelling

An impromtu spelling school was inaugurated in Merrill's grocery Saturday evening. A young man who last winter aided Mr. Couch in the management of the North Center School conducted the class. The first word he gave out was Indian.

The first man said: "I-n in, d-i-n—Indip."

The teacher shook his head. "Well I declare I thot I had it." said the speller with keen disappointment; but he picked up when the second man started and eyed him with considerable anxiety.

The next man with desperate earnestness said: "I-n in, d-e de inde, u-n, un—Indeun."

Then he sighed and gazed anxiously at the teacher while an old party at the end of the bench, who was watching the efforts with decisive amusement, turned the quid in his mouth, and said:

"You ain't within a rod on't; but go on let's some more try."

The teacher told the second speller that he also had failed, whereupon he sighed again.

Then the third man took hold. He squared himself upon his seat and holding up one finger and ticked off the letters with becoming solemnity, as follows:

"I-n in, d-d-d-a da, inda, i-n in,—Indain."

The old party on the end of the bench who had been teetering on the precipice of a laugh while this effort was being put forth snickered right out in a loud guffaw at its conclusion.

"Well that's a spell for you, I must say." And then he laughed again. The speller said nothing, but he grew very red in the face when his failure was announced, and cast a blameful glance to the old party whose turn had come, and who said:

"And now I'll tackle that little word and he smiled all over his face, while his eyes twinkled with merriment, and looking sideways from one to the other he rapidle spelled—

"I-n in, g-i-n Ingin"

His smile deepened into a broad grin as he watched the chagrin flesh, to the countenances of the other spellers, who had been misled all the time on a wrong pronunciation of the word. He was grinning with all his might when the teacher said:

"You ain't got the right word."

"Wh-an-ot," and he bore down on the brazen-faced youth a look calculated to freeze him to the bone.

"Indian is the word. There is no such a word as Ingin," said the teacher.

"Oh, there isn't hey?" (sarcastically) You know of course. You know all about it. You pimply——

"But my dear sir, I——

"You needn't apologize to me," shouted the old party, stamping the floor with his cane. "Who be you, anyway, putting on your airs about me? I could twist your scrawny neck off of you in two minutes, you white-livered puppy you."

"But my dear sir, let me ex——

"It isn't Ingin is it?" ground out the old chap between his teeth. "Its somethin' else I suppose. O yes! you know of course. And a nice one you are with your eddication. Why don't your mother bring back them apples she borrowed a month ago?" and he looked around the store with a triumphant glare of sarcasm.

"But just hear me——"

"Hear you! Who are you, anyway? What's your father? When's he drawed a sober breath, I should like to know, An' where's your smart brother Ben? In pris'n somewhere, I'll be bound. Oh I know yer hull family like a book. And a wuss lot than they are can't be found in this neighborhood, and you just put that in your pipe and smoke it, you egregious ass. Talk to me about spellin," and the old man stamped his cane again and stalked passionately out of the store

The lesson was then posponed.—Danbury News.

Too Thin—Mrs. Tilton's pretended anxiety to be allowed to testify in the great case, and the sensational manner in which her application was made, are entirely too thin. It is well known that she has long been under the controlling influence of Mr. Beecher and his friends They declined to call her to the witness stand, after the plaintiff's attorneys had signified their willingness. Beecher's lawyers were afraid she would break down as a witness; but now endeavor to get the whole moral effect with the jury by making it appear that she is anxious to testify. This saves all the embarrassment of a cross-examination, you see—deprives the plaintiff of all opportunity to weaken the effect of her offer, in any legitimate way. It is a flagrant contempt of court.

If anyone wants a good county paper for two dollars a year, they had better subscribe for the COURIER and then the whole family can read for a week—its so large.

A HUNTING ADVENTURE

BY GEORGE L. AUSTIN.

The incident which I am about to relate to my young readers occured only a few years ago. Although not attended by any serious result it was altogether a most terrifying adventure.

You must first know that I had gone north from Point de Gally—a seaport which lies in the southern extremity of Ceylon—on a hunting excursion in company with a large party. Having reached a certain station we seperated, some of us choosing to go in one direction and nome in an other. I remained with with the minority, with whom it was agreed that the majority should reunite five days later, at the foot of the offshoots of the Kandyou range of mountains. The place of meeting was near a large "tank."

And now one word relative to these tanks. At home we should call them "reservoirs," such as are found back in the mill regions for the constant supply of water in the dry season. The tanks of Ceylon were built ages ago for a similar puapose, and are both very large and numerous.

On the evening of the fourth day—to return to my story—we encamped not far from the tank near which we were to meet on the morrow. In the early morning I awoke, and while preparing for the advance a comrad said to me:

"Cop, did you hear that infernal growling last night?"

"No, I replied, very much astonished by the conviction that I must have slept uncommonly sound.

"It began about one o'clock I should say, and was kept up with intervals until about five. And so you didn't hear it?"

"No; but what do you suppose it was?"

"Most likely a panther or tigar. The thing for us to do, at all odds, is to keep eyes and ears open for the rest of the day."

"In other words, to try and get a good shot at the villain, eh?"

Only two of our party was engaged in this sport—my friend and myself. On the previous day he had killed a small deer, and after cutting off a few slices, had left the carcass where it fell. He proposed that the deer should not be brought into use as bait, and fastened to a certain tree near the tank, to which the howling beast would probably come to drink.

"I always thought," said I that tigers and panthers and the like would not eat of dead meat.

"That will do to talk about," said my companion, who though born of English parents, was a native of the Island; for when tigars are hungry they eat just what they can get, and won't be slow about it either.

After further debate we arranged our little game in accordance with my friend's suggestions.

The deer was brought up and fastened to a large sycamore tree in an upright posture; and the tall grass which grew along the bank of the pond, or tank, was brushed up carefully, so as to conceal, if possible, the appearance of any human footstep. We lingered in the vicinity nearly the whole day through without meeting signs of success.

"This day is not very agreeable," said I to my friend.

"It is something that a man must get used to if he stays long in these parts. But only wait until night comes on, and I'll wager a sovereign that the game will be played."

About half-past seven in the evening the moon rose full and bright, and the hitherto dark waters of the tank were all aglow as with flashing silver.

We ascended the tree and stationed ourselves about ten feet above the ground, each of us with rifles in hand, occupying a separate branch. A half hour later I chanced to remember that I had left my cartridge-case lying on the earth not far distant. I went in search of it; while I was returning to the tree a low whistle brought me to a halt. In the full glare of the moon I beheld a monster slowly approaching, of unfriendly guise.

Between me and the tree was a distance of about thirty paces. I began to tremble, and dropped down behind a bush. I watched every movement of my friend as well as kept keen eye on the animal, at whose head my rifle was poined.

Minutes seemed hours, and the suspense of a few seconds almost relaxed my courage and strength. But why not send a volley at the beast? I will explain.

We had thought to deceive him by the deer; and if perchance we would only induce him to make an attack in that direction we would have a better chance of securing him in the end.—Thank fortune our plan did not fail.

After a few minutes of hesitation, during which the tiger, half suspicious of danger, looked him for further confirmation he approached the deer.—When within five feet from him he sprang forward, and seizing it by the throat made an effort to draw blood.

The animal recognized the deception at once. But before he could offer any complaint a rifle ball struck him full in the face.

The tiger bounded toward me; but before reaching the bush behind which I was cowering he fell prostrate—not dead but watchful.

Who can tell the agony of that moment? My friend could not take aim without running the risk of hitting me. In this situation I remained for half an hour. The stillness on his part induced me to believe that he was either dead or dying.

At lengh the Englishman decended the tree and there was still some hope. I watched my friend with strained eyelids and saw him creeping forward. His rifle was poned, and he ment either to shoot me or the antagonist.

All at once the tiger, a most ferocious brute, turned his head, shook it, arose on his feet.

Bang! Bang!

Half concious only of what I was doing, I discharged the remaining contents of my rifle. The smoke cleared away. Trembling, and perspiring freely I crept up to my comrad.

"Give me your hand, good fellow,' "and thank God you shot him—not I"

He was standing over the victim, which lay lifeless at his feet.

We were amused at a story told by our old friend Chas. Fox. When he first came to Auburn he engaged in the butcher business, and instead of wrapping the meat up in a paper, as they do now, they used a small stick which was run through the meat and carried in the hand. Charley was at John Hebel's grocery one day, about the time John was going to quit the business, and espied a lot of wrapping paper.

John says: "Sharley what you give me off dot baper?"

"O, I don't know, Shon, vat you take?"

"I tell you vot I do, Sharley, I give you dot baper at fust cost—eighteen cents a pound."

Vehl, I took it, immediately."

This was the first Charley ever bought and he put on city airs in taking a whole sheet to a pound of meat. He was very much pleased with his new arrangement, and when visiting around among the merchants, he would look at their paper, and fumble it over and over, to see "what quality it was." One day he called on Chas. Klotz. After a while the wrapping paper fever began, and Charley says:

"How do you sell dot quality"

"Four cents a pound, sir, how much will you have."

"Vhat vour cents a pound?" Vehl Vehl.

"Yes, sir, four cents, and that is good paper. But we have some for three cents Charley."

"Vhat, three? I must make mine self off dot John Hebel's pusiness so quick like lighting.

Charley seen John, and what paper was left he returned, and set up all that night whiteling sticks so as to continue his old way of doing business.

The offer of Tilton's counsel to waive all objections to the testimony of Mrs. Tilton, and the declination of Beecher's counsel to avail them selves of the knowledge of the only persons besides Mr. Beecher can testify with absolute certainty as to commission of the crime charged by Tilton against Beecher. It will be thought, wheather justly or not that the defence are unwilling to run risk of invalidating the careful testimony of Mr. Beecher by admissions or contradictions on the part of the lady. She, of all others in the world, would seem to be the person whose testimony would be most important to the great preacher and clear him, if he is innocent, were she allowed to speak.

Keep your eye peeled for the counterfeit five cent nickles. Some one with an eye to "biz" has started an opposition mint in Brimingham, England, and the prospect for a good nickle crop this summer is excellent. The counterfeit states (as does our own) that "in God we trust 5 cents;" and is generally a good imitation. It is said the government knows its own coin by the use of a certain kind of acid; so if you happen to have a nickle with you just see if it has the right acid tast. If not why drop it—into the contributation box—the benighted heathen isn't a rule, a chemical expert.

A large and well developed grasshoper arrived via the fast train from Kansas City yesterday. He reports his companions there in excellant condition and preparing for the summer compaign. He also promised, if the crops out there did't improve, to come east and grow up with the country. The specimen alluded represents a constituency of some 500,000,000. This gives only 125 grasshoppers to each inhabitant of Kansas and yet they complain.

FARM-YARD SONG.

BY J. T. TROWBRIDGE.

Over the hill the farm-boy goes;
His shadow lengthens along the land,
A giant staff in giant hand;
In the poplar-tree above the spring
The katydid begins to sing;
The early dews are falling;
Into the stone-heap darts the mink,
The swallows skim the river's brink,
And home to the woodland fly the crows,
When over the hill the farm-boy goes,
Cheerily calling—
"Co', boss! co', boss! co'! co'! co'!"
Farther, farther over the hill,
Faintly calling, calling still—
"Co', boss! co', boss! co'! co'!"

Into the yard the farmer goes,
With grateful heart, at the close of day;
Harness and chain are hung away;
In the wagon-shed stand yoke and plow;
The straw's in the stack, the hay in the mow;
The cooling dews are falling;
The friendly sheep his welcome bleat,
The pigs come grunting to his feet,
The whinnying mare her master knows,
When into the yard the farmer goes,
His cattle calling—
"Co', boss! co', boss! co'! co'! co'!"
While still the cow-boy, far away,
Goes seeking those that have gone astray—
"Co', boss! co', boss! co'! co'!"

Now to her task the milkmaid goes;
The cattle come crowding through the gate,
Lowing, pushing, little and great;
About the trough, by the farm-yard pump,
The frolicsome yearlings frisk and jump,
While the pleasant dews are falling;
The new milch heifer is quick and shy,
But the old cow waits with tranquil eye;
And the white stream into the bright pail flows,
When to her task the milkmaid goes,
Soothingly calling—
"So, boss! so, boss! so! so! so!"
The cheerful milkmaid takes her stool,
And sits and milks in the twilight cool,
Saying, "So, so, boss! so! so!"

To supper at last the farmer goes;
The apples are pared, the paper read,
The stories are told, then all to bed;
Without, the cricket's ceaseless song
Makes shrill the silence all night long;
The heavy dews are falling;
The housewife's hand has turned the lock;
Drowsily ticks the kitchen clock;
The household sinks to deep repose;
But still in sleep the farm-boy goes
Singing, calling—
"Co', boss! co,' boss! co'! co'! co'!"
And oft the milkmaid, in her dreams,
Drums in the pail with the flashing streams,
Murmuring, "So, boss! so!"

THE STORY OF RAOUL SURIAN.

"Le style, c'est l'homme."

Monsieur Buffon invented the phrase—it is something more than a mot—and the police furnish a practical application of it. The identity of all the criminals is measurably arrived at by the police knowing the style in which they operate. This style is the key to what would otherwise be an impenetrable cipher. The instructed experts of the Paris police are able to determine with a precision and certainty which seem marvelous to the uninitiated, whose hand it was committed a certain robbery, or violated the laws in any crucial way.

Raoul Surian, a criminal of distinguished eminence, had a style of his own that, while very successful in its pecuniary results, was very troublesome in its consequence to him, since it was so plainly marked as to be immediately recognized by the police. Hence, each time he "operated" he was sure to be arrested, and not always safe to escape conviction. As his operations were numerous and extensive he was often convicted, and at the age of 40 had passed fifteen of the last twenty years of his life in prison.

Raoul Surian, called Freluquet, was the son of an optician and instrument maker of Marseilles, and followed the trade of his father until his 19th year, when he came up to Paris to seek his fortune. He first became known to the police through a rapid succession of swindling operations, very successfully contrived, for the delivery of goods which he did not possess and the appropriation of money which was not his own. Finally convicted, he was sentenced to close confinement for three years, and graduated from prison a very accomplished chevalier d'industrie. His operations now assumed a bolder character, and he worked in a larger field. He was again convicted of deceiving a wealthy bourgeois and obtaining a "loan" from him of 100,000 francs. This time he served five years. A third conviction insured him a close confinement of five years more.

At the expiration of this last sentence Raoul Surian returned to Paris and announced his intention to "reform." He had saved a little money by extra labor in prison, his father was dead, and he set up a small shop at Belleville for the sale of spectacles eye-glasses and mathematical instruments. He was closely observed by the police, but seemed to conduct himself in the most exemplary manner. His passport at this time described a man of ordinary height and figure, modest but manly carriage, face rather pale, blonde hair, no beard, and large, liquid, noticeable blue eyes. The face, so the signalement declared, was ingenuous, frank, open, with a rather engaging smile, but none of the features were striking, unless it were the eyes. He was a great favorite with the police, who had necessarily a great solicitude on his behalf, for, instead of avoiding them, he assiduously cultivated their acquaintance, made them little presents and gave a few francs now and then to the funds for the support of indigent criminals, and for the burial of deceased sergents de ville. He admitted, with many shrugs of the shoulders, that he had been a bad subject, but claimed that he was shrewd enough to understand that in any contest betwixt him and the law he was certain to fall underneath. He had tried it several times, and was quite well satisfied with the punishment he had received. In short, his reformation was definitive and complete.

After a few months' shop-keeping at Belleville Surian sold out his establishment. He had made a good deal of money, he said, speculating in shares at the Bourse, and did not need any longer to continue the drudgery of shop-keeping. He now rented a modest apartment on the third floor of a handsome house in a street not far from the Boulevard des Italiens—a drawing-room, dressing-room, breakfast-parlor, two bed-rooms, room for servant, and a small room which he called the laboratory. Here he installed "Madame" Surian, a very handsome and vivacious brunette, understood to have been a certain Mdlle. Cytheree, not unknown to frequenters of the coulisses of the opera. In his "laboratory" Surian had a stock of furnaces, crucibles, wheels and various other instruments, and cast and ground glasses for optical and other instruments, for which he received many orders, being accounted a skillful and ingenious workman. He had an assistant, a stolid-looking Alsatian, named Jules Gochen. His principal work, however, seemed to be at the Bourse, where he speedily became known as a daring operator, who would carry the heaviest load of shares in the face of the most arduous difficulties, who always accepted his successes with modesty, and paid his losses promptly at maturity. As the police kept the secret of his past life faithfully, and he himself, of course, did not disclose it, it came generally to be admitted that Raoul Surian was a very wealthy person, who had made his money by following civil engineering in South America, and returned to Paris to spend it like a gentleman.

In 1869 there was a tremendous effort made at the Bourse to "corner" the shares of the Serbo-Moldavian railway. The "corner" was broken prematurely, and a great slaughter ensued among the "bulls." Among those punished most severely was M. Raoul Surian, whose net losses, it was whispered, exceeded 750,000 francs. He came up gallantly, however, paid every centime, and, as if to show he was not hurt, set up a coupe of his own. "Madame" had already long been in the habit of driving to the Bois in a very handsome turnout, but that, it was understood, was hired only.

Simultaneously an operation of another kind agitated financial centers and attracted the undivided attention of the police. Bills on American account aggregating over five millions of francs were sold in London, Paris, Amsterdam and Hamburg which were found to be forgeries. The police, after long consultation and comparison of data, found no room to doubt that all these operations were the work of one man, and that the "style" was that of the once eminent, but now reformed, confidence man, M. Raoul Surian.

A couple of the most trusty agents were detailed to "work up" the case, and, at the end of three weeks, Surian was arrested and confronted with the parties in the several cities who had been victimized by the forger. It was known that Surian had been absent from Paris, and it was hoped to identify him beyond mistake. Just here, however, a most unexpected hitch occurred. The swindler was said to be "something like" Surian, but he had gray eyes, dark hair and light blonde beard. The witnesses were unanimous as to the color and appearance of the eyes, which were described as being as different as possible from the suspected man's eyes; and Surian was accordingly discharged.

Not satisfied with this, Surian went to police headquarters and complained of the injury done to his character and business by this arrest upon so slight a fabric of suspicion. He laid before the head of the department what pretended to be a full exhibit of his business affairs, and which showed that after all his debts were paid he would still have a surplus of 3,000,000 francs. "One does not steal under such circumstances," said Surian. The delinquent agents were reprimanded and Surian went home apparently well contented.

It is probable, however, that he suspected what was actually the case; that he was being carefully and assidiously watched. He contracted his speculative operations very materially, and a million in gold which he had on deposit in the Bank of France was drawn out and shipped to America, to parties unknown to the authorities. The outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, however, took Surian to the Bourse again, and he was long of "Rentes" when the calamity of Weissenburg overtook France. Surian went down with the funds, and compromised with his creditors with a deficit of a million and a half. Two weeks later he was again arrested for passing some 20,000,000 francs of fraudulent quartermasters' drafts. This time the police felt sure they had Surian, but the baffling matter of identity again sprang up. The actual criminal had a general resemblance to Surian, except that his hair and mustache were dark, and his eyes as black as jet. The authorities were dumbfounded. The testimony, however, was direct and uncontrovertible, and, after a searching raid upon Surian's house, where, however, nothing was discovered which tended to criminate him, the ex-convict was again released.

The Germans rapidly threw their tremendous cordons around Paris, and the memorable seige of the great city began. Surian joined a regiment of volunteers and went on duty. The position assigned his company was the charge of a picket post outside the fort of Vanvres, where the Prussian breaching batteries were finally established. One day he and four of his companions were surprised by some Uhlans riding in the gray of the morning. The other men were speared, and Surian was reported missing, "killed or captured." Twenty-four hours later Surian appeared at his post again and reported for duty. He had fled, he said, under the cellar of a house, and could not get away any sooner. Three days later he was arrested with a show of great solemnity, and carried before General Villot, commander of the division to which he was attached. The Colonel of the regiment and many other officers were present. "Is this the man?" asked General Villot, pointing to Surain, and accosting a person in Prussian uniform.

"That is the man I saw at Versailles four days ago," said the spy; "I am willing to swear to him. He came up the street escorted by Uhlans, and went directly into M. de Bismarck's headquarters. I saw him myself."

"You are charged with an offense the penalty of which is death, Surian," said General Villot. "What have you to say for yourself? Did you give information to the enemy?"

"You say you saw me!" cried Surian, turning his full face upon the spy; "are you very sure you saw me?"

The spy staggered back, aghast. "Mon Dieu! no! no! I will not swear! The man I saw going into Count Bismarck's quarters had certainly brown eyes; and yours are blue."

Surian thus escaped again. He went into Paris for the first time since the seige began. Apparently the state of his domestic menage did not suit him. At any rate his coming created a great disturbance in the neighborhood; the fair Cytheria left the house in tears and vowing vengeance, and the impassive Jules Gochen was arrested as a Prussian spy, upon specific charges laid by Raoul Surian, convicted, and shot.

Soon after this came the surrender and the Commune. During the ephemeral reign of M. Eusebe Birambrot at police headquarters, a dark-browed beauty came and laid charges of treason and incivism against M. Raoul Surian. She gave her name as Mdlle. Cytheree, and said that Surian, one of the adroitest robbers of the age, who continually escaped conviction through his subtle disguises, had been in constant communication with the Germans during the siege. Her charges were supported by one Galland, formerly of the police. On the other hand, Surian, who was present, and was a Communard Colonel of Artillery, and high in favor with the sections of Belleville, proved that M. Galland was an ex-mouchard and a Napoleonist, and that Mdlle. Cytheree had compromised herself with Jules Gochen, Prussian spy, lately executed. Birambrot dismissed the charges and the witnesses, and Surian returned to his cannon.

On the night after the Versaillists broke into Paris, Surian disappeared. He left the battery at Belleville, proposing to return in five minutes with some percussion fuses, which were needed. He did not come back at all. He was dressed in a very conspicuous uniform, and was grimy with dust and smoke. The next morning a company of Versailles soldiers, belonging to the One Hundred and Fifty-second Battallion of the line, was hurrying along the Rue Nueve des Petits Champs, under the guidance of Police Agent Galland, in search of Communists and Petroleurs, a pleasant-looking gentleman, in the garb of a cure, with shovel hat, well-defined tonsure, brown hair, and bright black eyes, stepped out of a cellar-way, over the door of which was the sign, "Collaert, marchand des habits." The cure touched his hat, smiled on the troops, and walked on, gently trimming his nails with a small pen-knife. Galland started; he spoke a word to the Captain commanding the troops, they called a halt, and Galland sprang across the pavement, and laid his hand on the cure's shoulder.

"Raoul Surian, I arrest you!"

"My son, are you not hasty?" said the cure gently, "I am Father Thomas, one of the cures of St. Sulpice," and he bent his black eyes upon Galland with a look of mild reproach.

"He lies!" shrieked a woman from across the street. "I watched him! I saw him go in there! I have never lost sight of him!" And the prisoner was confronted by the infuriated Mdlle. Cytheree.

"Daughter," said the cure, "this is some unfortunate mistake. Who is it that you take me for?"

"It makes no difference!" screamed the woman, "blue eyes, black eyes, gray eyes, it makes no difference! I know you for Raoul Surian, convict, robber, murderer and Communard!"

"I will settle this," said the infantry Captain. He took a file of men and ran into Collaert's dingy shop. Presently he returned. One of his men bore a bloody and smoke-stained uniform, and two more had the trembling Collaert, an old, dirty, snuffy Hollander, by the throat. "Attention!" said the Captain to Collaert. "If you do not answer truly and promptly you shall be shot right here. Who did this uniform belong to—who left it with you?"

"That man—there!"

"Who is that man?"

"Raoul Surian!"

"How came he to go to you?"

"He has been in the habit. I have kept his clothes and his—disguises—for five years! Oh, pray, do not shoot me!"

"Enough! Surian, step out! Lieutenant, detail ten men! Corporal, bind his hands!"

Surian thrust his foot behind Galland's heels, knocked the Captain down with a blow of his fist, thrust his elbow into the Corporal's ribs, and darted off, escaping into Collaert's cellar with surprising agility and amid a volley of musketry. He was instantly pursued by half the company, who rushed into the cellar and presently were heard bounding up stairs. The house was a tall one, but soon shouts came from the roof, and those on the street had hardly time to look up, when there came two shots in quick succession, and a dark body, rolled up like a ball, rushed down through the air and crashed upon the pavement with a dull, sickening sound. Mdlle. Cytheree fainted.

Galland stepped quickly to the still quivering mass and turned it over. It was the body of Raoul Surian, crushed almost into a jelly.

"My God!" cried Galland, "one eye is black still, but the other is blue!"

"It must have broke in the fall!" cried the shivering Collaert. "I will show you where he kept them, M. Galland, if you will go with me."

The troops marched on. A neighbor kindly took Mdlle. Cytheree into her house. The remains of Surian were carried away, and Galland accompanied Collaert. Only the blood still remained upon the sidewalk.

After all, Surian's secret was very simple, like most of the inventions of genius. He had an assortment of very thin glass eyes, with perfectly transparent pupils, and these he wore and changed as occasion seemed to demand. A little practice enabled him to do this without any inconvenience, the more so that the workmanship of the eyes was exceedingly perfect.

The police have orders now, in case a similar cheat is suspected, to touch the white of the eye with a little vinegar or a camel's hair brush, to see if it produces suffusion.

Grain Sampler.

A Maryland inventor has patented a grain-sampler, which is described as follows: It consists of a metal cylinder, provided on the sides with wings or flanges, closed and pointed at the end, and containing three openings; within it is a hollow spindle or shaft which has a circumferential movement in it, and is furnished with openings of a corresponding size, which, when brought into the same relative positions, afford means of communication with the interior of the spindle or shaft. There is also a handle, by means of which the spindle can be turned and the openings easily opened and closed. The condition of grain at various depths and positions in the holds of vessels, elevators and other places where grain is stored in bulk, can be positively determined, and the apparatus produces at each withdrawal a sample which cannot possibly become mixed with other matter through which it is moved as it is brought to the surface.

An inventor claims to have found how glass can be used as a building material for house fronts, floors or pavements, superior to marble in durability and economy. It can be made plain or variegated, and its colors are indestructible.

A Ghastly Phenomenon.

The Nashville (Tenn.) Union and American says a strange phenomenon is exhibited in the office of the Courier-Herald, in the town of Jackson. It is thus described as to history and appearance: A man named William Herron was out walking with his wife one Sunday evening not long since, and in passing an old neglected graveyard near the public road, she saw a gum bush with a bunch of mistletoe on its top, and requested her husband to get it for her. He went and cut the top off the bush, and commenced breaking off the mistletoe, when to his surprise and terror he discovered that the wood underneath presented the perfect form of a human hand. Captain Andrews, hearing of the wonderful discovery, went to the house of Mr. Herron, who, feeling rather uncomfortable over the thought that he cut it from a grave, and perhaps having some theory as to its supernatural significance, very willingly let Captain Andrews have it. There are citizens of this city to whom both Captain Andrews and Mr. Herron are known, and they are vouched for as truthful men, but the hand itself is proof enough of the truth of their statement concerning its growth on a bush. The bush from which it was cut was six feet high, and the hand was on the top, pointing upward, presenting the position of the minister's hand when pronouncing a benediction. It is about the size of a six-year-old child's hand, with long slender fingers like those of a person very much emaciated by sickness. The wood has enlarged formations on each finger and thumb, representing and corresponding with the joints of the human hand. The most remarkable feature about it is the natural appearance of the nails. They have a kind of flesh color, and the balance of the hand, where the bark has been entirely removed, looks ghastly white. The first impression it makes upon you is the same experienced in handling a skeleton, and a large majority of those who see it regard it with the same subdued, half superstitious awe inspired by the presence of a corpse. Mr. Andrews says the grave from which it was cut is supposed to be the grave of a very devout Methodist minister by the name of Butcher, who was buried there many years ago.

Paul Boyton.

The attempt made by Captain Boyton to cross the English Channel, although attended by failure, is yet regarded as a signal triumph of the excellence of his apparatus. The distance between Dover and Boulogne is twenty-five nautical miles; and, with the strong tides and currents which make the channel passage the most disagreeable for its length in the world, it is almost surprising that the gallant American went as far as he did. Three o'clock in the morning was the hour fixed for the start, and for the first two hours everything went well. At 9 the Captain stopped to rest and refresh himself. This delay was fatal, because he shortly after fell in with a current which seriously retarded his progress. The tide opposed him, and the force of the wind had increased. At 6 o'clock it was becoming dark, with a heavy sea on, and the French pilot declined to take any further responsibility. When Captain Boyton left the water, after fifteen hours' physical exertion and exposure, his pulse was calm and the temperature of his body good. Had the weather been more favorable the intrepid mariner would doubtless have accomplished the feat. The English press are unanimous in admitting the value of Captain Boyton's invention. That it will eventually come into general use in ships, at watering places, life-saving stations, and other points, seems to be an assured certainty.

Its Final Use.

What becomes of all the broken food left on plates in great hotels? It is frequently sold in a lot to some contractor who pays so much a year for it, and makes money by the transaction. From him, the soap-fat makers buy every scrap of meat and fat. The bread picked out is fed to horses and cattle in city stables, and the green stuff and refuse to hogs. The bone-boilers take the bones and prepare them for the manufacture of knife and tooth-brush handles, buttons, etc., while small bones, useless for these purposes, are ground up into yeast powders, bone-dust and fertilizers. In Paris, bread-crumbs are made from the scraps of bread found in hotels swill tubs, and sold to the city world. Making these crumbs originated with an old garbage-man, Pere Chapellier, who raked bread from the gutters, dried it, made crumbs, and sold them for bird-feed. Finding that cooks used them for soups, frying and other ways, he secured the broken pieces from hotels, convents, etc., and prepared them for use, increasing his business till dozens of men and wagons took the place of his old basket and hooked stick. The trade continues, and prepared bread-crumbs are now used in many Paris hotels and restaurants.

Origin of the Word "Protestant."

With the month of April is associated the derivation and dissemination in a formal and official manner of the designation of Protestant. The Emperor Charles the Fifth called a diet at Spires in 1529 to request aid from the German Princes against the Turks, and to devise means for allaying the disputes growing out of Luther's rebellion against Catholocism. The Diet condemned the Reformers and issued a decree in support of the doctrines of the ancient Church. Against this decree six Lutheran Princes and the Deputies of thirteen towns of the Empire formally protested on April 17, 1530. From this act the designation of Protestant, which then was given to the followers of Luther, is derived. The Calvinists were subsequently included, and the title became general for all the sects outside the original Christian Church. The six Protestant Princes were John and George the Electors of Saxony and Brandenburg; Ernest and and Francis, the two Dukes of Lunenburg; the Landgrave of Hesse, and the Prince of Anhalt.

Cockroach Remedy.

A simple and effectual remedy for the pest of cockroaches is given in the Revue Horticole, communicated by M. Loury, chief propagator at the Jardin Fleuriste, Paris. It is as follows: "Dissolve the heads of a box of phosphor matches in a pint and a half of water; then mix with it about one pound of flour and about one-half pound of sugar, of which these insects are very fond. The mixture may then be distributed in various parts of the house over night, on pieces of board, slates, etc., and when examined in the morning numbers of dead cockroaches will be found close to where the poison has been laid."

Two Little Boys.

The man lives in Philadelphia, who, when young and poor, entered a bank and says he, "Please sir, don't you want a little boy?" And the stately personage said, "No, little boy; I don't want a little boy." The little boy, whose heart was too full for utterance, chewing a piece of liquorice stick he had bought with a cent he had stolen from his good and pious aunt, with sobs plainly audible, and with great globules of water running down his cheeks, glided silently down the marble steps of the bank. Bending his noble form, the bank man dodged behind the door, for he thought the little boy was going to shy a stone at him. But the boy picked up something and stuck it into his poor but ragged jacket. "Come here, little boy," and the little boy did come here; and the bank man said, "Lo! what pickest thou up?" And he answered and said, "A pin." And the bank man said, "Little boy, are you good?" and he said he was. And the bank man said, "How do you vote—excuse me, do you go to Sunday-school?" And he said he did.

Then the bank man took down a pen, made of pure gold, and flowing with pure ink, and wrote on a piece of paper, "St. Peter," and asked the little boy what it stood for, and he said, "Salt Peter." Then the bank man said it meant "St. Peter." The little boy said, "Oh!" The bank man took the little boy into partnership, and gave him half the profits and all the capital, and he married the bank man's daughter, and all he has is all his, and all his own too.

My uncle told me this story, and I spent six weeks picking up pins in front of a bank. I expected the bank man would call me in and say, "Little boy, are you good?" and I was going to say "Yes;" and if he asked me what "St. John" stood for, I was going to say "Salt John."

But I guess the bank man wasn't anxious to have a partner, and guess the daughter was a son, for one day he says to me, "Little boy, what are you picking up?" Says I, awfully meekly, "Pins." Says he, "Let's see 'em." And he took 'em and I took off my hat, already to go in the bank, and become a partner and marry his daughter. But I didn't get an invitation. He said, "Those pins belong to the bank, and if I catch you hanging round here any more I'll set the dogs on you!" Then I left, and the mean old cuss kept the pins. Such is life as I find it.—Max Adeler.

An Apt Pupil.

I laughed once, surely, when humanity should, perhaps, have kept me quiet; but then there were a score of others laughed with me, so the burden of the fault was divided.

On our way from Conway to Center Harbor, N. H., by stage, we stopped before a small cottage on the outskirts of Tamworth, from which our driver took two trunks and two blooming damsels. Or, one of them, the younger, bloomed, while, in truth, the other seemed prematurely maturing. From their conversation, after we had started on our way again, we discovered that the elder girl's name was Eliza, and the other's, Susan. Eliza had traveled before. She knew the world. She had worked in the mills at Great Falls, and had cut her eye-teeth. Susan had never traveled until now, and was as unsophiticated as an infant. She was leaving home for the first time to try her fortune in the great mills, and Eliza was her guide and protector.

As the stage approached Center Harbor, where we were to take dinner before crossing the lake, Eliza became very earnest in instructing her companion as to how she should behave, especially at the table; and as we pulled up before the broad piazza of the Senter House, she concluded her injunctions with:

"Now mind, Susan, and watch me. Do just as I do, and all will be right."

Seated at the hotel table the polite waiter came first to Eliza.

"Roast beef and roast turkey," said he.

"Turkey, if you please," said Eliza.

"What part of the fowl would you like?"

"It is perfectly immaterial."

Next he came to Susan.

"Roast beef and roast turkey."

"Turkey, if you please."

"What part do you prefer?"

"I think," answered Susan, with a confident smile, "that I will take a piece of the immaterial, too."

Perhaps you can see where the laugh came in.—New York Ledger.

A Feather-Bed and a Cow.

Justice Jossey, of Griffin, Ga., is soon to try a case, in which the Widow Mulligan is defendant, where the scales of justice will "teeter" to a hair before the exact merits of the contest will be fully determined. The Widow Mulligan, who lives in East Griffin, noting the advent of tardy spring, recently took her feather-bed and hung it on the fence to ventilate, as well, doubtless, as to secure the hatching beneath the warm rays of the sun of all eggs of vermin, that the vermin becoming visible might be slain. There hung the feather-bed, peaceful evidence of a luxurious civilization, harming nobody, when a hungry town cow came along and ate the bed up, tick and all, at least so says the plaintiff. The cow enjoyed the meal no doubt but it didn't seem to digest well and the cow lay down and died. The man that owned the cow has now sued the Widow Mulligan for damages, and the widow pleads an offset for her feathers!

The Houston, Texas, Real Estate Builder says: "Buffalo are plenty on our Western plains. Sportsmen from the East should try a dash through the hunting regions of Texas. One zest we can offer, and that is their hair might be lifted and they might be left afoot. But no true sportsman minds those little difficulties."

The only original likeness now in existence of Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star Spangled Banner," is said to be in the possession of his sister, now a resident of San Francisco. A life-sized bust in plaster has been made from it, which is said to be a very successful piece of work.

MRS. ROGERS.

Mrs. Rogers lay in her bed,
Bandaged and blistered from foot to head,
Bandaged and blistered from head to toe,
Mrs. Rogers was very low.
Bottle and saucer, spoon and cup,
On the table stood bravely up;
Physic of high and low degree—
Calomel, catnip, boneset tea—
Everything a body could bear;
Excepting light, and water and air.

I opened the blinds; the day was bright;
And God gave Mrs. Rogers some light.
I opened the window; the day was fair,
And God gave Mrs. Rogers some air.
Bottles and blisters, powders and pills,
Catnip, boneset, sirup and squills,
Drugs and medicines, high and low,
I threw them as far as I could throw.

"What are you doing?" my patient cried.
"Frightening death," I coolly replied;
"You are crazy!" a visitor said;
I flung a bottle at her head.

Deacon Rogers he came to me,
"Wife is a-comin' around," says he,
"I really think she'll worry through;
She scolds me just as she used to do.
All the people have poohed and slurred—
All the neighbors have had their word;
'Twas better to perish, some of 'em say,
Than be cured in such an irregular way."

"Your wife," said I, "had God's care,
And his remedies—light, water and air;
All the doctors, beyond a doubt,
Couldn't have cured her without."

The deacon smiled and bowed his head;
"Then your bill is nothing," he said,
"God's be the glory, as you say;
God bless you, doctor, good-day, good-day!"

If I ever doctor that woman again,
I'll give her medicine made by man.

AN INDIAN BATTLE.

Details of the Recent Fight Between United States Soldiers and Cheyennes.

(Fort Wallace (Kas.) Cor. Cincinnati Commercial.)

We have had some excitement down here the last few days. On Friday, the 16th inst., a telegram was received from Grenada, on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad, from Allen Clark, a man who belongs to this post, and who was out hunting up his cattle, announcing that he had been attacked and corraled by Indians, about forty miles south of here, but that he had escaped into Grenada. A detachment of forty cavalry from Fort Lyon was immediately ordered here. They arrived Sunday night, in charge of Second Lieutenant Henley, of the Sixth Cavalry, and Monday morning they started for the trail, taking fifteen days' forage and rations with them. On the morning of the second day out they struck the trail at the Twin Buttes, about forty miles north of here. The trail was leading directly north. Abandoning one wagon, and everything that could be dispensed with, and taking only seven days' forage and rations, they followed the trail in light marching order. They could see by the trail that there were from 300 to 400 ponies, but could not determine the number of Indians. The first night they camped seven miles south of the railroad, on the Smoky Hill river; the second, north of Monument Station, and the third night they traveled until almost midnight. When they went into camp some of the scouts took up the trail and followed it about ten miles, when they discovered the Indians strongly posted in a ravine, and with a regular series of rifle-pits thrown up. Returning to the camp about 2 o'clock in the morning they reported, and immediately the Lieutenant broke camp and started on the trail once more. They arrived on the spot about 4 o'clock a.m. The Indians had discovered them, and were fast making preparations for a warm reception. An old chief came out and wanted to parley. The Lieutenant rode out to meet him, and the old fellow said: "Better you go back, John. Heap Injun. Big shoot. Much ponies."

The Lieutenant told him he had better surrender at once, when the old fellow rode off. As Lieutenant Henley was riding back to his command, several shots were fired at him. The order was given to commence the attack. As yet we could not tell how many reds there were, as they were hidden in their pits. When the order was given to commence action the first movement was to secure what ponies they could. They got 140, and then commenced their attack on the pits. Here they had us at a great disadvantage, for they could fire at us without exposing any part of their persons, but finally our boys got close on the edge of the pits, and would lay flat and load, and ram the muzzles of their guns over the edge and blaze away, and in this way they finally drove them out, but not until two of our boys had gone under. One fellow was shot dead in trying to get to the pits, and the other, the acting First Sergeant of the detachment and Quartermaster Sergeant of the company, after getting up to the pit, got a ball through his left shoulder. It made him so mad that he swore he would have the life of the fellow who did it, if he killed the whole Cheyenne tribe. He immediately raised himself to his knees on the edge of the pit and commenced to fire from that position; he fired from there twice, making both shots count, when a ball from below struck him in the mouth and passed out through the back of his head, killing him instantly. The reds tried hard to get the scalps of the two dead men, but failed. There were about sixty well-armed warriors in the fight, and about thirty of our men; the rest of the boys were guarding the ponies and supply wagon. We killed about thirty Indians; some say they counted thirty-five.

Vice-President Wilson in the South.

Vice-President Wilson arrived at Nashville on the 6th inst., and was met at the depot by Gov. Porter, Secretary of State Gibbs, Acting Mayor Hugh McCrea, and other officials and citizens, and was warmly welcomed. He was subsequently escorted to Gov. Porter's office. The Supreme Court adjourned to do him honor, meeting him cordially in Gov. Porter's apartment, where were gathered all the officials and sixty representative lawyers from various parts of Tennessee. In company with Gov. Porter and ex-Gov. H. S. Foote, he visited the grave of ex-President Polk, Fisk and Vanderbilt Universities, and the grounds of the battle of Nashville. He was serenaded in the evening, and introduced by Gov. Porter to a large assemblage of people, and made the following speech:

"I am grateful for the many kindnesses shown me by the officials and people of Tennessee. We have all passed through trying scenes, and I do not believe the late struggle could have been prevented. All compromises only delayed what was inevitable. Being in the struggle, I was compelled to take sides, and sided according to my best judgment. I have never entertained a feeling of hatred toward the people of any section of the country. While the war was in progress I was for an active prosecution of the war; but now that peace has come upon us, I am for an active prosecution of peace. [Loud and prolonged applause.] All of us should do by word and deed all that we can to more firmly bind together the people of the nation. [Immense applause.] I am gratified at the many expressions of kindness I have met with in Kentucky and Tennessee since I crossed the Ohio river. I have come on no political mission, but to see a portion of my country I have never before beheld, and will leave with my heart throbbing with gratitude. I will pray God for the prosperity of this city and State. All her sufferings will soon pass away, and the whole nation will be bound together by a spirit of patriotism, humanity, liberty, and love for our country. We should strive to elevate our country and add to its glory. I believe our republic will never be separated, but will become one of the leading, if not the leading, nations of the world. [Loud applause.] Both races are here, and here they will both remain. We should do away with all prejudice, and strive henceforth only for the advancement of our country. I again return to you my heartfelt thanks for your courtesy."

Abolition of Coffins.

A late number of the London Times contained a strong letter, agitating afresh the subject of burial. The argument of the writer was opposed to the practice of enclosing the bodies of the dead in coffins. The earth is a powerful antiseptic, and, by intering the dead wrapped in a winding-sheet instead of a coffin, the generation of poisonous gases and decomposing fluids, would be entirely avoided.

The earth will assimilate a body in the course of four or five years, leaving but few fragments of scentless bones. It is interposition of the coffin which prevents the earth combining with the decomposing elements of the body, and allows noxious vapors to rise from the grave and poison the living.

All the advantages arising from cremation would, in the opinion of the writer, be obtained by this method of sepulture, while the feelings of the community would suffer a much less shock from this slight change in the custom of burial.

DESTRUCTIVE TORNADO.

Georgia Visited by Another Hurricane—Great Destruction of Life and Property.

[Columbus (Ga.) Cor. Atlanta Herald.]

Harris county was visited with the fifth tornado since the 20th of March on last Saturday. The cyclone was terrible. It swept everything before it, doing an immense deal of damage, tearing down houses, uprooting trees, scattering fences, and killing people.

Upon entering the county it scattered the dwellings, out-houses, fences, and everything else on Henry Williams' place, wounding several of his people. Going directly east it played havoc with the farm of Henry E. Morse, two miles south of Whitesville. There is not a house of any kind left on his place. Six negroes were killed by the falling timbers. Mrs. Morse is wounded, it is feared fatally. After going about 1½ miles farther east, John Booker's place was crossed, and all his tenants were scattered to the winds. The report of the number of killed and wounded there is conflicting.

The widow Smith's, about one mile farther east, was the next place in the path of the tornado. There was no one killed there, but the list of wounded is large, and the amount of damage is considerable.

W. C. Davis' house, about three-quarters of a mile further, was the next house that chanced to be in the track of the wind storm. His house was broken down, his leg broken, his wife's leg broken, and three or four children injured.

Two miles further, and Judge Spence's place blocked its passage. After beating against the house for a while, it gathered unusual strength, and, hurling a tenement house from its path, attacked the Baptist Church, which is on his place; in fact, "one stone was not left on another." It then tackled his dwelling-house and blew one-half of it away. Four negroes were killed and six or seven wounded by the falling of the building. Scattering fences and ruining crops for about three miles, it struck Murray & Spence's mill, and did not leave a timber standing. Jourdan Reiley, the negro miller, was killed, and three white men were wounded.

Going up the creek about one mile, it laid low the House of Pickens Murray. He and his family were only saved by leaving the house and taking refuge in the peach orchard. Still rushing eastward, it, after skipping over two miles, struck Calvin Teel's place, leaving not a building standing. Then, crossing Pine Mountain, it changed its course by turning a little to the south, and commenced its ravages on Col. James R. Mobley's place. His gin-house and all his out-houses were blown down, and six negroes wounded.

Millions of Pigeons in the Woods of Western New York.

Sportsmen will doubtless be interested in the fact that there are countless millions of pigeons to be found within one hundred miles of this city. The country lying between the main line of the Erie railway from Corning to Buffalo, and the Rochester branch from Corning to Avon, is literally alive with the birds. Their roosting place is situated in a wild, mountainous region west of Coopers, N. Y., a few miles this side of Corning, and embraces a tract of land from seven to ten miles square, heavily timbered, and unbroken by clearings or highways, from which they issue at daylight and scatter over the country for many miles in search of food, which consists principally of acorns. The birds made their appearance near Coopers about three weeks ago and have advanced further west daily, until they now fly as far west as Springwater. During the present week they will in all probability be found at all points along the Genessee valley and scattered over the surrounding country, and there is a prospect that a considerable number of the birds will build their nests and breed in this county and those adjoining. The writer took a trip to Campbells last week, with excellent success. Opposite the village of Campbells are three high hills; on the top of the center one our party took up a position, and when the fight commenced, about 5:30 p. m., we could not load and fire fast enough to take the flocks as they charged upon us like the waves of the ocean. The fight lasted an hour, the roaring of our guns, the exhilarating excitement, and the lively running to and fro of a small army of boys picking up the dead birds, made the scene a most animating one. From our elevated position we commanded a view of the country for ten or twelve miles in length and five or six in width, and for the entire distance immense flocks could be seen stretching out in long lines until lost in the distance. When nearing the "roost," several flocks arriving simultaneously would sweep together into one immense flock and alight in the trees in a thick mass, seemingly covering an acre or more.—Rochester Democrat.

TROJAN ADDERS.—In his history of the excavations at Hissarlik, Dr. Schliemann speaks of unearthing vast numbers of adders that were extremely poisonous. Had they no enemies to contend against—in other words, did not myriads of them succumb in the struggle for existance?—Dr. Schliemann thinks they must in the warm season have swarmed in the plains of Troy as to render it uninhabitable. They were diminutive in size, scarcely exceeding in circumference the common earth-worm. Notwithstanding their venom, the workmen engaged in the excavations handled the snakes with impunity. On being asked the reason for such foolhardiness, the men declared they had taken the precaution of drinking a decoction of snake-root, which rendered the poison innocuous.

As she nimbly plied her needle around the ragged edges of a coat that had been ripped down the back, she remarked, in a vein of philosophical expostulation which prudent wives always employ: "John, if you can't perform at prayer meetin' without throwin' yourself round so, bustin' off buttons and tearin' your clothes, you'd better get religion to home."

The First Use of Gas.

Professor Silliman has discovered, in a "Journal of Travels in England, Holland and Scotland," in 1805, published by his distinguished father, a memorandum of what is probably the first public use of street-gas in London. Hitherto the date of the first public exhibition in that city has been put in 1807, when Mr. Winsor lighted Pall Mall. But on the 4th of July, 1805, the elder Silliman stopped in Piccadilly to see "an object of some curiosity," which he describes as follows: An ingenious apothecary and chemist has contrived to light his shop in a very beautiful manner, by means of the inflammable gas obtained from fossil coal. It is the same thing with the thermo-lamp, of which you have heard much in America. Every new thing by which money can be made is of course kept secret in London, as well as everywhere else. I took the liberty, however, of asking the owner of the shop to permit me to see his apparatus. He refused at first but on my assuring him I was not a commercial or trading man, and was actuated solely by curiosity, he consented, and took me down cellar.—Galaxy.

RAVENSWOOD, W. Va.

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Sir—For the last year I have been using your Golden Medical Discovery. I owe my life to it, having been afflicted for years. Did not use it but a short time before I was benefited; at that time I was very bad, not able to sit up much, was suffering greatly with my throat, was getting blind, had a dry cough, and much pain in my lungs. I have used twelve bottles of the Discovery and am almost well.

KATE T. WARDNER.

A son of Mr. J. H. MESECK, of Chatham Four Corners, N. Y., has been cured of Consumption by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery—so says Mr. C. B. Canfield, editor of the Chatham Courier.

S. R. EOLES, druggist, of West Union, O., writes to state that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has effected a wonderful cure of Consumption in his neighborhood.

THE PEOPLE'S FRIEND.—It is susceptible of easy proof that the sewing machine has been a greater blessing to the masses of American people than any invention of the present century. Nothing else has done so much to save the lives and health of the wives and mothers, the patient, overworked women of the land, who, as a class, most needed relief from the burdens of every day life. Every father and husband fails in his duty if he neglects to endow his home with such a triumph of science as the Wilson shuttle sewing machine. Machines will be delivered at any railroad station in this county, free of transportation charges, if ordered through the company's branch house at 197 State street, Chicago. They send an elegant catalogue and chromo circular free on application. This company want a few more good agents.

THE Times says Dr. Walpole has lost his beautiful chestnut mare. She died suddenly in harness, it is supposed, from bots or pin worms. If the Doctor had used Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders, he would, no doubt, have had his mare to-day—they are death on worms.

VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

AUBURN INDIANA, MAY. 20, 1875

So Senator Spencer urged the passage of the bounty bill. The persecuted patriot will have urgent need of bounty before the legislature of his own state and postmaster Jewell have done with him.

They got an honest man into the administration, and the results are harrowing. Williams, Delano and Douglas have already been exposed, and stealing by the million has been answered.

Among the wonderful reforms now going on within the Republican party we are surprised to find no mention of the improvement made by the president in the civil service. A year or two ago there was a great deal of talk of reforms contemplated in that branch Has it been abandoned, and if so, why.

Carruth the Vineland editor, still goes around with a bullet in his brain. Physiologically, Caruth is in the nature of a phenomenon, but news paper men will recognise in his idiosyncrasy a design to forestall the constant demand for leaded matter made upon him by the young inkbesmeared Mephistopheles of the news room.

Gen. Beauregard has written a letter in which he admits that he favored raising the black flag during the rebellion and what is worse he still defends his views. Gen. Beuregard, it will be remembered, was lately an office holder under Grant, and he is a Repuplican in good standing in the party

If this process of reform in the Replican part continues the country will b stolen as bare as an egg shell. A fraud isn't discoverd until it is practiced four or five years; and for every one opressed half a dozen new ones are put in operation. The experiment of allowing thieves to manage vast revenue is not by any means sucessful.

Ex-Senater Chandler, of Michigan has procured another indictment against the correspondent who charged him with drunkeness. He swears this one will stick. Having spent about ten thousand dollars in an ineffectual effort to bring this correspondent up to his standard of justice; it would seem that he had better let the job out to the lowest and best bidder.

What were formerly the St. Louis Globe, and the St Louis Democrat, have latley been uerged into a double headed monstrosity with the fearfully and wonderfully constructed name of "Globe Democrat." If the Simese Journalistic twins can live under such a heavy and depressing weight, it is more than now seems possible. Think of contracting the monstrosity's name to GlbDm cr't! But it must be done life is to short to attempt a daily wrestling with such a name.

Robison and Belknap are just now anxious seats. In spite of four attempts to fire the french Navy Department in a short space of time, and in different places, and the destructian of valuable records by water and a confusion not accidental, there are still proofs on file which must be produced before investigating committees. And the war Department will be required to show what became of a million and a half of dollars from the sale of arms to France, that never found their way into the Treasury.

When corruption becomes so deep seated as to render such caution necessary we may well ask if it is not time to make an entire change in our public service and commit the Goverment to other hands. The disclosures may well prepare us for more astounding ones when the cumming congress shall undertake the work of a searching investigation into all the departments of a Goverment that has been run in the interest of rings and cliques for more than ten years.

Geo. H. Pendleton writing a letter to the Ohio Democracy says:

"The financial trouble, the stagnation of business, the depression of all industries, the extravagance, and corruption of the public service, the demoralization of the administration, the personal government of President Grant the third term project, the violation of all law in the policy adopted toward the southern states as [illegible] all these have filled the people uneasiness; and they are anxiously seeking a better state of things.

"If we shall give the assurance by our words and by our acts that our success will [illegible] that improvement they will certainly give us that success,

The Chicago Tribune says this histiory reveals a striking state of affairs It discloses a condition of dishonesty and official corruption which will startle the country. It far excedes in enormity the Tweed frauds, and the New York canal robbers recently exposed. It shows that since 1871 to the present time this robery of revenue has been going on. That the officers of the revenue have been not only aware of the frauds, but have been participants in the profits; and that the operators in this wholesale business have their agents in all the revenue offices at Washington. One hundred and twenty million dollars a year stolen by the Radical party. And yet they ask the people, the tax-payers to still retain them in favor.

The rats are running from the sinking ship. At last the Washington organs of the White House are forced to admit the intended resignation of Mr. Fish from the Cabinet, which was long ago announced in the Sun, and denied by these same papers.

When Belknap unqualifiedly approved the brutal bulletins of Sheridan and officially assured him of the support of the President "and all of us" in treating the people of Louisiana as banditti' Mr. Fish was never consulted but considered as head clerk, who would not dare dispute the orders of his employer. He submitted this indignity in silence as he had before tacitly consented to the outrages in President's ambition and of the thieving carpet paggers.

After condoning these crimes passively yeiding to to offencive dictation and surrendering the patron of his department to the president's orders, he now steps out by the back door, and hopes by this expediant to escape his share of the responsibility. It will not succeed. The best that can be said for tue departing Secretary is that the Administration will soon lose its man of deportment. Mr. Turveydrop retires.

The Whiskey Frauds

The developments which have recently transpired in the investigation of the whiskey frauds, by tne internal revenue department give some idea of the rottenness and corruption of the Radical party. The Chicago Tribune says

"The best civil system in the world is what Mr. O. P. Morton declared the monstrously corrupt civil service of this country to be. Perhaps Mr. Morton considers the gigantic whisky-ring fraud which have just culminated in the seizure of half the whisky distilleries in the United States under the noses of the unsuspecting revenue officers, who "had no idea that there were any frauds" as the latest proof of the transcendant excelence of our civil service system. What superlatively excelent civil service officials are Messers. D. W. Munn and John McDonald for instance shown to be by this great whisky ring explosion. Do not Messrs Morton and Logan find even in the performance of those officials new cause to admire the beauties of a system, in which not one of ten thousand civil service officers are found trustworthy? never more forcibly exemplified than by means of these raids. scarsly a federal officer in any of the three cities of Chicago Milwaukee, or St. Louis, knew of the intentions of the Officers of the secret service in the matter, and they were as much surprised at the seizures as were the distillers. the fact that they had permitted these irregularities to exist under their very noses destroyed what ever confidence had previously been reposed in their integrity, and as a consequence they were ignored entierly.

NEXT Sabbath Rev. Mr. Welsh, the Methodist minister, will deliver a discourse to the people, "Conscious a guide for human conduct," at the M. E. church. We hope a large audience will be in attendance, as the subject will prove very interesting and instructive.

THE Dekalb county Sunday School Association, will hold its 10th annual convention in the christian church, Newville, Ind., Tuesday and Wendesday June 8th and 9th, 1875. A large attendance is expected to be present, and we hope many of our Sunday school children and parents will be in attendance.

"Shall I Seek for her in the Meadow? is the planative title of a new song. To which we are moved to say, not unless you are an infernal fool. At this season of the year she will be more apt to be found in the back yard with a soiled towel around hea head, under a breadth of carpet raising the d— with the atmosphere.

THE boys are laughing about a well known sport who had a misunderstanding with his better half the other night, and shows in consequence a black eye and a countenance which looks as though several brick buildings had fallen upon it. The sport says he got his ornaments on Eight street, which is olny about three blocks from the truth.

ANOTHER bright star has vanished from the shores of time. John C. Brackenridge, the favorite son of Kentucky has gone to that bourne from whence no traveler returns. If the close of his life failed to realize the bright anticipations of his youth, and his sun set under clouds of disappointments, it was owing to the fault of being true to his honest convictions. Peace to his ashes.

Our patrons will please excuse mistakes in this number as the editor in chief is absent and we have been disturbed in our nocturnal repose with the repeated cry of "Pa,—hellow pa. wal, its a boy and weighs in the neighborhood of ten pounds. Who could write locals with such a responsibility on their shoulders.

Corn planting in some parts of the County, we learn, is well under way. The backwarness of the spring has been a sad draw back on some of our enterprising farmers who are always found before hand with their spring work. Some of the old, experianced farmers in the vicinity think them selves greatly out of time in planting corn after the first week in May.

OUR enterprising young friend J. E. Bodine, Esq., connected with Mr. Elson in the dental line, left last Monday for Cincinnati to attend the spring term of the Ohio Dental College in that city. Mr. B. is determined to be thorough in practical and theory, the only true basis upon which to acquire eminence in any profession.

THE Hamilton Show, put in an advertisement in our last, somewhat reflicting on the character of Mr. Swineford of the hotel. It seems the show folks had posted up bills on his building against his orders, and he tore them down as he had a right to do. The advertisement was handed in and paid for by Hamilton, and there was no intention on our part to injure Mr. S.

WE are requested to call the attention of the public generally to our Independent Telegraph and Rail Road Institute located in Easley brick block, second floor. The gentlemen connected with this institution are using every effort to make it one of the best in Northern Indiana. The room is handsomely arranged for this branch of business, and every one having a desire for learning the above trades would do well to send for a circular, and learn their terms and advantages that are offering to pupils.

SOME of our merchants have gotten the idea in their hands that all the advertising that is necessary for them is to roll out their dry goods boxes—the same ones being made to do service each year —in front of their stores, and that the people will then think they have new goods. The dodge is "too thin." The wise public examine the newspapers and patronize those who are not loth to tell them that they are having new goods.

"HAIR gettin a little thin, sir," said the barber. "Young man," said John Henry looking down upon him from the height of a solemn experience; "Young man, when you are married, you will never allude in that thoughtless manner to domestic afflictions. No; don't apologize My feelings are blunted. But is there not some mysterious unguent—some soft seductive compound—that makes the hair slippery to the grasp."

COURT ITEMS.—Court has begun—Two hundred and nineteen cases are on the docket, of these there are about two hundred civil, and nineteen crimnail.

ONLY one heavy case on the docket.—State of Indiana, on the relation of C. A O. McClellen, against Dan'l Culver, for an aggravating case of assault and battery. At least it is said to aggravate Mac—to hear the guffaws of the crowd over it.

Two cases on the docket against Butler doctors for malpractice.

Walter Olds, an attorney of Columbia City, was at court Monday.

Considerale improvements have been made in the court room lately. A partition has been placed in the farther part of it, cutting off about twelve feet The part cut off will be used for jury room. The court room is considerably diminised in size. The object of the change was to obviat the difficulty of speaking and being heard in the room owing to the echo. It is not better much in that respect—a gallery is needed.

On Tuesday there were twenty-three attorneys in court.

The docket is lighter this term than for a long while.

The Grand Jury will not meet this term. It will meet in September.

Mass State Temperance Convention

The second Mass Tempeance Convention of the State of Indiana, under the auspices of the woman's Christian Temperance Union of the state, is hereby called to assemble in the First Baptist church, in the city of Indianapolis, at 2 o'clock P. M., on Wednesday, June 9th, 1875, to continue throughout Thursday and one-half of Friday, June 10th, and 11th.

Beleiving that the temperance question has become of paramount importance in the church, Sabbath-school, in legislation, and in society, and that the evils of intemperance can only be suppressed by the combined moral forces and powers by the law in the state, it has been determined by the executive committee to invite all churches, Sabbath-schools, and temperance organizations to send representatives and to ask members and ex-members of the state Legislature and National Congress, ministers of the Gospel, lawyers, physicians teachers, and all men and women of Indiana, who deplore the evils of intemperance, to come to this convention, and assist in divising measures, which with the pleasing of God, shall ultimately result in its suppression.

The citizens of Indianapolis tender the hospitalities to those who may attend the convention.

Railroad arrangements will be announced in the Indianapolis papers on Monday, May 24.

A committee of arrangements will receive visitors at the Third Presbyterian church on Illonis street, opposit the Academy of music, between the hours of eight 8 A. M. and 1:30 P. M., on Thursday June, 9th, and assign them to their homes.

A committee of gentlemen wearing white badges, will meet them at the depot during the same hours.

The Illinois street cars leave the west end of the depot every few minutes, passing the third church, which is five squares distant.

Persons arriving during the night, or on early trains, can find temporary accommodations, at reduced rates, at the National Hotel or Spencer House, opposit the depot. Those arriving after the opening of the convention will report at the First Baptist church.

IMPROVEMENTS about our city are under satisfactory progress. Notwithstanding the very unfavorable weather for all outdoor work the foundations of several large business houses and many dwellings have been laid, and the superstructures are under head-way. The prospect for improvements in our city in the way of erecting new buildings is that the number will far exceed that of any year during the past six. It really appears that we have reached the bottom of hard times and depression of business. Our local industries are more prosperous and manufacturers are looking forward for a busy season.

AT the trial, Abbott, vs. Shoemaker, quite a laughable note took place between Dan'l Culver, witness, and Charley McClellen, an attorney. Mr. M was asking questions, to find out about how Shoemaker hit Abbott, with a faucet, and not being satisfied with the answer of the witness, he arose, walked up, and told him to show how the act was done.

"Do you want a practical illustration?" said the witness.

"Yes sir, show me exactly how he struck him."

"You want me to hit you, eh?" he asked the second time.

"Yes sir," says Mr. M.

And great cezar, how Mr. Witness did baste him between the shoulders. About two licks of the same kind "your honor," would have had to sent him home on a shutter. For our part we would rather take a full glass of John Hebel's best, than to have our coat dusted with that faucet,—we don't think it would knock a fellow quite so stiff. The laughter was immense, and would have been more so, if Sam Puff had been there. Culver was arrested, and will have to stand a trial.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

In the Tilton-Beecher trial, last week, the court adjourned for three days, in order, it is said, to prevent Mrs. Woodhull giving in her evidence. She had been subpenaed by the prosecution, but both sides feared her, and she was not called. The trial will probably end by the middle of July....Sturtevant, the fiend who some months ago murdered two old men and their female house-keeper, at Plymouth, [illegible] Friday, the [illegible] In the Pennsylvania anthracite country the awful reign of idleness continues, and the news from that region from day to day is freighted with the horrors attendant upon sloth, poverty, and passion. It is stated that the owners of the largest mines in the district have deliberately flooded their property, thus adding months to the period of unproductiveness which the scowling future proclaims.

The centennial celebration of the capture of Fort Ticonderoga by Col. Ethan Allen, was celebrated with spirit by the people of the village and surrounding country.

The Philadelphia Press of the 12th inst. says in its review of the wheat crop reports rom all sections of Pennsylvania: "A careful survey leads to the belief that not over half a crop will be gathered, and even this amount depends upon the continuance of dry weather."

A bill has passed the New York Senate for the reduction of tolls on the Erie canal 33⅓ per cent.

A horrible tragedy occurred at Byfield, Mass., last week. Clinton Russel, aged 19, killed his mother with a shoeknife, nearly severing her head from her body. He then attacked and dangerously wounded his father and three brothers. The young man had shown symptoms of insanity for sometime past, and at the time of the tragedy was suffering from neuralgia.

THE WEST.

An act of heroic bravery was performed by George H. Price, who had charge of the Adams Express car which left Chicago on the night of the 6th inst., by the Pittsburgh and Fort Wayne railroad. Three masked robbers entered the car near Lima, Ohio. The foremost of the ruffians pointed a pistol at Price's head and demanded the keys of the safe. Almost at the same moment he fired a shot at the messenger's head, but the latter had thrown up his left hand while reaching for his pistol with his right, and the bullet struck him in the forearm, inflicting a small wound, and then, glancing, struck him in the chin, also wounding him slightly in that spot. The assailant repeated his demand for the keys, and, not getting them, fired again before Price could get out his weapon. This time the ball went clean through the messenger's right shoulder, and lodged in the side of the car. Before the robber could fire a third shot the wounded messenger had gotten his heavy pistol in hand, and, taking deliberate aim, passed a ball through the brain of his assailant, and the latter fell dead in his tracks, without even a struggle.

A severe thunderstorm passed over sections of Illinois, Indiana and Ohio on Sunday, the lightning striking in many places, doing great damage. Taylor's flouring mill, near Springfield, Ohio, was burned, with a loss of $17,000; insurance, $14,000....The Bender has again escaped, this time in Arizona, and is going for Mexico, it is thought....The new Custom-House and Postoffice building partly erected at Chicago will have to be torn down and rebuilt. A committee of experts appointed to investigate the condition of the structure, find walls very crooked and the foundations insecure.

Government detectives have just made a big raid on the fraudulent whisky ring in St. Louis, Chicago and Milwaukee. Irregularities in the manufacture and sale of spirits in these localities have been suspected for a long time, and Secretary Bristow, after recent investigations, decided to summarily put a stop to them. It appears that the frauds practiced have been of great magnitude, and extending over a long period of time. It is also stated that a large number of revenue officers are implicated, either as accessories to the frauds or as having been unattentive to duty.

During the week ending Saturday, the 10th of May, the condition of the wheat in 330 counties was reported to the Department of Agriculture. About 300 counties of the valleys of the Ohio and Missouri are represented, which last year produced 70,000,000 bushels of winter wheat, or 60 per cent. of the product of seven States from Ohio to Kansas. The average of condition in these States is 63 per cent., indicating only five-eighths of a full crop, if no improvement occurs—in Kentucky, 75 per cent.; Ohio, 57 per cent.; Michigan, 63; Indiana, 66; Illinois, 62; Missouri, 59; Kansas, 87....W. Hatch and Davis, of the United States army, have returned to New Orleans from the Rio Grande. They report that the raids are becoming more bold and frequent. Murders of Americans and friendly Mexicans are constantly occurring. The civil authorities on this side are under the control of the Mexicans, and prevent the United States troops from making arrests. Unless summary measures are taken by the United States troops, they think the counties between the Rio Grande and the Nueces will soon be in the hands of Mexican outlaws.

C. Buell, the newspaper correspondent, has again been indicted by the district grand jury for libeling ex-Senator Chandler.

THE TILTON-BEECHER TRIAL.

Eighty-fourth Day.—The day was principally devoted to disproving the alibi claimed by Mr. Beecher relative to the interview with Mrs. Moulton on the 2d of June, 1873. Lewis J. James, Superintendent of the Health Lift Company, swore positively to seeing Mr. Beecher on that day, walking in the direction of Remsen street. Jeremiah P. Robinson and Mrs. Moulton were also sworn, and were reasonably certain of the date.

Eighty-fifth Day.—Theodore Tilton occupied the witness stand the whole day, and entered into a sweeping denial of the testimony of Tracy, Woodley, Mrs. Palmer, Bessie Turner, Oliver Johnson and Sam Wilkeson.

Eighty-sixth Day.—The feature of the day's proceedings was the appearance of Mrs. Woodhull in the court-room. She made a short introductory speech to the court, and then offered a package of letters, supposed to relate in some degree to the parties to the scandal. After this she retired, when Moulton was recalled and asked a few questions. The prosecution then rested, much to the surprise of everybody. The defense then commenced their surrebuttal testimony. Freeland was called and flatly contradicted Mr. Bowen as to the time of the meeting at his house.

Eighty-seventh Day.—Several witnesses were recalled, including Bowen, Claflin and Southwick, after which Evarts announced that the evidence was all in, and that he and Judge Porter would occupy not more than five days summing up for the defense. Mr. Beach, for the plaintiff, will occupy about as much time, and the Judge only a day or two, so that the first week of summer may see the case closed finally. The court adjourned for six days to allow counsel time to prepare for summing up.

POLITICAL.

It is announced that ex-Senator Pomeroy is making arrangements to enter the canvass for United States Senator from Kansas, to succeed Mr. Harvey....It now turns out that Commissioner Douglas' crowning weakness, and the one which led to his removal, was a leniency toward illicit distillers.

The Republicans of Kentucky met in State Convention at Louisville on the 13th inst., and nominated Gen. John M. Harlan for Governor, Robert Boyd for Lieutenant-Governor, and William C. Goodloe for Attorney-General. The platform adopted by the Convention is a long one, reaffirming faith in Republican principles; approving the financial policy of the administration, and holds that the financial legislation of Congress should be steadily directed to the resumption of specie payments at the earliest date consistent with the business of the country.

FINANCE AND TRADE.

Weekly Review of the Chicago Market.

FINANCIAL.

There was a better local inquiry for favors at the banks from local speculators. The supply of funds was large and rates are without change. Government bonds firm.

BREADSTUFFS.

The grain markets have attracted a large share of speculators' attention, and an active business was transacted. The June option was the favorite, the bulk of the sales being for this delivery. Seller May was at a discount, nobody wanting the cash property, shippers being out of the market. May shorts bought quite freely, but not until values had sustained a general and quite severe decline, and then the shorts were willing to take in their profits. The stock in store is steadily and rapidly accumulating and there was a general local pressure to sell. Wheat was weak and lower and the other grains shared in this weakness, sympathy with wheat being the principal cause of the reductions. The advices from New York and Liverpool were of an unfavorable tenor, and the receipts were large, while the shipments were light.

The following table shows the prices current at the opening and close of the past week:

	Opening.	Closing.
No. 2 sp'g wheat, cash	$1.05½@1.05¾	$1.01½@1.02½

LIVE STOCK.

The cattle market has been fairly active and steady, with no important changes to note. Receipts materially lighter and quality good. Shipping steers, $5.25@6.30; fair to choice, $6.50@6.75 for extra. Bulk of sales to shippers at $6.00@6.25. Stock cattle steady at $4.00@5.00. Butchers' stock dull at $4.00@5.50 for poor to choice; $3.00@3.75 for inferior. Hogs dull and 20@35c lower. Yorkers, $7.00@7.75; heavy, $7.50@8.25. Quality poor. Bulk of sales at $7.30@7.75. Sheep steady and quiet at $3.00@5.00 for shorn and $5.00@6.50 for wooled.

PROVISIONS.

There was a fairly active business transacted in this market on speculative account, but the feeling under unfavorable advices from the East and Europe was rather easier. The arrivals of hogs were also liberal and this aided somewhat in the depreciation of values. Quotations of mess pork ranged at $21.55@21.65, and $21.55@21.00 seller June; seller July sold at $21.90@22.05, and closed easy. Cash lard quiet but steady at $15.40@15.45. Seller May closed at $15.40@1.42½, and seller June at $15.50@15.55.

SEEDS AND HIGHWINES.

There was considerable activity in the seed market, but the interest manifested was centered chiefly in Hungarian. During the early part of the week, there were numerous outside orders on the market for the above named seed and prices were higher, but toward the close of the week, the demand was less urgent and the market closed rather easy. Timothy was quiet but firm at $2.25@2.45 for fair to prime and $2.50@2.55 for choice; clover firm at $7.00 for prime medium, and $7.75, for mammoth; Hungarian sold at $1.40@1 60 for prime, closing at about $1.40; millet quotable at $1.45@1.50 for fair. The offerings of highwines were light and the market for this reason ruled quiet. Closed at about $1.15 for spot.

PRODUCE.

There was a good demand for butter and the supply of choice grades was barely sufficient to meet the requirements of the trade. Prices were firm, but no material alteration was noticeable. Fresh made quotable at 16@18c for fair streaked and white colored, and 20@28c for good to choice. Old butter ranged at 11@16c for poor to fair, and sales of roll were made at 12½@20c, according to quality. In broom corn the movement was rather light, but prices remain steady at 11½@14½c for No. 1 to extra hurl, and 11@13c for good to choice stalk. Beans were a trifle firmer toward the close of the week, but there was no increase in the amount of business transacted. Quotable at $1.70@1.75 for Eastern mediums in bags, and about $1.80@1.85 for the same in barrels. Western were dull at $1.00@1.75 for poor to good. Beeswax quotable at 26@28c. There was a fair local demand for prime old factory cheese and choice new at about 15@16c for the former, and 13@13½c for the latter; but the common grades were dull and slow sale. Cranberries were dull at $6.00@10.00 per brl for poor to choice cultivated, and $3.50@3.75 for boxes containing one bu. Choice sweet cider was in moderate request at $5.75@6.00 per brl; common was very difficult to sell. Dried fruits were dull and very quiet. Apples quotable at about 8½c for Michigan and New York, and at 7@7½c for Southern. Halves peaches quotable at 9@9½c, and blackberries at 9½@10c. Eggs were rather weak and the market closed at about 13@13½c. There was some improvement shown in green apples, and prices were a shade higher. Sales ranged at $2.50@2.75 for choice in lots, and $3.00@3.50 was paid in a retail way, according to the quality. Hides were dull at 7½c for heavy green salted, and 8c for light do; calf about 12@12½c. Hay was in demand and firm at $16.00@19.50 for No. 2 to prime timothy, and $9.00@15.00 for fair to prime prairie. Potatoes steady and firm; quotable at 95@98c for Eastern peachblows in car lots, and $1.05@1.10 for the same from store. Western peachblows sold at 80@90c in lots. Eastern Early Rose slow at 70c in car lots, and 80@90c from store. There were less onions and turnips offered on the market, and prices under a fair demand were firmer. Sales were made at $2.50@3.00 per brl for onions, and 50@65c per bu for rutabaga turnips. Veal was dull, the market being largely overstocked with common carcasses; quotations range at 4@8c for common to choice.

COOPERAGE, LUMBER AND WOOD.

Cooperage met with a fair demand for the packing descriptions, and prices were a shade firmer. The offerings were only moderate, and quotations range at $1.12½ for pork barrels, $1.40 for lard tierces, $1.90@2.10 for whisky barrels, and 45@55c for flour barrels. The arrivals of lumber were quite liberal, but there was a good country and local demand, and the market ruled fairly active and firm; quotable at $8.50 per 1,000 feet for joist and scantling, and $6.50@12.00 for strips and boards in cargo lots, [illegible] light, but the supply is not excessive, and prices remain unchanged. Quotable at $7.50 per cord for hickory and maple, $6.50 for beach, and $6.00 for slabs at the yards.

APPALLING DISASTER.

The Loss of the Steamship Schiller—Over 300 Lives Sacrificed—Particulars of the Awful Calamity.

The steamship Schiller, which sailed from New York on April 28 for Hamburg, was wrecked off the Scilly Islands on the morning of the 8th of May, and over 300 persons perished. The Scilly Islands, a group of about 140 islets and rocks, lie off the southwest coast of England, about thirty miles from Land's End. The location has always been a dangerous one for shipping, and many horrible wrecks have taken place in the vicinity. The voyage of the Schiller was moderately good until May 4. The last three days it was impossible to take observations. The ship was out of her course half a mile at the time of the catastrophe. The New York Herald's correspondent interviewed Mr. Poleman, second officer of the lost steamer, and Mr. Stern, one of the passengers, and from them gained the following narrative of the disaster: "Capt. Thomas was on deck night and day for four entire days. At 7 o'clock in the evening of the 7th there was a dense fog. The sails were taken in, the engines put on half-speed, and the fog-bells were used. Bishop's Light was unseen, though only half a mile distant. At 10 o'clock we struck on a reef, and, after four bumps, the steamer settled down. There was a violent sea and the tide was rising. The darkness was intense. Most of the male passengers were awake, and there was the usual rush for the boats, but nearly all the boats were staved. One boat with a few sailors left the ship in a cowardly manner, refusing aid. Two boats were saved. The Captain endeavored to compel obedience by firing a revolver over their heads. During two hours six cannon shots were fired, when the powder dampened. Distress signals, rockets and blue lights were unanswered. At midnight the fog lifted, in a minute revealing the lighthouse. The waves were still sweeping the decks and carrying away victims. At 2 o'clock the deck-house, in which were the women and children, was swept away. The cries and shrieks of the victims were heart-rending. There followed a ghastly silence aft. The smokestack fell, crushing some of the boats and two others were carried away. The remainder followed the Captain to the forward bridge. Each succeeding wave took fresh victims. Some took refuge in the mainmast and some on the foremast. At 3 o'clock the Captain and two other officers were on the bridge. The Captain descended for a moment to render assistance and was swept away. 'Thus perished a brave man,' says Mr. Stern. At this time about ten persons were clinging to the rigging of the mainmast and thirty to that of the foremast. The ship had careened, her yards touching the water, and the tide was rising. At 5 o'clock the fog lifted and the survivors shouted, but their cries were unavailing. At 7 o'clock the mainmast, and at a quarter to 8 the foremast, both of iron, fell; then two of the St. Agnes' boats came and rescued the few who had managed to keep afloat. It was reported yesterday that there were 103 women on board. The survivors were taken to-day from Penzance to Plymouth, whence they will be sent forward to Hamburg, where there is the greatest excitement. It is asserted that life-saving belts were issued to women. It is certain that most of the passengers found none. An order was given that the first boat should take the women and children. This boat capsized. Poleman says seven boats were launched, and only two lived. The others were staved and swamped immediately. The cries for help lasted until 3 o'clock. The last voice heard was that of a little child in the cabin. It is not probable the boats could have lived even if they had been successfully filled. The whole number saved is forty-four. Thirty bodies have been recovered."

The number of lives lost by this terrible calamity is not exactly known, but it is believed it will reach 350. There were over one hundred women on board, all of whom, with one solitary exception, perished. The passengers were nearly all Germans. The crew consisted of about 120 men. The passengers in all numbered. Cabin, 149; steerage, 106 adults, 16 children, and 4 infants. Many of the lost passengers belonged in Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Davenport, and other Western cities.

The Schiller was one of the newest and best boats in the transcontinental service. Her dimensions were: Length, 375 feet; beam, 40 feet; depth of hold, 32 feet; 3,600 tons burden, and 3,000 indicated horse-power. She was valued at $700,000, and was insured for her full value. Her cargo was valued at $150,000, and was fully insured. She also carried six kegs containing $300,000 in gold, and 250 mail-bags, containing the entire continental mail.

Father Poland as a Punch Maker.

Even Poland likes his "tod." I would rather count all the money in the Treasury, which has to be done before Spinner leaves, than undertake to tell you how many cocktails have disappeared inside of that "old blue coat," all buttoned down before. When he first came here some of the old boys thought it would be splendid to see old dignity P., "how come you so," so they attempted to "put up a job" on him. A stag party was inaugurated, and the "waiter" was implicitly instructed to give the member from Vermont a double dose every time. This he faithfully carried out, but what was the astonishment of all when every time the "wine went round" the old duffer complained of the weakness of his beverage, and made the waiter brace it up. They had reckoned beyond their host. He was as bright as a new shilling in the morning, and as he gazed on the prostrate forms of the conspirators, like Alexander, he sighed for more—whisky—to conquer.

The joke leaked out, and the Green Mountain boy set his wits to work to retaliate. On a certain evening he invited the same parties to a kind of a hot scotch masquerade. The guests assembled "on time." Forth is brought the "whisky," smoking hot. It was not long before it was discovered that the punch was too strong, "Add some more hot water," said the Judge!

The suggestion was acted upon, and again and again the water was added, still the stronger the beverage became. It was wonderful. Finally it was decided that the strength was only in the imagination of the drinkers. This decision was, however, reversed when the gay worshipers at the shrine of Bacchus sought the "soft side of a plank" for a downy couch. There was some talk of a partition of Poland the next day, when it was discovered that the magic kettle which was supposed to contain water was full of whisky all the time, and every drop added therefrom only made the punch stronger.—Washington Correspondence Rochester Express.

Mutiny at Sea---Desperate Fight.

A London dispatch says: On the arrival of schooner Jefferson Borden at her dock to-day, she was boarded, and full details of the mutiny obtained. It seems that an American sailor, named Smith, struck the first blow. He knocked down and killed the second mate, who was in charge of the watch. He then awakened the first mate. As the latter came out of the cabin he was felled by a sailor named Miller, and thrown overboard. All this time Capt. Patterson was asleep. He was aroused by Miller, who shouted down the gangway that a man had broken his leg. Looking around he observed that the bunks of the mates were empty. Suspecting mischief, he armed himself with revolvers and went on deck. He was immediately assailed by the mutineers with missiles. He opened fire. They retreated, and finally took refuge in the deck-house, where he besieged them an entire day. He emptied his revolvers on them repeatedly through the window, but they refused to surrender until night. Miller, after receiving five bullets in his legs and two in his body, at length offered to yield, with his companions, and all were secured. The English sailor, whose name is Clew, received two bullets beneath the ribs, and will probably die. Smith, another mutineer, was wounded in the wrist and shoulder. He was chained to the pump, and suffers severely from ague, contracted from his exposure. The Captain, steward, boy, and one sailor worked the ship seven days before assistance was obtained from passing vessels. The first mate was the Captain's brother, and the second mate his cousin. The mutineers assert that their only object was revenge for ill-treatment. The rest of the crew deny that the men had been ill-treated, and Capt. Patterson declares that they intended to plunder the vessel.

Vegetable Instinct.

Like the instincts of animals, the actions of vegetables might be attributed to intelligence, unless we knew it to be otherwise. If a pail of water be placed within six inches of either side of the stem of a pumpkin or vegetable marrow, it will, in the course of the night, approach it; and be found in the morning with one of the leaves on the water. If a prop be placed within six inches of a convolvulus, or scarlet runner, it will find it, although the prop may be shifted daily. If, after it has twined some distance up the prop, it be unwound and twined in the opposite direction, it will return to its original position, or die in the attempt; yet, notwithstanding, if two of the plants grow near to each other, and have no stake around which they can entwine, one of them will alter the direction of the spiral, and they will twine around each other.

His Reason.—A lady was around the Postoffice yesterday speaking with the bootblacks and newsboys, and urging them to attend Sunday school. A few said they would attend, others gave reasons why they couldn't, and one young red-head was silent.

"Wouldn't you like to come to Sunday school, my boy?" kindly inquired the lady.

"Noam."

"Why wouldn't you?"

"Oh, coz."

"'Cause what?"

"Why, suppose the fire-bells should ring and the preacher wouldn't let me out!" he exclaimed.—Detroit Free Press.

The Coal Miner's Strike.

The strike of the coal miners in the anthracite coal region of Pennsylvania stil continues. Each side is desperate and determined, and each, now that the crisis of the struggle seems to be approaching, is drawing upon all sources for material to continue the warfare. We have already several times made editorial reference to this remarkable contest; but the persistence with which it is still waged, and the ginantic scale to which it has extended, justify a more extended history of its causes and events.

The strike began early in January of the present year, and has now been kept up about four months. The year opened with a noticeable, and for years unprecedented, dullness in the anthracite coal trade. The financial stringency had stopped much machinery, the weather of [illegible] the consumption being thus unusually light, vast stocks had accumulated and the trade was glutted. The Schuylkill Coal Exchange, taking these facts into account, voted, early in January, to decrease the wages of coal miners 20 per cent. from the rates of 1874. Some reduction was certainly not unreasonable, under the circumstances, and, if the coal-owners and the miners had shown the the proper spirit of compromise, an amicable arrangement might have been reached. But instead of this the operators bluntly announced to the men that a reduction of 20 per cent. had been resolved upon and was imperative, and the miners, almost immediately, responded to the reduction by a strike.

It is charged that this result was anticipated and even desired by the operators, who knew that the miners, dissatisfied with the wages of 1874, would be sure to rebel against any reduction whatever; and who, perhaps, thought that the present time, when the accumulated stock would last half a year, and a strike would, in the end, benefit them somewhat by increasing prices, was the most auspicious for final and determinate struggle with the power of the Miner's Union, which had exerted so powerful and annoying an interference with the management of their mines for the past dozen years. Whether the charge is well founded or not, the capitalists certainly took no pains to conciliate or compromise with the unions, who, in their turn, accepted the proposed reduction as a gauge of battle, and entered into the contest at once.

The strike, once begun, rapidly extended frome mine to mine until it has taken in the whole Schuylkill and Lehigh regions. The men in the Lackawanna and Wyoing coal-fields have refused to strike, but the miners out of work number now over 40,000, and the persons dependent upon them at least 200,000. These men have been out of work for periods ranging from two to four months. The natural result of such contest, where uneducated and imbruted men find themselves in a hopeless and exasperating conflict with a hated power, was violence, arson, murder, and a riot of crime of all kinds. The telegraphic dispatches have given us frequent and full descriptions of the lawlessness and outrage prevalent throughout this whole region, and we have editorially commented upon it. Not only have miners who wished to work been prevented from doing so, by threats, violence and even murder; not only have the pumps of mines been stopped, and laborers engaged in subduing fires driven off, thus continuing mine floods and mine fires which will destroy millions of property, and postpone the resumption of work for months, even though an agreement should be immediately arrived at; but the idle and sullen workmen have shown themselves apt at general crime, and larceny, highway robbery, arson, rape and murder have become frightfully common. The civil authority was powerless or inefficient, as our readers know, a final resort was had to the military arm of the State government, and actual riot and violence was temporarily suppressed by the presence of two or three thousand soldiers. The best informed correspondents say that if the military is withdrawn before the strike is ended, one way or the other, violence, rapine and terrorism will break out seven times worse than before, and the last state of that region will be worse than the first.

There are indications, however, that the strike is nearing its close. A critical point has evidently been reached. The resources of the miners are almost exhausted. The retail dealers of the region have not dared to refuse them credit, for no retailer who did so could ever hope to do business with miners again; but their own credit with the wholesale merchants of New York and Philadelphia has been worn out, their sleeves are bare, and they have no mony to pay their debts or buy fresh goods. The miners, too, are at the end of their purse, and, though they have sent agents throughout the whole country, and have received considerable aid from unions of other trades, they have not means to carry on the fight much longer. There are internal divisions and bickerings among them, and the officers of the National Miners' Union, which planned, organized and carried on the strike, are now being roundly abused, and charged with being in active collusion with the mine owners themselves. On the other hand the capitalists are beginning to feel the pinch. The lateness and severity of the season has made an unexpected drain upon the stocks of anthracite, and there is fear of an actual coal famine in Philadelphia. Meanwhile the pressure upon the local banks of the Schuylkill from all classes, miners, owners and merchants, has been very heavy, and some startling local financial crashes are predicted. In fact every industry and interest of the whole section has been impoverished and drained of life by the long struggle. It is evidently near its end. When it is over, it will be instructive for both sides to sit down and count up its cost—its reckless and ruinous waste.—Detroit Tribune.

The surest indication of the revival of trade is the extent of advertising. The agencies are crowded with work. The sum spent in advertising is perfectly enormous. We have one house that controls a dozen or more of popular medicines. Last year that house spent $250,000 to make their wares known. As a profit the firm divided $600,000!—New York Letter.

That short experience in married life sufficed him until the fifty-seventh anniversary of the death of his wife, when he was again married, at the age of seventy-two, to Miss Elizabeth Decker, of Neversink, aged fifteen, just the age that Ebenezer was when his first wife died.

PIO FREZZA, the murderer of the editor of the Rome Capitale, has confessed to having been moved to the deed through assurances given him that the murder would be considered a public benefit, and especially pleasing to Garibaldi. He was conveyed to the editor's door in a carriage by an ex-policeman, who then and there handed him the dagger. He yielded to a delusion, without asking or receiving a cent. The policeman, Armandi, has similarly confessed.

A CAVEAT for a novel invention has been filed at the Patent Office in Washington. It is for a new motive power which is to be a sort of cold steam generator from water and air. The inventor claims that it will supersede coal and wood for all purposes except for cooking, and that it will revolutionize the present system of motive power. The scientific experts who have examined it state that the invention is entirely practicable and will be patented.

THE elements of nature seem to have a special spite against the South. Last summer and fall great floods swept away thousands of dollars' worth of property in the valley of the Mississippi, and, since the new year came in, tornadoes have been busy keeping up the work of destruction. In February, the town of Houstonia, Mo., was visited by a tornado which destroyed the buildings, killed 6 people and wounded 17 others. In March, Rienzi, Miss., was nearly destroyed, 6 persons were killed and many injured; and a water-spout burst at Fayetteville, Tenn., causing great destruction of property. A second tornado at Richland, S. C., killed 2 persons and injured many others. The third swept over Georgia with unparalleled fury, involving a loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars, killing 300 people and maiming many more. The fourth struck in Louisiana, killing several negroes. The fifth killed 5 persons in Mississippi and injured 25 others. In April, a tornado killed 5 persons at Little Rock, Ark. May opened with a tornado at Columbia, S. C., which wrecked many houses, killed 1 person and injured many. In all, there have been eight tornadoes in the South since the 1st of January, killing about 350 persons and injuring hundreds of others, and destroying property to an amount reaching the millions.

POLITICS AND POLITICIANS.

THE Republican State Convention of Maine is to be held on the 15th of June.

HENRY WATTERSON, of the Courier-Journal, predicts that Governor Allen, of Ohio, will be the next President.

THE Republican State Central Committee of California have issued a call for a State Convention on the 10th of June.

THE Philadelphia Telegraph growls long and savagely because a Pennsylvania man was not chosen to succeed Judge Williams.

THE editor of the Pittsburgh Post, James P. Barr, is urged by the Democracy of Western Pennsylvania for the Gubernatorial nomination of the party.

EX-GOV. B. GRATZ BROWN has just built twenty-two handsome residences in St. Louis, and has begun to collect the rents, which seems a pleasanter employment than being defeated for the Vice-Presidency.

THE Cincinnati Commercial has lately reopened its discussions of needed Congressional reforms, and says it hopes to live "to see the time when the bringing in of any deficiency bill will be met by a prompt and successful motion on the part of Representatives of the people to lay the bill on the table."

THE Republican majority in Michigan at the recent election was over 22,000. The two Republican candidates for Regents of the State University, S. S. Walker and Benj. M. Cutcheon, received a majority of 22,836 and 19,162, respectively, over S. T. Douglass and Peter White, the Democratic nominees.

THE election of several Roman Catholic Representatives to the Legislature of New Hampshire is to be contested on the ground that the State Constitution has a clause requiring that Representatives must be of the Protestant religion. Several attempts to have the clause repealed have been voted down by large popular majorities.

INDIANA is the favored State with the administration at present. With Tyner as Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Orth as Minister to Austria, New as United States Treasurer, and Pratt as Commissioner of Internal Revenue, there are but a few insignificant Cabinet appointments left to console the leading politicians of New York and other second-rate Commonwealths.

CAN a man who was christened Nathaniel be lawfully designated as "Natt?" This is a knotty point which the New Hampshire Legislature will have to settle. Gen. Natt Head was the Republican candidate for Senator in the Third District. It is claimed that "Natt" does not mean Nathaniel, and that the votes cast for "Natt Head" must be thrown out. If this point can be sustained there will be a tie in the Senate, a Democratic majority.

THE Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times telegraphs that paper as follows: "A careful canvass of the Southern politicians shows that the present tendency of their minds is not in favor of Michael C. Kerr, of Indiana. The South will come here pledged to the progress of internal improvement, and as Mr. Kerr has been an avowed opponent to the system of government aid to the material interests of the country, he will not receive the support of the Southern men, who, united, will have complete control of the situation."

A CONVENTION to take into consideration the best means for the speedy union of the United States and the Canadian Dominions is called to assemble at Buffalo on July 4. The managers of it expect that three delegates will be chosen from each Congressional district in the United States and three delegates from each Parliamentary district in the British provinces. It is hoped by them that through this Convention arrangements may be begun by which the union of the two countries may be effected by the 4th of July, 1876.

THERE was a spirited contest over the office of Chief Engineer of the Fire Department at Fort Wayne at the last election, Frank B. Vogel being chosen. The Mechanics' steam fire engine and hose company is dissatisfied with the result, and has notified the City Council that it desires to be disbanded.

BRADLEY DUFFEE, a professional gambler, was arrested in Evansville, the other day, and fined $15.90. Having explained the trick to the Judge, he asked that his fine be remitted, on the ground that the trick was worth $25 to the Judge, but his Honor failed to see it in the same light, and Mr. Duffee had to "shell."

THE Peru Times informs us that the Wabash Valley Manufacturing Company are about to put in machinery with which to make a new kind of basket, and expect to be able by the first of June to turn out 3,000 per day. They are now employing sixty-five men, and by the end of next month they will be able to afford employment to a hundred.

PATENTS recently issued to Indiana inventors: Rocking-chairs, A. List, Boonville; boxes for packing lamp-chimneys, N. Harris, North Grove; coffee-pots, J. Boyers, Huntington; lard and cheese presses, A. J. Noe, Mitchell; car-coupling, J. G. Wilson; harrows, C. W. Strombeck, Syracuse; bolting-reels, A. H. Nordyke, Richmond; plow, C. L. A CORRESPONDENT at Schenectady says: "Every city of any note on this side of the Alleghanies has its choice of railroads to the West, and is therefore independent of railroads, except Boston. I find by actual inquiry here, in an inland city of New York State, that furniture is absolutely brought from Indianapolis, Indiana, now, instead of Boston as formerly, because the freight is only $0.95—ninety-five cents—against $1.75—one dollar and seventy-five cents—from Boston."

W. H. DUFF, a painter, from Dayton, Ohio, who had come to Indianapolis in search of work, was run over by a train of cars on the Pan-handle road, one afternoon last week. The top of his head was cut off, yet the man was still alive in the evening. Duff left the city about noon and walked to Irvington, where he had a job of work. He was intoxicated at the time, and it is supposed he fell upon the track, and despite the storm that prevailed during the afternoon, went to sleep. He was about forty-five years old, and leaves three children in Dayton.

THE Attica Ledger learns of a horrible accident which occurred about two miles from Boswell, on Wednesday morning of last week. A gentleman by the name of W. O. Smith, together with a hired hand, was plowing in a field near his residence, when the employe's team ran away from him. As the horses neared Mr. Smith he jumped in front of them and endeavored to stop them by catching hold of the bridle bits, but they threw him beneath them, stepping on him, and the point of the plow, to which they were still hitched, striking him on the thigh, completely severed the muscles. His injuries were very severe, and he died from their effects on the day following the accident.

WHILE on a trip to Kentucky a few weeks ago, Wesley Dilly, of Indianapolis, purchased the running horse George Graham, paying $400 down, and agreeing to pay the remaining $400 on the 3d day of May, at Nashville. Under the terms of agreement its former owner was to put the animal in training and enter it in the Nashville races, Dilly to pay all expenses, including entrance fee, and pocket the winnings, if there were any. Dilly was not on hand at the stipulated time, though he wanted the horse, which took the first money, $2,500, in the second day's races. Without waiting for Dilly's arrival, the unscrupulous owner resold the horse for $1,500 in cash, and now the Hoosier horseman is mourning the loss of his horse and $2,000.

THE following item is taken from the Evansville Courier: "Our readers are familiar with the circumstances of a murder which occurred near Owensville, Gibson county, Ind., on Saturday night, August 22d last, at a place known as Warrick's Warehouse Landing. There was a dance, at which were a fellow named William Lance, keeper of a 'doggery' on the Illinois side of the Wabash, and a young man named George Watson. The latter asked Lance's wife to dance, and Lance, in his drunken frenzy, imagined it to be an insult. He went from the dance-house and secured a stove-leg, with which he cowardly attacked Watson and beat him to death. The indignation was very great, and Lance was soon arrested. During last week his trial has been going on at Princeton, and was concluded on Saturday evening. The jury on Sunday night returned a verdict of guilty of manslaughter and sentenced Lance to imprisonment for twenty-one years. The evidence proved the murder to be a very cold-blooded one, and even this heavy sentence was something of a surprise, as the anticipations were that Lance would be hung.

THE Washington Gazette gives the following account of the suicide of Walter H. Wild, Superintendent of the Buckeye Cannel Coal Company, at Cannelburg: "On Thursday morning Mr. Wild purchased a bill of goods from a commercial traveler, it is said, and a short time afterward the agent on leaving called to bid Mr. Wild good-by, and telling him to take good care of himself, which Mr. W. said he would do. He then walked into his room over the company's store, where it appears he indited a letter, stating that he had been seeing a great deal of financial trouble of late, and informing his brother Edward, in Cincinnati, the particulars of his imaginary transactions, and giving financial embarrassments as the cause of the rash act he was about to commit. This letter was not signed, but the handwriting was recognized as his. It appeared as if he had not completed the letter, but rose up, seated himself on the bed, and with a navy revolver, the muzzle placed to the side of the head, discharged it, almost literally shooting the top of his head off. Another letter found in his pocket and directed to his brother Edward was of the same purport as the one named above, and this was written a few days before, one on the 4th and the other on the 6th."

A Patriotic Girl.

At the time General Greene retreated before Lord Rawdon from Ninety-Six, when he had passed Broad river he was very desirous to send an order to General Sumter, who was on the Wateree, to join him, that they might attack Rawdon, who had divided his force. But the General could find no man in that part of the State who was bold enough to undertake so dangerous a mission. The country to be passed through for many miles was full of blood-thirsty Tories, who on every occasion that offered imbrued their hands in the blood of the Whigs. At length Emily Geiger presented herself to General Greene, and proposed to act as his messenger; and the General, both surprised and delighted, closed with her proposal. He accordingly wrote a letter and delivered it, and at the same time communicated the contents of it verbally, to be told to Sumter in case of accident. Emily was young, but as to her person or adventures on the way we have no further information, except that she was mounted on horseback upon a side-saddle, and the second day of her journey she was intercepted by Lord Rawdon's scouts. Coming from the direction of Greene's army, and not being able to tell an untruth without blushing, Emily was suspected and confined to a room, and as the officer in command had the modesty not to search her at the time, he sent for an old Tory matron as more fitting for that purpose. Emily was not wanting in expedient, and as soon as the door was closed and the bustle a little subsided, she ate up the letter, piece by piece. After awhile the matron arrived, and, upon searching carefully, nothing was to be found of a suspicious nature about the prisoner, and she would disclose nothing. Suspicion being thus allayed, the officer commanding the scouts suffered Emily to depart whither she said she was bound; but she took a route somewhat circuitous to avoid further detention, and soon after struck into the road to Sumter's camp, where she arrived in safety. Emily told her adventure, and delivered Greene's verbal message to Sumter, who, in consequence, soon after joined the main army at Orangeburg.—Noble Deeds of American Women.

English Orthography.

The spelling-matches now so much in vogue seem to have turned general attention to the cumbrous orthography of the English language. Perfect spelling is as much a dream as perfect holiness is. Englishmen may approach but can never reach it. In our language there are forty-two sounds, and these must be expressed in writing by means of only twenty-four letters. It is therefore to be regretted that not only have we not characters enough for our sounds, but in addition to this many of the characters we have must be meaninglessly thrown away in the construction of words. Certainly under our present system people who write much perform a vast deal of labor. Somebody curious in such matters has calculated that a person who writes thirty words in a minute makes in that time the equivalent of a straight mark a rod long—that is, that each word is six and three-fifths inches in length—a calculation exact enough for ordinary purposes. If he should write five hours a day for a year of three hundred days, he would write over three hundred miles of paper. If our system of spelling is wrong by reason of a redundancy of letters in any given word, of course we here use up an amount of energy that might better be employed on some profitable task. It is certain that children are tortured unnecessarily to teach them our singular mode of spelling, but there seems to be no remedy for this, since changes in orthography must take place gradually, language being an evolution, not a special creation. It is a pity, however, that something cannot be done to further the desired change; perhaps the present discussion of the matter will do something towards the accomplishment of the work.—New York Graphic.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

RED PEPPER FOR FOWLS.—Cayenne pepper, mixed in the cooked food of fowls, will make them lay many more eggs than if not so fed. Make a pudding daily, winter and summer, of Indian meal or meal and bran, and season it strong with pepper, and it will pay well.

ONE who keeps a dairy of twenty cows for milk alone says: "I find after several years' experience that shipstuffs and corn bran mixed are the cheapest and best feed I have ever tried. I feed one peck per day; shipstuffs weighing thirty pounds per bushel and corn bran about twenty-four pounds per bushel."

IT does not injure the best grasses on any permanent pasture to graze close; for those that will not bear to be eaten down may as well die out and make room for those that will thicken into a perfect mat, like the sward so often met with in England, where there are as many as seventy distinct varieties growing on any square yard in a field.

FLAX is often sown with barley. The barley should be sown first, and harrowed in; afterward the flax is sown, and rolled or covered with a brush harrow. In this way a yield of from fifteen to twenty bushels of barley and from ten to twelve of flax can be obtained; and, by the use of proper screens, the barley and flax can be readily separated.

AS A remedy for lice on pigs, carbolic disinfecting soap is recommended. Any one can make it by mixing one ounce of crystal carbolic acid with half a pound of hard soap. No brush is necessary for its application. The cake may be taken moist and rubbed on the animal till a thick lather is formed. Or, one ounce of carbolic acid mixed with a half pound of lard makes a compound which may be rubbed on with good results. Only one application is said to be necessary in either case.

THE editor of the Journal of Horticulture, London, says sawdust is a good thing for earthing celery, placing it between the rows and around the plants after the leaves and stalks have been brought together, pressing the sawdust about them so as to compact and insure blanching perfectly. It is better, he thinks, than soil, not being so liable to cause stalks to rot, and is a good protection against frost. The only objection is that some sawdust may impart a taste to the celery.

A FARMER writes to the Live Stock Journal that he has a two-year-old grade short-horn heifer which slipped and fell and lost her calf lately, though it was not due for some months yet. When he began milking her to relieve the inflammation and oppression of the bag which ensued she gave at first two and afterward three quarts a day. The editor informs him that this is not an unusual case, and advises him to go on milking her, as that will undoubtedly be better for the cow, while there is no reason why the secretion, being perfectly natural, should not also be wholesome.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Cincinnati Gazette sends the following tables prepared for his own use and that of his boys, by which he claims to be able to determine with some considerable degree of accuracy the quantity of corn to the acre. Of course in calculating the yield, one must make allowances for missing hills: Square feet in one acre, 43,560; corn planted 3 feet 9 inches square gives 3,094 hills to the acre. Each hill occupies 14 square feet and a fraction over. Hence—100 hills to the bushel, 30 97-100 bushels to the acre; 75 hills to the bushel, 41 22-75 bushels to the acre; 60 hills to the bushel, 51 37-60 bushels to the acre; 60 hills to the bushel, 61 47-50 bushels to the acre; 40 hills to the bushel, 77 17-40 bushels to the acre; 30 hills to the bushel, 103 7-30 bushels to the acre. Corn planted 3 feet and 6 inches square gives 3,555 hills to the acre. Each hill occupies 12¼ square feet, 100 hills to the bushel, 35 55-100 bushels to the acre; 75 hills to the bushel, 47 30-75 bushels to the acre; 60 hills to the bushel, 59 15-60 bushels to the acre; 50 hills to the bushel, 71 5-50 bushels to the acre; 40 hills to the bushel, 88 35-40 bushels to the acre; 30 hills to the bushel, 118 15-30 bushels to the acre. Planted 3 feet and 3 inches square gives us 4,124 hills to the acre. Each hill occupies a little over 10¼ square feet; 100 hills to the bushel, 41 21-100 bushels to the acre; 75 hills to the bushel, 55 bushels to the acre; 60 hills to the bushel, 68 44-60 bushels to the acre; 50 hills to the bushel, 82 24-50 bushels to the acre; 40 hills to the bushel, 103 4-40 bushels to the acre; 30 hills to the bushel, 137 14-30 bushels to the acre. For old upland, I plant 3 feet and 9 inches square, marking with a four-point marker, and thin to three stalks to the hill, with satisfactory results. For rich ground, 3 feet 6 inches, or 3 feet 3 inches for very rich. In all cases thin to three stalks in the hill.

About the House.

GRAHAM MUFFINS.—Three pints of flour, half a tea-cup of sugar, the same of shortening, a teaspoonful of saleratus, two teaspoonfuls cream tartar, salt to taste; rub all together with the hands; moisten with cold water; bake in muffin-rings half an hour in a hot oven.

CORN-CAKES WITHOUT EGGS.—Three cups of butter-milk, three of corn-meal, one of wheat flour, one tablespoonful salt, two of sugar, one level of soda; dissolve the last three ingredients in water, stir all together; if the meal swells too much to spread nicely, add more water.

TO REMOVE PAINT FROM CLOTHING.—Equal parts of turpentine and spirits of ammonia will take out the paint spots from any kind of clothing, no matter how old and dry and hard it may be. Saturate the spot with the liquid, perhaps two or three times, till the paint is soft, then wash out all with soap-suds.

OLD newspapers make excellent padding between a carpet and the floor it covers. They should be eight or ten thicknesses deep, and more rather than less. We have used them with the best results for the past ten years. The same papers can be used year after year; all need to make them good as new is an occasional airing and dusting. It is said the ink used in printing will effectively prevent the ravages of moths.

KEEP your cellar clean—not clean it, but keep it clean. A large proportion of apples smell and taste of the filth and mold of the cellar. A lot of half-rotten cabbage-leaves, moldy, decaying boards, sly corners with a lot of scraps of accumulating rottenness, old, unhealthy tubs, hoops, staves, and straw, dirt from er in potato bins, and all similar trash are poison to the butter, the apples, and the vegetables, as well as the human beings above stairs.

A SIMPLE METHOD OF VENTILATION.—A piece of wood three inches high and exactly as long as the breadth of the window, is to be prepared. Let the sash be now raised, the slip of wood placed on the sill, and the sash drawn closely upon it. If the slip has been well fitted, there will be no draft in consequence of the displacement of the sash at its lower part, but the top of the lower sash will overlap the bottom of the upper one, and between the bars perpendicular currents of air, not felt, will enter and leave the room.

HOW TO LIGHT A DARK ROOM.—To light a dark room looking out on a narrow yard or street, let the glass be roughly ground on the outside, and set flush with the outer wall. The light from the entire visible sky, and from the remotest parts of the opposite wall, will be introduced into the apartment, reflected from the innumerable faces or facets which the rough grinding has produced. The whole window will appear as if the sky were behind it, and from every point of this luminous surface light will radiate into the room.

A Few Old People.

As we have not at hand a reliable statement of authenticated cases of extraordinary longevity compiled in St. Louis, we will take a curious and interesting statistical statement compiled in the city of New York. It exhibits the number of persons who have died there within the past ten years of one hundred years of age and upward, and is made a part of the annual report of the health department. Of these centenarians there are 91; of whom 72 were females and 19 males. Of the number 56 were natives of Ireland, 25 of the United States, 2 of Germany, 2 of France, 2 of the West Indies, 1 of Scotland, 1 of Africa, 1 at sea and 1 unknown. Of colored there were 23 and of white 68. The list shows 2 single, 43 widows, 7 married and only 5 widowers, leaving 34, the conditions of which are unaccounted for. Of these 37 were 100 years old, 5 were 101, 9 were 102, 14 were 103, 5 were 104, 7 were 105, 5 were 106, 3 were 108, 3 were 109, 2 were 113 and 1 was 118 years. Their occupations are given in only 15 instances in which there are only 2 merchants, 3 cooks, the others being laborers and house-servants. The cause of death in two-thirds of these cases was senile asthenia, or gradual decay from the infirmities of old age. There were 3 cases of apoplexy, others of pneumonia, paralysis, dropsy, etc., but in the large majority of cases, as is seen, the old people fell off from life as the leaves from the trees in the autumn when there is no more active life to support them. The statements of many of these were contradictory as to the methods by which they retained life so long. Very few drank alcoholic liquors and most of them were hard-working people, who lived on simple fare and by the nature of their employment took plenty of out-door exercise, thereby training the muscular system and inhaling oxygen, which is the principle of life.—St. Louis Republican.

Shakspeare and Barnum.

In a letter to the New York Times of April 29, Mark Twain says: About three-fourths of the visitors to Shakspeare's tomb are Americans. If you will show me an American who has visited England and has not seen the tomb, Barnum shall be on his track next week. It was an American who roused into its present vigorous life England's dead interest in her Shakspearean remains. Think of that! Imagine the house that Shakspeare was born in being brought bodily over here and set upon American soil! That came within an ace of being done once. A respectable gentleman of Stratford told me so. The old building was going to wreck and ruin. Nobody felt quite reverence enough for the dead dramatist to repair and take care of his house; so an American came along over so quietly and bought it. The deeds were actually drawn and ready for the signatures. Then the thing got wind, and there was a fine stir in England! The sale was stopped. Public-spirited Englishmen headed a revival of reverence for the poet, and from that day to this every relic of Shakspeare in Stratford has been sacred, and zealously cared for accordingly. Can you name the American who once owned Shakspeare's birthplace for twenty-four hours? There is but one who could ever have conceived of such a unique and ingenious enterprise, and he is the man I refer to—P. T. Barnum.

Don't Snub Children.

How often do we see people enter a family in which they are acquainted, speak pleasantly to all the grown folks, but vouchsafe not even a nod of recognition to the children. Is it any wonder that boys become rude and boorish, caring for nobody, because they are perpetually made to feel that they are in the way, and that nobody cares for them? Is it any wonder that girls in their teens are so awkward and ill at ease when they first begin to be treated with some consideration? If children were treated with the same politeness which we extend to young ladies and gentlemen, "the awkward age," when hands and feet are such inconveniences, would not make its appearance. I once had in my school a family of children who invariably attracted the attention of visitors; they were not especially pretty, nor smart, nor well dressed, but people who saw them never failed to remark, "What pleasant manners those children have." The first time I visited their home I discovered the secret. The mother, having occasion to pass before one of the girls, said to her as she would have said to me, "Excuse me for passing before you." The mystery was solved at once; she treated her children as she would have them treat her, and the consequence was they were the best bred children in the neighborhood.—Corres. Bucks County Intelligencer.

NO MIDDLE MEN with us; this is the secret of our immense trade. We buy at first hands and sell direct to the consumer; hence, we save our customers the profits of the speculator, jobber and wholesale merchants. These profits amount to from 10 to 20 per cent. Our customers get the benefit of them. Take Teas, for instance, the profits on that article are so great that the price is often doubled before it reaches the consumer. Every time it changes hands there is 10 to 20c. per pound added to it. This, of course, the consumer has to pay. Of course the retailer will endeavor to persuade you that his Teas are worth the money, that they cost him so and so. Well, this is all true, but the trouble is he has paid too much in the first place and can't help himself. He purchases from the wholesale grocer, and the wholesale grocer has to add his 20c. All these extra profits our customers get the benefit of, and it is just the same as Coffees, Sugar,s Spices, Canned Goods, Oysters, &c., as on Teas. No Middle Men with us. They would starve to death if they had to live on the profits they make of us.

Wines and Liquors.

For my part I don't approve of any one purchasing them that can do without them, but it is an admitted fact that there is more money used in the United States for Liquors than for Flour, and for the benefit of those who wish to indulge in the luxury, we will guarantee them a saving of at least 50c on the dollar, and for the sick and invalid our wines and old '76 whiskey cannot be beat.

Pencilings and Clippings.

We were visited by a nice growing rain last Friday.

The gardens are beginning to look tempting, and the fruit trees look promising.

The Michigan City "News" may now be set down as a Democratic newspaper.

The spelling sensation may be considered "in a horn" about these diggins. We had two.

The Kansas grasshoppers are pleased with the quality of this spring's early cabbages.

The little "cusses" are beginning to paddle in the creek. That will help the undertakers.

The corn in Southern Indiana is said to be hand high. Would'nt corn like that make us feel proud.

Winter chills are over with, and now comes the spring fever, which is the name some people have for laziness.

A good deal of corn has been planted during the present week. The ground is in excellent condition for planting.

Seven children of one family were buried together in Rensselaer county, N Y., having died almost simultaneonsly of diptheria.

A man named May porposes to start from Owen county, travel all the way to Kansas, and stop at the residence of a blood relative every night.

The cherry trees are full of blooms and there is a fine prospect for a abundent crop unless they should be killed by late frosts.

A Mississippi politician announces: "At the earnest solicitation of those to whom I owe money I have consented to become a candidate for county treasurer."

The chief reason why a Auburn woman wouldn't buy a Bible, was because the agent hadn't one containing any comic pictures.

Mr. Kline's bees took a parade, the other day, with several tin pans for the lead music. They haulted near a tree in Mr. Rush's lot and were all taken prisoners.

Kill him! We mean the man, in V. A's. grocery yesterday, who had the audacity to prophesy that next winter will be colder than the last one was. Hang him!

"Oh, John! Drunk again," sobbed his wife, as he returned from a midnight spelling school. "N-o-nt so, Elizabeth" "It's only the bird singing in my heart. That's all."

The "Sunday School" sheet, with its four editors has failed to enlarge the first of this month. Every newspaper that wants to succeed must keep blooded stock of some kind on hand. Let us crow!

First class in geography: What is a bay? Father's best horse. What is a sound? A thunder clap. What is a strait? Whiskey without water. What is is a cape? Something to wear about the shoulders.

Lewis remarks that most any woman can sit down gracefully in a street car, but not one in a hundred can decend from the back end of a buggy, when the horse is running away, without feeling that she's going to overdo the thing.

The Woman Suffrage Association of Missouri has presented a petition asking the Constitutional Convention to insert a clause in the new constitution extending the ballot to women. It was referred to the proper committee.

At a funeral in Park county last week in lowering the coffin, the corps (a woman) was spilled out, and fell to the bottom of the grave, face downwards, to the great horror of all present.

"Father," replied a Auburn girl, tears in her eyes, "you may jaw and jaw, and bowl and rave and rip and tear, but I'll marry John Stewart if I die for it!"—And the old man leaned back and realized that he might as well try to pull a locomotive up hill.

Messrs Williams & McDougal have purchased the lunch rooms recently started by Mr. Benedict. They are both clever, genial fellows and we expect to see them build up a large trade it their line.

"Do you think that souls separated here are united hereafter?" asked a pale emaciated pietist of a friend. "I hope not," was the chilling reply. "It cost me a pretty good figure to get a divorce and when I invested it for time and eternity, too."

A naughty editor, not in the least afraid of women, publishes the following: An Indiana garter, a yard long, is looking for an owner, and some of the papers can't think she lives. We don't know much about the length of garters generally, but all we ever saw were above two feet.

The Bishops of the two branches of the Methodist Eposcopal Churches, the Northern and Southern, have appointed committees with a view to harmonizing the differance hitherto existing between them, and joining both into one church

An exchange greets the coming warm weather in an article concuding with: "and now freckels are making preparations to commence their visitations."

A crusty bachelor's objection to ladies with beautiful teeth is, that nine out of ten of them would laugh at a funeral.

A few days since a very pretty young married woman, during a dinner-table discussion on churchmanship, opened the eyes of the company and demolished her husband by expressing, as her opinion, that the only differance between the Ritualists and Romanists was in the fact that the latter burned insects.

The prolonged railroad war between the lines running east from Chicago, has resulted in a new reduction of rates on the part of the B. & O. Company—the original line to cut on fare—which is now selling tickets from Chicago to Pittsburgh, for $7.

In the libel suit of William F. Butler, a lawyer of Chicago, against the proprietor of the Times, of that city for stigmatizing him as a "snyster," the jury found the defendent guilty, and assessed the damages at $600. The plaintiff asked for $50,000.

The gals living near Garret are boss. One of them got up at midnight, foddered the cows, split some wood and got the water on to wash, before she awoke. That's the kind of a girl for a man to marry. She'd go out some night and hoe two acres of potatoes.

We overheard two ladies talking the other night, and as usual their conversation was directed to the styles. It was something like this: "O, gracious, no!" exclaimed one raising her hands and speaking in a very excited tone. "She was so ill when her new bonnet came home that she could'nt get up; but, dear sakes! Jane, that did'nt matter nothing, for she just put her hat on, and lay with her head out of the window the whole afternoon.

We don't know how true it is, but we understand that a girl south of here ate seven pounds of heavy wedding-cake, in order that she might dream of her future husband. She dreamed that a man with teeth a foot long, dog's feet, and a hair lip, sat on her all night; and rather than marry him, she contemplates suicide, and an early tomb where the bobolinks sing.

An old lady in the expression of whose face sanctity and generosity were solemnly blended, walked out to the end of a dock on the New York side of East River the other day, and, after leisurely examining Brooklyn through a spy glass shut up this instrument and walked off again with the satisfied look of a woman who had only done her duty.

The Indians out West have a regular mating season in the spring when they do all their wooing, omitting such foolishness during the remainder of the year Could this practice but obtain among the civilized world it would save enough in clothes to pay off the National deot and complete the new Washington monment by Centennial time.

It is quite noticeable, by the appearance of so many well-dressed men on our streets, that there has been some change in the clothing business of our city. In looking about us to find the cause, we are confronted with the stupendious Clothing Emporium of Miller & Casebeer, where it is evident every well-dressed man now buys his clothing.

Somebody kindled a fire in the woods near Garret, and the town was about ready to burn down last Friday. Oh, my wouln't that been an awful fire—"two tamarack poles and frame blacksmith shop. The Chicago fire would be too thin to speak about. And this would have all happened if one fellow had'nt set up all night and spit on the approaching flames.

One day last week a smilling infant toddled away from its home near Viola, Iowa, on the Dubuque southwestern Railroad, and lay down between the rails to sleep. A few moments later a train came along and the engineer, seeing he could not stop in time, pulled her wide open and banged the whole train over the sleeping cherub before it woke, and never touched a hair of it. Had the little one attempted to rise it would have been killed instantly.

A boy about twelve years old knocked at the door of a house on Second street yesterday, and when the lady appeared he said: "There'll be a boy around here pretty soon to spade your garden, but don't give him a job. His name is Jim he's cross eyed and he blows up cats with powder snaps" I'll be here with my partner pretty soon. We go to Sunday school, never sass our mothers and we're going to give half the money to the grasshopper sufferers. The job was saved for them.

On the walls of a kitchen in Pompeii was recently found the following inscription: "Lighted the fire, cooked his meals, swept his house 28,000 times to this day, and he refused to take me to the circus!" The inhuman wretch, to treat his poor drudge of a wife that way! If old John Robinson—for we presume the circus was his—had known what was going on, there would have been one row in Pompeii, if no more.—Exchange.

We may now venture the opinion, though with considerable hesitation; that spring has come, and in evidence we bring the great number of bull frogs that are nightly singing their beautiful melodies on the shores of our river, ponds and lakes. We heard one shooting off his bazzoo the other night, and it was simply awful. He made more noise than a whole family of frogs ought to make. The boys are after him, and when he is captured we will have him put on the hay scales and weighed—then report.

The Ligonier "Banner" says: "There is one thing that is sadly neglected by some of our residences. We refer to the cleaning and removing of the rubbish and filth that has accumulated in by-ways, alleys, back yards and stable yards, during the past winter and spring. Many seem to think that they have a right to throw anything in the street, and the noxious effusion that arises from some places is absolutely sickening. The carelessness of some persons in this respect calls for an admonition from the Board of Health, or from the Marshal, and there is complaint against the violations of law, some persons may be called on to perf orm a duty, which a desire for the good health of our town renders absolutely necessary."

Auburn is the worst place in the business for dirty streets and alleys, and this notice ought to be somewhat touching to some of our citizens.

Vulgarity means the exibition of those peculiarities of speech and manner which offend refinement. It makes a naked display of course and unecudated human impulses. It mostly lies in the absence of consideration for the feeling of others, in narrow-minded self-assertion, and in a selfish want of control over anti-social propensities. There is natural vulgarity, chiefly the result of ignorance. There is the vulgarity of affection, which is the most odious form of vice. Naturally vulgarity is often a little more than the want of knowledge of the usage of society, or an inbred indelicacy of mind. This is the besetting sin of the lower middle class. The vulgarity of affection is unfounded assumption and ill-timed display.

A Berlin correspondent writing of German betrothals says: "There is one disadvantage connected with the German fashion of making these matters so openly known to the public, which will, I think, forever prevent our changable American lovers from following their examples. Sometimes in the columns of Family intelligence," in which births, betrothals and marriages appear, occurs such a paragrah: "For satisfactory reasons the betrothal of our daughter, Margarette Catharine Gotz, with Herr Johann-Wilhelm Schuneman has been dissolved by us." The names of both parents in full legal form follow this paragraph.

Wheat Prospects.

Washington May 10th.

During the past week the condition of winter wheat in 330 counties has been reported to the Department of Agriculture. About 800 counties of the valley of Ohio, Missouri are represented, which last year produced 70,000,000 bushels of winter wheat or sixty per cent of the product of seven States from Ohio to Kansas. The average of the condition in these States is sixty-three per cent. Only five-eights of a full crop, if no improvements occurs. In Kentucky, seventy-five per cent, Ohio, fifty-seven per cent, Michigan, sixty-two per ceut Indiana, sixty-three per cent, Missouri, fifty-nine per cent, Kansas, eighty-seven though only thirty-two counties in the latter state are represented. The condition is better in Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia, though below an average. The proportion to be replanted in other crops averages fourteen per cent, in the West, or 1,260'000 acres in breadth out of 9,000,000 acres seeded. The largest proportion is twenty seven per cent, in Missouri, Illonois, twenty-three, Kansas, and Indiana, eleven, Michigan and Ohio, ten, Kentucky, four. Very little replanting in the Middle States, except in New York.

On the Road to Garret.

Quite a good looking, well proportioned German came into our office last Thursday, seated himself comfortably and after lighting his pipe enquired a little about the running of trains and then broke out:

"Vas dot big editor in?"

"No, sir, he is not in town. Is there any thing we can do for you?"

"Nix. My business vas mit the boss. I vas usht going to vind out some dings off dot Garret town."

"Well, sir, perhaps we can tell you as much about Garret as the big editor can."

"Nixy veden. I vas known off dot editor some two years beck, und I vould like to talk mit him off dot bollicks business a leetle."

"Can't you come up again. Perhaps he will be at home then."

"Nix. I don't miss dot Garret town cars off you give me fufty zents. I been dinking some beck, about von minute since, dot I vould make mineself off dot Garret town und speculate."

"What will you speculate on my friend —tamarack pools?"

"Dhase shops vas coming by Garret off it dakes dwenty years."

"That soon, sir?"

"Yes, mine young vrend, dot soon any vay; und I show you young mans some dhings vhat you can't usht exactly vind out-t now."

"Well, you may be right, sir, but I am afraid you have been talking with some land speculators, and they have been coding you."

"Vhat; cod off me. Nixy veden—dont I live off dot Vort Vayne town dwenty-von years, und I vas not once coded, zo help me gracious."

"Did you hear that Garret was on fire last Friday, and the citizens were compelled to watch all night in order to save their property."

"Young mans, off you drifle mit me I knock you vlat down so quick like lightning. I vas no sardine."

"Excuse me, sir, I did not mean to offend you at all."

"You vas a skun-of-a-gun vrom bur-oak to dalk off an old mans like dot, und vhen I see dot editor I show you off my invluence. I come beck agin next veek, und you petter make yourzelf scarce."

The old fellow went down stairs stomping his cane twice on each step and talking loudly to himself.

The trial of the State against Cyrus Boughan, for allowing minors to play billiards, was decided against him, and the fine was put at $10 and costs. We are not in favor of saloons and have little respect for the business, but we do think when a man pays the required amount for a license and conducts the business as orderly as our saloon men do, that these old coons, who make the trouble, should not be encouraged everytime in this undertaking. Anyone can readily see that these suits originate through spite.—Perhaps you have a son who occasionly gets intoxicated. Does it do him any good to be everlastingly ding donging him, telling him what this and that neighbor was saying and advise him to never be seen on the street. No friends you do more in this way to have your promising boys go to a drunkard's grave than all the saloon keepers in DeKalb County could do, if your words be kind and friendly. There is nothing that will induce a young man to drink as soon as to always find a discouraging word under the paternal roof. Bring your boys up under kind words and let them know you are anxious for their future welfare, and many can be made good and useful men, where, on the other hand, they are ruined for earthly good and lost forever for the good world to come.

At the Frome Petty Session in England the other day, Major Wickham and Mr. George Wood Sheppard sentenced Sarah Beachim, an old woman 60 years of age to fourteen days imprisonment with hard labor for stealing a half-penny worth of coal belonging to the managers of Trinity School Frome. The only witness called, was a policeman, who said he saw the prisoner come out of an iron pite leading to the street, with the coal in her possession wrapped in a paper, but he could not say that she came from the school house. The Superintendent of the police court said he knew nothing against the woman. The prisoner said she found the coal in a dug heap in the yard adjoining the school. She had been employed for the last twenty-six years in cleaning out the school every day. The old woman seemed staggered at the sentence, and left the court crying bitterly.

Some of our high-toned young men, in taking their evening stroll, generly goes South, and in passing certain portions of the city, they put their cigars in their pockets, or accidently drop them.

THE FASTIDIOUS GOBLIN.

There lived an imp of Endor,
Eternities gone by,
Who saw the Lord of splendor
Create his starry sky.

He saw the great sun stealing
From nothing and from night,
The worlds begin their wheeling,
The comets take their flight.

The mighty mingled forces
Suffused creation's frame;
Along the astral courses
Throbbed swiftness, heat and flame.

The galaxies went singing
Adown their wondrous ways;
The universe was ringing
With gladness and with praise.

Then thought this pigmy goblin
He too would make a sphere,
And straight began his cobbling,
And wrought perchance a year.

But nothing could be fashion;
No world for him might be;
He lacked the God-like passion,
Creative love lacked he.

His work had neither motion,
Nor light, nor form, nor grace;
A wreck on being's ocean,
A blot on glory's face.

So, seeing that no creature
Of his might track the skies,
He throned himself as teacher,
And dared to criticise.

The meteors were crazy,
The systems far too vast;
The milky way was hazy,
The suns were overcast.

The plan was accidental,
The start foretold the close;
The tone was sentimental,
The scenes lacked Greek repose.

In nature all was lacking,
And lacking too in art;
A little wholesome hacking
Would better every part.

The motives should be fewer,
The aim more pure and high;
And any good reviewer
Could make a finer sky.

Or, if he praised, 'twas only
The dimmest of the host;
The grand orbs shining lonely
Were those he flouted most.

And ever since his mission,
Has been to blame and sneer,
Consigning to perdition
The lights God holdeth dear;

The first, the greatest critic,
The model of his kind,
The goblin analytic
Who hates creative mind.

THE OLD-TIME SPIRITS.

During the winter of 1691-2 a circle of young girls was formed in Salem Farms, which met at the house of the Rev. Mr. Parris, for the practice of palmistry, and fortune-telling, necromancy, magic, and spiritualism. In this circle there were (1) Elizabeth Paris, the minister's daughter, aged nine years, who first had a leading part in the subsequent excitements, but was early removed from them by her father; (2) Abigail Williams, Parris' niece, living in his house, aged eleven; (3) Ann Putnam, aged twelve, daughter of the parish clerk and recorder, a prominent man at the Farms; (4) Mary Walcott, seventeen, daughter of Jonathan Walcott, Mr. Parris' next-door neighbor; (5) Mercy Lewis, seventeen; (6) Elizabeth Hubbard, seventeen, niece of Dr. Griggs, the village physician, and resident in his family; (7—8) Elizabeth Booth, Susannah Sheldon, each eighteen, belonging to families living near at hand; (9) Mary Warren, aged twenty, a servant in the family of John Proctor, who was brought to the scaffold by the girls; and (10) Sarah Churchill, a servant in the family of George Jacobs, Sr. Her employer also became their victim. With these ten, other persons were drawn to act. There were John Indian and Tituba, two slaves of Mr. Parris', who probably were brought to the colony from the Barbadoes, and besides these, one or two others; but the girls, with the slaves, formed the circle, and were the leading characters in the events which have been a horror and mystery ever since they transpired. In those events these girls were bold and even vicious in their bearing, and evinced an utter absence of compunction or commisseration; except in one or two instances, displaying a complete disregard of the agony and destruction which they brought upon others.

In the course of the winter they became expert in the arts they were learning. Gradually they came to exhibit their attainments to beholders. At first these exhibitions consisted in creeping into holes, and under benches and chairs; putting themselves into odd and unnatural postures, making wild gestures, and uttering incoherent and unintelligible sounds. Then they were seized with spasms, dropped insensible to the floor, or writhed in agony, pretending to suffer tortures, with loud and piercing outcries. Naturally they began to draw upon themselves general attention. Soon they came to be styled "the afflicted children." In the early stages no explanation of their condition was so much as suggested by any one; but as soon as Dr. Griggs was called in, and had examined them, he declared them bewitched. In those days, and prior to those days, physicians frequently disposed of difficult cases which came before them by such a resort. The profession must bear its fair share of responsibility for succeeding occurrences.

At once people were excited and alarmed. They flocked to the minister's house from all quarters. The girls varied and expanded their manifestations, beginning to disturb prayer-meetings and services on the Lord's day. At this some persons expressed disapprobation, and, though no accusations had as yet been made by the children, these persons, as the sequel shows, were immediately marked. Families to which the girls belonged began to fast and to pray. Neighbors came in with the minister, and supplicated God to deliver them from Satan. In the intervals of service the afflicted would break out with their cries, though not during the prayer.

In due time the Rev. Mr. Parris had the ministers of the region together at his house. They spent the day with each other—the children performing before them—and were all astounded. Forthwith they corroborated Dr. Grigg's opinion as to the ailment of the "afflicted," saying that the devil had commenced operations on a grander scale and with bolder front than ever before in any country. This judgment of theirs was spread abroad, and public opinion becoming fixed, men and women left fields, houses, and labors, to witness this awful unfolding of demoniac power.

As it was an established doctrine of theology, philosophy, and law, that the devil could not operate upon mortals or mortal affairs, except through human beings in connection with him—i. e., through witches—the question speedily arose, Who bewitched these girls? The girls held back from mentioning names. Public excitement deepened. But the inquiry, "Who is it that bewitches you?" was urgently pressed upon them, and without much delay they began to indicate individuals. One after another they cried out: "Good!" "Osburn!" "Tituba!" On February 29, therefore, Edward Putnam, Thomas Preston, and Thomas Putnam, all leading men, swore out warrants against these three persons. Thomas Preston was a son-in-law of Francis Nurse, whose wife, Rebecca Nurse, will be a marked figure before us.

Such a step as this was not taken, assuredly, until all was ripe for going forward; and accordingly, on the next day (March 1), John Hathorne and Jonathan Corwin, Justices of the Peace from Salem Town, entered the Farms, and reined up at Nathaniel Ingersoll's door. But so great a crowd was found to be in attendance, that adjournment was had to the meeting-house. The magistrates took seats in front of the pulpit, faced the assembly, and announced that they were ready. The prisoners were brought in and put upon a platform, in sight of all present. The officers in charge of them said they had made diligent search for images or puppets, belonging to the accused, but had found none. Prayer was offered, and Sarah Good was examined.

This woman was an object of general dislike. Her husband, a weak, dependent person, had become alienated from her. She was forlorn, friendless—broken down by her sad condition and bad repute. The minutes of her examination are in the handwriting of Ezekiel Cheever, the village schoolmaster, as follows:

"Sarah Good, what evil spirit have you familiarity with?"

"None."

"Have you made no contract with the devil?"

"No."

"Why do you hurt these children?"

"I do not hurt them; I scorn it."

"Who do you employ then to do it?"

"I employ nobody."

"What creature do you employ, then?"

"No creature; but I am falsely accused."

"Why did you go away muttering from Mr. Parris' house?"

"I did not mutter, but I thanked him for what he gave my child."

"Have you made no contract with the devil?"

"No."

Hathorne, the magistrate, desired the children, all of them, to look upon her, and see if this were the person that hurt them; and so they all did look upon her, and said this was one of the persons that did torment them. Presently they were all tormented.

"Sarah Good, do you not see what you have done? Why do you not tell us the truth? Why do you thus torment these poor children?"

"I do not torment them."

"Who do you employ then?"

"I employ nobody; I scorn it."

"How came they thus tormented?"

"What do I know? You bring others here, and now you charge me with it."

"Why, who was it?"

"I do not know, but it was some one you brought into the meeting-house with you."

"We brought you into the meeting-house."

"But you brought in two more."

"Who was it then that tormented the children?"

"It was Osburn."

"What is it you say when you go muttering away from people's houses?"

"If I must tell, I will tell."

"Do tell us."

"Then if I must tell, I will tell; it is the commandments. I may say my commandments, I hope."

"What commandment is it?"

"If I must tell you, I will tell—it is a psalm?"

"What psalm?" (After a long time she muttered over some part of a psalm.)

"Whom do you serve?"

"The God that made heaven and earth" (though she was not willing to mention the word God). Her answers were in a very wicked, spiteful manner, reflecting and retorting against the authority, with base and abusive words, with many lies she was taken in. It was alleged that her husband had said that he was afraid she either was a witch, or would be one very quickly. The worshipful Mr. Hathorne asked him why he said so of her—whether he had ever seen anything by her. He answered: "No, not in this nature;" but it was her bad carriage to him, "and indeed," saith he, "I may say with tears, that she is an enemy to all good."

This examination, closed here, speaks for itself as to its candor and justice. But upon the whole, it may be said with truth, that the appearance of "the worshipful Mr. Hathorne" in this passage, and his demeanor toward the poor person before him, was in no wise essentially different from his exhibition of himself, in all the preliminary examinations. His assumption of the prisoner's guilt, his leading questions, his brutal dealing with numbers of the accused, made the investigations a farce. The accused persons, in all the trials, never had any counsel, never had any method of presenting their side of a story in open court so far as can be determined. And almost all we know concerning those who were arraigned is from adverse sources.

The prisoner (Good) was removed to make room for Sarah Osburn. This was a bedridden woman, with two sons. Her second marriage, to Osburn, had been unhappy, and trouble had distracted her mind. She had once held a reputable position socially, but having become the subject of scandal, was a good object for the "afflicted" to pitch upon.

Her examination is preserved in full, but cannot be given. She denied, as Good had done, all contract with the Devil, and that she hurt the children, or employed any one to hurt them, declared that she had not seen Sarah Good for two years; and in reply to that woman's accusation, said, "I do not know that the Devil goes about in my likeness to do any hurt."

The children stood up and looked at her, and said this was one that did afflict them; they had constantly seen her with the very habit she then had on. Her husband and others stated that she had not been at a meeting for three years and two months. No strange matter, as a charitable mind will think, for a bedridden person.

Goody Osburn being taken out, the Indian slave Tituba was brought forward. At first she too denied all familiarity with evil spirits, or that she hurt the children. She said, indeed, that the Devil came to her, and bid her serve him, and that she had seen four women sometimes hurt the children. Two of them she named, Goody Osburn and Sarah Good. These two, she declared, wished her to hurt the children, but she had refused. She had seen, also, a tall man from Boston. All three had told her to hurt the children, but she would not.

A deposition made by the Rev. Mr. Parris is preserved—that during all these days Elizabeth Parris, Jr., Ann Putnam, and Elizabeth Hubbard were tormented, and that when Tituba confessed they were all relieved. He says that Tituba herself, when she began to confess, was very much afflicted. She accused Good and Osburn of doing this to her. Of these three prisoners, Mrs. Osburn died in jail, May 16. Tituba lay in prison for thirteen months, and was then sold to pay her jail fees, and Sarah Good was hanged.

At the close of these examinations, ninety-nine out of every hundred persons in the community had been swept into the torrent of delusion and alarm. The physicians had given in their opinion. The ministers had approved it. The Rev. Mr. Parris was making it the topic of prayer and preaching Sunday by Sunday. The girls were suffering more and more keenly, and the conviction that the authors of the mischief must be found out and put away became very strong. Thus the time drew near for accusations of more reputable persons. Solicitude to know who were the two other women making up the four grew to be intense. When everything was ready, the girls began to give out significant descriptions, and then to call names. The third victim selected was Martha Corey, third wife of Giles Corey, a man eighty years of age. Mrs. Corey was a member of the church, who had not favored these proceedings, going so far, indeed, as to express a lack of faith in the children. In this season of excitement, she had, however, renewed her prayers, spending hours in devotion. Her husband being carried away with the delusions, she even tried to keep him back from the gatherings at the village. All this was doubtless known there; certainly it had been given out that soon some persons in great regard for their piety would be unmasked, and Mrs. Corey's name was mentioned, in underbreath, by "the afflicted."

Accordingly, March 12, Edward Putnam and Ezekiel Cheever, hearing Ann Putnam declare that Goody Corey did often pinch her, at once thought it their duty to go and see her, "she being in covenant with us." Before they started, about the middle of the afternoon, they saw Ann Putnam, and asked her what clothes Goody Corey wore, for she might be mistaken in the person. Ann cunningly replied that Goody Corey knew of their purpose to visit her, and had come and blinded her so that she could not tell what she wore. The two brethren found Mrs. Corey at home, and alone. She told them, smiling, and before they announced it, that she knew their errand. "You are come to talk with me about being a witch, but I am none. I cannot help persons talking of me." She said she did not think there were any witches, and after some further conversation, they got nothing to criminate, her and departed. All the record of this interview exhibits her as a sensible woman.

Two days subsequently (March 14), they sent for her to come to Thomas Putnam's house. Immediately upon her entrance, his daughter Ann fell into convulsions, of which she said Goody Corey was the author. This was enough, and March 19 a warrant was issued for her arrest. Brought to Ingersoll's house, on the 21st, she was then examined, and the record of examination is by the Rev. Mr. Parris.

This venerable grandmother having been led away, they brought in the same day for examination Dorcas, a daughter of Sarah Good, a child four or five years old. Warrant had been procured against her the day before (March 23), on complaint of the two Putnams. The afflicted went mad, showed the mark of her teeth on their bodies, and the pins with which she pricked them were also found upon them. This evidence was overwhelming, and the poor babe went to jail to her mother, who was then in chains. So the imprisoned were usually kept, for it was said that unless loaded with chains their apparitions could torture the afflicted, even while their bodies were in jail. Doubtless the child was similarly bound.

By this time the devil had actually secured good lodgment in Salem Village.

On Sunday Rev. Mr. Parris followed his coadjutator, preaching, for a communion sermon, from John v. 70-71: "Have I not chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil? He spoke of Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon, for he it was that should betray him, being one of the twelve." Mrs. Sarah Cloyse, a sister of Rebecca Nurse, who had so far constrained her feelings as to be present at the meeting, could not endure the sermon, and left the house during its delivery. An easy wind caused the door to slam behind her as she went out. Mrs. Cloyse was attended to in due time. When the sermon was finished, Rev. Mr. Parris read to the congregation an humble confession and regret, from one of the church members, a sister in Christ, of having tampered with some of the afflicted in a way that was unlawful, and without his (the minister's) consenting, or that of the authority. The women had only given to John Indian some directions as to how he should find out witches, but the policy to be enforced was that of non-intercourse with the afflicted, save by proper persons.

The prisons in Salem, Ipswich, Boston, and Cambridge were now crowded. The only sure way to prevent an accusation was to become an accuser. Accusers therefore sprang up everywhere. Every man's life was at the mercy of every other man. Fear fell upon all. Conviction became assured that the Providence of God was removed from over men, and Satan wholly let loose upon them. It is out of our power, at this day, to conceive what was endured on all hands.

Rebecca Nurse's trial opens to view additional ignominious proceedings. The repute of this lady for piety and all domestic and social excellence was such that many who had been bitter against others faltered as to her. Large numbers of people came forward to defend her. Even Nathaniel Putnam, an aged and dignified church member, hitherto led on by Rev. Mr. Parris, could not see her sacrificed without trying to prevent it, and with thirty-nine others, signed a paper attesting her many virtues, and his disbelief of the charge against her. These were people of the very highest standing in the community. It is claimed, indeed, that they were such as to show that had the matter of the trials now been left to the Salem Villagers, the prosecutions would not have gone to the point afterward reached. Certainly, the document thus signed—it is preserved—is a triumphant vindication of the prisoner. One of the very complainants who swore out the warrant against her affixed his name to it, but to no purpose.

Before the court sat, her body had been examined by a committee, who claimed to find upon it the witch mark. Two days before she came to court, she petitioned her Judges, that as all this committee did not agree, she might be again examined by other matrons, but it cannot be found that any notice was taken of her prayer. She had been afflicted with bodily ailments for years.

The children appeared against her. So did Mrs. Ann Putnam. Ann Putnam, the daughter, said the spirits had told her that Mrs. Nurse had murdered fourteen persons— men, women, and children. Rebecca Nurse had sat upon her mother—for she had seen it. A woman testified to the petulance of Mrs. Nurse when her pigs got into Mrs. Nurse's garden, and that afterward her husband fell ill and died.

In spite of all, however, the jury brought in a verdict of "not guilty." At once the accusers made a hideous outcry. One of the Judges said he was not satisfied; another, as he was going off the bench, said he would have her indicted anew. The Chief Justice interposed—the jury went back, and came in again with the desired return of "guilty." She was then sentenced; but the Governor granted her a reprieve. Her accusers immediately renewed their hubbub—and some Salem gentleman had the reprieve recalled, so that she could be executed on the appointed day.

Who can contemplate that aged, broken woman, brought for this excommunication, by officers of the law, into the crowded congregation, probably in chains, her trembling frame unable to sustain itself, upheld by others, while she was publicly delivered over by the zealot in the pulpit, to that Satan into whose hand he charged this saint of God with having already given her soul—without a pang of sorrow for her, and of execration for him? The poor woman survived it, however, and perished on the gallows, with others before named. It is thought that her body was thrown into a hole in the crevices of rock and thinly sprinkled with earth. Family story says that her sons regained it, and that her ashes are now resting with those of her husband, who lived but a short time longer, and of her children, in the little enclosure which may be visited to-day, in South Danvers. If it be true, these sons must have come, heavy-hearted and by stealth, at midnight, and borne it home, to gather about and weep over and then bury the remains, when they could seize upon some favorable moment for their pious offices of affection.—Galaxy.

The Black Veil Withdrawn.

A leading criminal sensation of the year 1854, was the trial and sentence of a woman known as Henrietta Robinson, the veiled murderess. She poisoned a saloon-keeper in Troy, New York, by drugging his beer, and attempted to murder a female relative of his by the same means. No motive for the deed was ever shown, but the proof was clear. She was sentenced to be hung but the sentence was commuted to imprisonment for life, and Henrietta Robinson was veiled from the world in Sing Sing.

After the commission of the crime the woman enveloped her features in a deep black veil, and her face was never seen again. During the trial in court she refused to lift the veil or permit it to be lifted. Even her counsel never saw her face; neither did they know who she was, nor could they trace her by any relatives. She seemed to have no relations with the world or in the world. All that was known of her was "Henrietta Robinson, the veiled murderess." This idiosyncracy gave her wide renown, and there were many speculations as to her birth and name, and the motive—all of which were as closely veiled as her face.

There she sat, behind a black cloud and heard the mutterings of guilt and the thunder of the court which pronounced the dread sentence of death. No one could mark her emotion. She was imperturbable as the Sphinx. The edges of the cloud did not quiver, and no ray of light shone through. The court gazers were puzzled, and the "veiled murderess" was a nine days' wonder.

She wore her veil into Sing Sing, where she remained until recently, when she was sent to Auburn. A still deeper veil had clouded her. Twenty years of prison life has made her a maniac.

The Legislature of New York lately passed a bill to open the prison doors to certain convicts condemned for life. The bill provides that those sentenced for life shall be released at the end of fifteen years, provided their conduct has been such as to warrant clemency—that they are to have their liberty for ten years, at the end of which time, if no other charge is brought against them, they are to receive full pardon. If convicted of crime during the ten years' probation they are to be remanded to prison to serve out the life-sentence. This humane law will open the doors to many patient convicts, and Henrietta Robinson—the veiled murderess—is in the category. It comes too late for her. She will probably never remove her veil now. She has not been regularly committed to an insane asylum, and is entitled to go free. But where will she go, and what will she do? She was said to be very beautiful once, but twenty years' anguish must have made sad gloom of the light of that countenance behind the black veil. What a change will be there when the sun shines again upon the veiled murderess' face! It will be an object of curious interest if she ever shows it in Troy.—St. Louis Republican.

The Grasshoppers.

The grasshopper campaign of this season is the subject of a great deal of animated conjecture on the Missouri border counties. The "hoppers" in their last year's journey, after desolating parts of Kansas, reached the border counties of this State, but died before committing any serious depredations. They did not die, however, without making provision for the perpetuation of their race; and the warm days of the present spring reveal myriads of their offspring emerging from the bark of trees, clods and fence-rails, apparently awaiting the proper time for beginning operations. In Jackson county they are already at work; blue grass, timothy and clover are being attacked by them, but large meadows, it is said, escape their depredations. They have done no great damage in that county yet, and it is hoped they will perish before growing large enough to inflict serious injury on the young crops. In some localities they disappear, after exhibiting themselves for a time, and it is augured they die. Some farmers are doing what they can to help them off; one drives them into furrows plowed for the purpose, and then covers them up with another furrow; another drives them into heaps and burns them with straw faggots; and another rolls them to death in his fields with a common roller. They have appeared in Cass county in strong force, but as yet have done no great amount of damage. It is the question of what they will do that causes anxiety among the farmers. The general opinion is that they are so weakened by their long flight from the mountain here that they will perish before the summer.—St. Louis Republican.

A Homicide With a Horse-Shoe.

John Blake, a coachman employed by Mr. Stout, at No. 57 West Fifty-third street, was killed yesterday afternoon by Thomas Boylan, with a horse-shoe. During the forenoon Blake took a horse to Edward O'Gorman's horse-shoeing shop, where Boylan was employed, and told him to reset the two fore shoes and to put on two new hind shoes, and by all means to have the horse ready by 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Blake returned at 3 o'clock, but found the horse was not ready, and that Boylan, instead of obeying instructions, had put two new shoes on the fore feet of the horse, while the hind feet were still unshod. Some hard words followed, and Boylan seized the hot horse-shoe, which he was then setting on the horse, and threw it at Blake. The missile struck Blake behind the left ear and caused almost instant death. Boylan, for a few minutes was stunned at the result of his hasty act, but when an alarm was raised he ran out of the shop. He was pursued by Officers Gallagher and Fisher, of the Twentieth Precinct Police, who were gaining upon him rapidly, when he took refuge in "Dan" Mace's shop, at Seventh avenue and Thirty-ninth street. The men there kept the door closed against the police until Boylan had obtained time enough to escape.—New York Tribune.

A Bungling Job.

The board of experts who have been making the investigation of the new Chicago Custom-House and Postoffice building have concluded their labors, and departed for Washington to make their report to Mr. Potter, the supervising architect of the Treasury Department. The Chicago papers state that the committee will report that this is the worst piece of building they ever knew. They will also report that no building of so great weight can be built in soil of the character shown by the investigation on any ordinary foundations. It will be necessary to drive piles under the foundation to a depth of from fifty to sixty feet, and to do this the entire building must be removed. The vast amount of money already spent on this building is therefore worse than wasted, as it will cost a large sum of money to simply take down the walls, to say nothing of the expense of piling for the new foundations. The cost of this terrible blunder is variously estimated, but cannot be less than $1,000,000, and may reach as high as $2,000,000.

BETTY AND THE BEAR.

In a pioneer's cabin out West so they say,
A great big black grizzly trotted one day,
And seated himself on the hearth and began
To lap the contents of a two-gallon pan
Of milk and potatoes—an excellent meal—
And then looked about to see what he could steal.

The lord of the mansion awoke from his sleep,
And hearing a racket, he ventured to peep
Just out in the kitchen, to see what was there,
And was scared to behold a great grizzly bear.
So he screamed in alarm to his slumbering frow,
"Thar's a bar in the kitching as big's a cow!"
"A what?" "Why, a bar!" "Well, murder him, then!"
"Yes, Betty, I will, if you'll first venture in."
So Betty leaped up, and the poker she seized,
While her man shut the door, and against it he squeezed.

As Betty then laid on the grizzly her blows—
Now on his forehead, and now on his nose—
Her man through the keyhole kept shouting within,
"Well done, my brave Betty, now hit him agin,
Now a rap on the ribs, now a knock on the snout,
Now poke with the poker and poke his eyes out."
So, with rapping and poking, poor Betty, alone,
At last laid Sir Bruin as dead as a stone.

Now when the old man saw the bear was no more,
He ventured to poke his nose out of the door,
And there was the grizzly, stretched on the floor.
Then off to the neighbors he hastened, to tell
All the wonderful things that that morning befell;
And he published the marvelous story afar,
How "me and my Betty jist slaughtered a bar!
O yes, come and see, all the neighbors hav said it,
Come and see what we did, me and Betty, we did it."

Strawberries have appeared at the refreshment saloons, and for a while young men with light purses will be cautious how they invite the girls out.

A bashful young clergyman, recently rising to preach for the first time, made a terrible mix of it, and announced his text in this wise: "And immediately the cock wept, and Peter went out and crew bitterly."

A butcher sold a sailor a ham on credit, but, finding in a few days that he had gone to sea, he growled: "If I'd 'a known that he wasn't going to pay for it, I'd a charged him three-pence more a pound for it, the rascal!"

An editor, who is evidently a man of family, sagely remarks that a boy who will yell like a Tartar if a drop of water gets on his shirt-band when his neck is being washed, will crawl through a sewer after a ball and think nothing of it.

"You wring my bosom," said a despairing Baltimore lover to a coquettish girl whom he had long sought in marriage. His burst of grief decided her, and, putting out her hand, she softly murmured, "Well! ring my finger, if you will be the happier for it; I will vex you no longer."

A tall stranger entered a saloon on Front street yesterday, and, pulling off his coat, inquired: "Is there anybody here who wants to lick me?" "Yes! yes!" exclaimed half-a-dozen loafers in chorus, as they rose up. "I thought there was!" coolly replied the stranger, as he opened the door and walked out.

A French naturalist ascertained by careful investigation that a single insect might, in five generations, become the progenitor of five thousand millions of descendants. With these appalling figures before us we are forced to the conclusion that were the birds destroyed a desolation would result, compared with which the grasshopper plague of the West would sink into insignificance.

"Oh gracious, no!" exclaimed Mrs. Marrowfat to Mrs. Quoggs, raising her hands and speaking in a very excited tone. "She was so ill when her new bonnet came home that she couldn't get up; but, dear sakes! Jane, that didn't matter nothing, for she just put her hat on, and lay with her head out of the window the whole afternoon."

In Boston the other day a vain young fellow, dressed in a new spring suit, called at the house of a lady acquaintance and asked her how she thought he looked. You remind me of early green peas, was the answer. He was obliged to depart without a solution of this conundrum, but understood it afterward when he heard a marketman say that early peas looked nice, but were very insipid.

Two rather intrusive acquaintances of M. G—— determined to take him by surprise by going uninvited to spend a week with him. They had just arrived, and, in talking of the journey, one of them remarked to the host that they had passed through some beautiful cornfields on their way. "You will see some finer ones on your way back to-morrow," replied the host.

Telegraphic Paralysis.

Telegraph clerks will hear with alarm of telegraphic paralysis, a new malady reported by a French physician to the Academie des Sciences. An employe, who had been engaged in a telegraph office for nine years, found that he could not form clearly the letters U, represented by two dots and a stroke; I, by two dots, and S, by three dots. On trying to trace the letters his hand became stiff and cramped. He then endeavored to use his thumb alone, and this succeeded for two years, when his thumb was similarly attacked, and he subsequently tried the first and second fingers, but in two months these were also paralyzed. Finally he had recourse to the wrist, which also shortly became disabled. If he forced himself to use his hand, both hand and arm shook violently, and cerebral excitement ensued. It appears that this disorder is very common among telegraph clerks.

The latest anecdote brought to light by the Centennial celebration is rather amusing. While the British troops were marching through old Cambridge one of them said jestingly to a farmer sowing seed: "You may sow, but we shall reap." "Well, perhaps you may," was the reply, "for I am sowing hemp."

Humor of the Day.

A QUERY.

A blunt old lady of fifty attended an auction sale at a private house on Montcalm street yesterday, and when a bedstead was put up she created a feeling of awe in the entire crowd by turning to the lady of the house and asking: "Did this bedstead ever have any bugs in it?"

A SON OF LIBERTY.

Saturday forenoon a seedy-looking old chap mounted a box on the Campus Martius and said to the crowd:

"Who does not thrill at the remembrance of Concord and Lexington! Whose heart does not beat faster at the thought of American liberties struggling in the grasp of the tyrant! What man —what man in this crowd will lend me money enough to get a glass of beer!"

NOT APPRECIATED.

A Porter street boy came across something the other day which he thought would give his father a shock of surprise, and he stood before the old man and remarked:

"Give me a place to rest my lever and I will move the whole world."

The father looked at him half a minute and then replied:

"I'll move you if you don't clean off that back yard this afternoon!"

A NEW TRICK.

"Big Jack," the newsboy, looked into a Michigan avenue saloon, where a dozen men were playing cards, and standing in the door he called out:

"There's a woman here who wants to see a feller named——"

"That's my wife!" muttered seven different individuals in chorus, and they tumbled out of the back door into the alley as if carried in the arms of a tornado.

NONE FOR HIM.

"Ish dere some ledder here for me?" inquired a German at the general delivery window of the Postoffice Saturday.

"No—none here," was the reply.

"Vhell, dot is queer," he continued, getting his head into the window; "my neighbor gets somedimes dree ledders in one day, und I get none. I bays more daxes as he does, under I haf never got one ledder yet. How comes dose dings?"

OLD TIMES.

While some men on a street car were reviving old recollections one of them inquired:

"Does any one remember the date of the cholera season?"

"I can find out in half an hour," replied a man who had hitherto preserved silence. "I've got a note of $60 signed by your father in that very year, and that'll give the exact day and date!"

There wasn't any further talk about olden days.

IT WILL DO IT.

They were married last fall, and they hadn't had one cross word or a sour look, when, the other night, he moved the cook stove into the shanty and called her to hold the pipe up while he gently knocked the joints together. She smiled sweetly as she replied: "Yes, my dear," but five minutes hadn't passed before he yelled out:

"Durn it! I thought you knew something!"

And she threw two joints of pipe at him and replied:

"I want you to understand that we are as strangers from this hour!"

HE KNOWS HOW.

When a Ninth avenue boy pitches into a Labrosse street boy and gets a bloody nose, he goes home fully prepared for what he knows will follow.

"Fighting again, eh?" inquires the Detroit father. "Well, I'll see you in the woodshed after dinner?"

"Father," replies the boy, tears in his eyes, "it was that Johnson boy. He came along and called me the son of a cross-eyed sheep thief, and, father, I couldn't stand by and hear you spoken of in that manner!"

The father feels in his vest pocket for a nickel, and nothing further is said about the woodshed business.

Chicago to the Sea.

Last week we called attention to the fact that the sceptre of political power was surely passing westward. We showed that the control of the United States Senate has already gone far beyond the Alleghenies, and at the present rate of settlement will, in the life-time of those now living, cross the Mississippi.

To-day we present a piece of significant railway news demonstrating that the commercial domination of the country will accompany the political supremacy on its westward march, if it does not precede it.

The Illinois Central railway, for this spring and summer, advertises through tickets to Havana and return for $90, and also from Chicago to the City of Mexico and return for $164. In both cases the route is via New Orleans. This is the first step toward making New Orleans the seaport of the Mississippi Valley and the great North and West, and Chicago their great commercial center or metropolis. It is the first stroke towards cutting off the Atlantic slope and reducing it to a mere provincial section of our great continental empire.

The revolution which this bold movement portends any tyro in the grand strategy of trade and travel can comprehend at a glance. Already the coastwise trade of Philadelphia and New York is gone, or at least we carry no longer for the whole country, but only for that little strip of it this side of the Alleghenies.

The whole Mississippi Valley—that enormous stretch of territory drained by the Mississippi and Missouri, with their great branches—its trade and travel, its surplus grain and cotton, now will find its way to the sea and the outer world by its water-courses.

This ambitious stroke of the Illinois railway demonstrates the fact that the West is awake to the wonderful possibilities of its commercial future, and when we know the resistless energy and daring achievement with which that section pushes forward every work and enterprise we may feel sure that that future is near.

Perhaps in the new light of this idea, too, the main body of the continent finding an outlet to the world by a port directly to the South, some of the skeptical railroad kings may begin to understand the full meaning and idea of the North and South railway system, and see its relation to the ultimate development of the country.—Philadelphia Press.

TERRIBLE TRAGEDY.

A Lunatic Decapitates his Mother with a Shoe-Knife, and Dangerously Wounds his Father and Two Brothers.

[Boston Cor. Chicago Tribune.]

One of the most singular tragedies ever known in the State of Massachusetts occurred at an early hour this morning in Byfield, a little parish in the Town of Newbury, Essex county. The family thus afflicted consists of the older Russel, the father, aged 68; the mother, aged 61; the murderer, William H. Russell, aged 37; Lawson Russel, a brother, aged 35, and Clinton Russel, 19 years old. In the same house lived two children of William Russell, whose wife died about three years ago. For some years past the murderer has exhibited symptoms of insanity that made him a victim to morbid mistrust, and he has repeatedly charged that his family was endeavoring to poison him. Clinton Russell, at the time of the deed, was suffering with neuralgia, and Lawson and the elder brother with erysipelas. On Wednesday night William came home from Newburyport about 6 o'clock, perfectly sober, and retired about 10 o'clock, and, when Lawson went to bed, an hour later, he was apparently sound asleep. The next fact elicited by testimony comes from the father and Lawson, who were called to the kitchen a little before half-past 2 o'clock, this morning. There they found Clinton and Will engaged in a desperate struggle. William actively using a short shoe-knife. All then joined in, separating Clinton from the murderous grasp of his brother, and, during the renewed struggle, William wounded all stabbing his mother so severely that she died almost instantly. William was secured and tied, the knife having been taken away from him, and, later, was taken to the shop until the arrival of the constable, when he was conveyed to Newburyport and lodged in jail. The father was stabbed in the arm and had several cuts on his face. He will undoubtedly recover. Lawson was badly gashed on the neck, and cut about the arms. His chances for life or death are about equal. The youngest son, Clinton, a very promising man, and a member of the Newburyport High-school, was stabbed sixteen times on the neck, and, after giving the alarm to the neighbors, which he did, he fainted from loss of blood, and was taken to the house of Mr. Joseph H. Kent, where he now lies in a very weak and critical condition, too weak to tell his story. Mrs. Russel's head was almost entirely severed from her body, and severe stabs were inflicted in the lower portion of her neck, one just grazing the heart. The murderer appears sullen and dejected. The prisoner denied all knowledge of complicity in the affair. He stated that he knew nothing of it until incarcerated in jail, and that his parents or brothers had been trying to poison him. He had told his mother this, and added "that it was a poor rule that would not work both ways." He admitted going to the shop for a shoe-knife, but he only wanted to cut tobacco with it. He did not accuse any particular member of the family of desiring to poison him, but some of them. He felt sick in the middle of the night, and went down stairs to get some water. After that all was a dream. When told that he had killed his mother, he said that he did not know, and when asked if he would like to see her, he replied he should very much. On all committal points his memory was vacant.

IT is noteworthy that ex-Senator Schurz and family sailed on the Hamburg steamer Pomerania, which departed April 29th, one day after the Schiller, and is reported to have arrived safely on the 9th. But for the dinner and serenade given him in New York, he might have chosen the earlier vessel, and been lost.

COME, AND LET US REASON TOGETHER. —To the afflicted in body we offer a few words of plain, practical reasoning. No matter under what form of sickness you labor there is one great truth you should ever keep in mind, viz: All disease originates in an impure condition of the blood. Purify that, and the disease must depart, for it has nothing to feed on; but you cannot purify the blood by the use of poisonous drugs and exhaustive stimulants; the relief which these afford is temporary and deceptive, leaving you worse off at every interval. The best Blood Purifier ever discovered is DR. WALKER'S FAMOUS VINEGAR BITTERS, compounded of simple herbs. No matter how hopeless your case may seem, try the VINEGAR BITTERS, and a few draughts will convince you of their virtue. Dr. Walker, the discoverer of this priceless remedy, had been given up to die by the physicians, and is now a sound and healthy man from their use. 36
